LABOR MOURNS LOYAL FRIEND

Cause of Workers Loses Able Advocate in Passing of "Uncle Jake" Smith.

"UNCLE JAKE"

Organized labor lost a loyal friend and an able advocate in the passing, last Saturday, of Jake Smith, affectionately known to hundreds of trades unionists as "Uncle Jake."

Mr. Smith passed away at his home, 1712 Read avenue, following an illness of only a few days. He was 77 years old, and had been an employe of the Southern railroad for fifty-five years continuously.

A native of Germany, "Uncle Jake" came to Chattanooga in 1882, after having been in the employ of the Southern railroad as section hand when that road was built from Somerset to Rockwood. He was, in turn, engine wiper, machinist, fireman, engineer and shop foreman.

In 1888 he organized the first lodge of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, and served as president and secretary of that organization for many years following. In 1908 he joined the Machinists' union, and although he consistently refused to serve as an official of that lodge, he was always active, and served as a delegate to Chattanooga Trades and Labor council for four consecutive years. He was faithful to his organization, and only a few weeks ago was an interested and interesting visitor to an open meeting of Central Body, where he was introduced and made a few remarks.

Mr. Smith is survived by his widow, a son and two daughters. Funeral services were held Monday morning at 9 o'clock at SS. Peter and Paul's Catholic church, the Rt. Rev. Monsignor Sullivan officiating. Honorary pallbearers, nearly all of whom were fellow shopworkers, were: W. B. Bunn, W. A. Patterson, G. C. Parker, C. R. Canfield, John McGraw, J. E. Kiser, James Anderson, James Lawrence, Andy Moore, J. C. Rogers, Z. A. McCreary, Tom Hall, A. C. Jeffries, H. F. Lawrence, J. B. Niles, Pete Gorman, J. J. Warren, C. A. Hooker, H. J. Miller, Joe Royer, W. M. Carlyle, James D. Weller, W. C. Shelton. The active pallbearers, also from the Southern shops, were: S. K. Jackson, Pat J. Crowe, William Akers, M. T. DeLong, A. W. McKenney, Ed J. Crowe and J. C. Pfeifer. Interment was in Mount Olivet cemetery.

An indication of the esteem in which the deceased veteran was held by local trades unionists is seen in the following resolution prepared by a committee named at Monday night's regular meeting of Central Body by President Perry:

Whereas, Almighty God, in His infinite wisdom, has seen fit to remove from our midst Brother Jake Smith, veteran member of Lodge 1450, International Association of Machinists, and a delegate to this body for several years in the days when he was younger and more active physically; and,

Whereas, Brother Smith was a pioneer in the trades union movement, having organized the first local lodge of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, and served that body, as well as, later, the Machinists, with honor and credit, giving freely of that spirit upon which the foundation of our movement rests and bringing to our cause a large portion of those

AMERICAN LABOR HAS PLAYED AND IS PLAYING ITS FULL PART IN MAINTAINING OUR INSTITUTIONS

By SPENCER MILLER, JR.
Secretary Workers' Education Bureau, American Federation of Labor

(Note: Mr. Miller, appealed to for a contribution to the Spring Supplement to this issue, received the request after considerable delay, but very obligingly wired the following brief but effective review of Labor's part in the maintenance of our American institutions. The workers' education secretary has said much in a few words, and his statement constitutes a powerful argument against the forces which would belittle the accomplishments of our movement.—Editor.)

The American labor movement is an indivisible part of the American republic. From the first Continental Congress, which was held in a labor building—Carpenters Hall, Philadelphia—to the present crisis in the nation's history, labor has played its full part. American labor realized that government by the people necessitated education of the people and championed establishment public school system. Labor stood shoulder to shoulder for expansion of the public domain, opposed negro slavery, fought valiantly for improvement of status of women and children in industry, championed woman suffrage, wholeheartedly rallied to President Wilson's call to arms, worked for a just peace and has stood against subversive elements from within. Labor loyally supports the American republic because it is a part of it.

BOUQUETS FOR OUR LOCAL BOYS

Gerlach and Cuthbert Complimented by Labor Press for Outstanding Work.

Matt Gerlach, who retired as secretary-treasurer of Chattanooga Trades and Labor council recently after seventeen years' continuous service in that capacity, and his successor, T. R. Cuthbert, each was on the receiving end this week of a newspaper bouquet from other cities in the form of articles paying tribute to the work of these local trades unionists.

Hon. Albert E. Hill, in his Nashville Labor Advocate, picks Mr. Cuthbert for an editorial subject, while Hon. Jake Cohen, in the Memphis Labor Review, takes his pen in hand to pay a tribute to the veteran Gerlach.

The two articles make interesting reading, and are reprinted below:

CUTHBERT 'NOOGA DELEGATE.

(Nashville Labor Advocate)

Just to prove that Chattanooga expects to be heard from at the sessions of the Tennessee Federation of Labor, to be held in this city on Monday, May 2, comes the information that the Chattanooga Trades and Labor Council at its last meeting elected Remy Cuthbert to look after its interests at that time.

Remy is a Nashvillian. He belongs to our city. In fact, we have only loaned him to Chattanooga for the time being, in order that he can show the "Dixie Dynamos" how to really accomplish things on a big scale. So when he returns home for a few days in May, you can bet your last dollar that when he says something that all will listen to him. It was a good piece of headwork on the part of Chattanooga in selecting Remy to represent the council at the convention.

Chattanooga further honored Mr. Cuthbert at the last meeting. He was elected secretary-treasurer of the Chattanooga Trades and Labor Council for the ensuing year.

Remy is the son of Mr. Robert Cuthbert, a prominent member of Nashville Typographical Union No. 20. Remy just can't help being an active worker in the ranks of the organized labor movement, for there is no one more active and sincere than his father.

MATT GERLACH, UNION MAN

(Memphis Labor Review)

After loyal service as treasurer of the Chattanooga Trades and Labor Council for seventeen years, Matt Gerlach, delegate to that body from the Cigarmakers' union, has retired. He declined to accept re-election to the post.

But to say that Matt Gerlach has retired from activity in the labor movement would be misleading.

We know because we have known Matt for twenty years.

Matt Gerlach is a union man of the old school. For that reason he will always be active in the upbuilding of organized labor. It's Matt's way. It's his inbred principle.

A citizen of sterling worth, a man of honor, a neighbor in the true sense, Matt Gerlach is an asset in his home town. And he'll always be on the right side in the labor movement. May he live long and prosper.

PERRY NAMES COMMITTEES

Partial List of Assignments Announced—Little Business Transacted.

NEW ARCADE ON "UNFAIR LIST"

Following negotiations of several weeks' duration with the contractor and members of the company constructing the new arcade at 735 Market street, in an effort to have members of organized labor employed on the building, Chattanooga Trades and Labor council Monday night declared the building and members of the company interested in it "unfair to organized labor."

Little business of an important nature was transacted Monday night by Central Body, and the comparatively small number of delegates present who braved a persistent electrical and windstorm completed the routine in short order.

The recorder's minutes show, among other items, that President Perry was instructed to extend official greetings of organized labor to Hon. William Gibbs McAdoo, who will be a guest of Chattanooga friends Monday.

Hon. K. D. McKellar was recommended for delegate-at-large to the democratic national convention.

Following partial list of standing committees was named, to be completed and announced at next regular session of the body:

Auditing Committee—W. L. Gardner, Typos; T. S. Rose, Carpenters; Roy Lee, Soft Drink Workers.

Credential Committee—R. L. Malone, Carpenters; T. M. Briggs, Barbers; William Keels, Typos.

Legislative Committee—R. M. Cooke, Typos; W. E. Eckenrod, Cigarmakers; J. L. Carpenter, Carpenters; Joe Dobbs, Plumbers.

Label Committee—A. C. Kamin, Moving Picture Operators; W. D. Canada, Painters; E. E. McDaniels, Electrical Workers.

Organizing Committee — Paul J. Aymon, Soft Drink Workers; Tom Hall, Machinists, 56; Taylor Buchanon, Molders.

Entertainment Committee—George Forbes, Postal Clerks; W. A. Hunt, Street Car Men; T. R. Cuthbert, Typos; W. A. Witt, Painters.

Paul Aymon was named general chairman for the celebration of Labor day, which it is planned to make one of the most elaborate in the history of the local movement.

HALIFAX BUILDING WORKERS REJECT WAGE REDUCTION

The building trades committee of the Trades and Labor council of Halifax, Nova Scotia, rejected the demand for a wage cut made by the Constructive Mechanical Trades Exchange. Representatives of the building trades held that wage cutting curtails the buying power of the workers and accentuates the business depression. Instead of wage cuts they favored a shorter work week because it would mean more employment for the jobless.

CARPENTERS IN ANNUAL MEET

State Body to Convene at Nashville Friday, Preceding Federation.

The Tennessee State Council of Carpenters will meet in Nashville April 29, according to a call issued by L. E. Smith, president, and W. E. Creek, secretary-treasurer.

The carpenters' convention is usually opened Friday preceding the meeting of the state federation, which convenes the following Monday.

The carpenters will remain in session throughout Saturday. After a busy session of two days the delegates will again assemble on Monday, since it is customary for the locals they represent to elect them delegates to the state meeting also.

L. E. Smith, president of the Carpenters' Council, is a member of Memphis Carpenters' union, is business agent for that local and a very popular labor leader in the Bluff City.

W. E. Cheek, secretary-treasurer, is a member of Nashville Carpenters' union, where he is also business agent. Mr. Cheek is very popular throughout the state in labor circles, having been elected to succeed W. C. Birthright as secretary-treasurer of the State Federation of Labor at Jackson last May.

DAYTON UNIONS WIN STRIKE AGAINST INJUNCTION BOSS

Dayton, Oho.—Confronted with a steady loss in business because of his anti-union attitude, Abe Shear, the proprietor of the big Liberal market, in Dayton, withdrew his application for an injunction to restrain trade unionists from picketing his place of business and signed an agreement that hereafter all sign work shall be done by union sign painters and all painting and other construction work done by union workmen.

The union struggle against the Liberal market began when the concern had painting and sign painting done by nonunion workers. The meat cutters' union declared a sympathetic strike. Picketing was resorted to in order to acquaint the public with the fact that the market was unfair to organized labor.

Mr. Shear applied to Judge E. T. Snediker for an injunction to stop the picketing on the ground that his business patronage was being injured. After the hearing in the injunction, in which the trade union representatives were represented by Attorney Albert Scharrer, Judge Snediker suggested that the dispute might be settled in a friendly manner.

Trade union representatives and Shear resumed conferences, which finally resulted in a complete victory for the unions.

In view of the settlement, the application for an injunction was withdrawn.

CLEAN-UP CRUSADE IN TUCSON.

The city council of Tucson, Ariz., indorsed the paint-up, fix-up and clean-up campaign sponsored by the Tucson Central Trades council to provide jobs for the unemployed. The mayor's proclamation called upon all the people of the city, both business men and home owners, to adopt the spirit of the campaign from a civic standpoint.

BROWN LIKES LABOR WORLD

Entitles Weekly Contribution "Birthdays I Have Met, or Bigger and Better."

H. F. BROWN

"Birthdays I Have Met, Or Bigger and Better' 'is the title which H. F. Brown, contributor extraordinary to The Labor World, chose for his weekly contribution today, having reference to this, the sixteenth, anniversary of this paper.

The old-timer calls to mind the supplement on our thirteenth anniversary, which carried on its cover page a black cat and the numerals "13," and points out that said number was the beginning point for all our ills. He generously concedes, however, that the editor could not be expected to know what havoc he was creating in thus defying the forces of evil, and expresses fine sentiments respecting The Labor World and its future.

The letter follows:

Editor The Labor World:

The Labor World certainly enjoys its birthdays! I call to mind that since the present so-called editor, general manager, reporter, adv. solicitor, and writer, and general chief - cook - and - bottle-washer took it over for the Trades and Labor Council, this rapidly growing labor journal has celebrated fifteen birthdays, with great eclat and ceremony, and patted itself on the back proudly, and got up on its hind legs and told the wide world all about it.

Well, that's all right. It's got a right to crow, once a year anyway! And I'm proud of it myself. Our labor organizations would be in a bad fix if we didn't have an aggressive organ to play up and get our side before the world! I glory in its ability to get all hands told about it!

Nine birthdays have been celebrated by issuing a special supplementary book, and each has been bigger and better than the last! The coming issue should be only little short of being a whale! In fact, I'm sorely afraid the genial editor may be overreaching himself and won't be able to improve on it next year! But I'm pulling for him to put it over, as usual.

I remember that Black Cat supplement of 1929 and how skittish it made me! You know, I'm not at all superstitious, but I do have a reasonable respect for some sure signs, and certainly a black cat and 13 together was enough to make anyone feel cold chills along the spine. I'm not one to "cast any asparagues," you mind, but I would gently recall to your mind what happened to this country in 1929, same year that this ominous supplement appeared, and I ask you, now, man to man, if on looking back you can truthfully say that you don't believe that black cat and number 13 were rank sure signs of bad luck? Of course, it wasn't the editor's fault. He couldn't be blamed for purely natural effects of certain economic causes then at work, which were bound to cause trouble. But I'll be willing to bet a nice wager that never again will he venture to produce a combination of any two such ominous portents of trouble!

But, I have enjoyed these past celebrations and I hope I'll live to enjoy many more and see just how our wonderful little sixteen-

PUBLIC WORKS PLAN OFFERED BY F. H. PALMER

Trades Unionist Advocates Street Surfacing Program.

SUGGESTS PLAN FOR RAISING THE MONEY

Figures Cash Put Into Circulation Would Give Relief to Many Unemployed.

Issuance of bonds by the city of Chattanooga for the purpose of repaving badly-worn streets is advocated by Frank H. Palmer, president of Lodge 56, International Association of Machinists, in a communication to The Labor World this week, and a right reasonable argument Mr. Palmer makes to support his contentions that such action could and should be done in an effort to alleviate much of suffering locally through unemployment.

Evidently having made a close study of his subject, he offers facts and figures tending to prove that issuance of such bonds would not prove burdensome upon the taxpayers if properly assessed, but on the other hand would prove beneficial from many angles, and would redound to the benefit of the people as a whole.

Mr. Palmer's article is interesting, and is worthy of consideration in all its phases. It follows:

Editor The Labor World:

Back in the early days when Chicago was the far-flung frontier of the white man's western migration, and was the last civilized post, it was visited by men with exploring ambition and became the home of most of them after hearing hair-raising stories of the mysterious land beyond. Only the he-men went on, but the knowledge these men brought back of this wonderful land was the cause of a vision born in the mind of a man named Hill, of a railroad stretched across this trackless land to the Pacific ocean. You can imagine the criticism made of this great man by even the best educated people of that day, but criticism had no effect on him, and after the guarantee of government and financial aid, set about to find enough he-men to do the work. Every man was an engineer of some degree. In most cases his eyes were his transit. They mastered the things with a pick and shovel which puzzle the engineer of today. They made the hard roads easy, and when the Pacific ocean was reached the people realized Mr. Hill was a builder who built. Such a leader is needed today. The theater is set, the audience waits, but no actor appears on the stage.

The time of individual leadership has passed. Proof of it is the change from one man ruling to the people ruling in the governments of Europe and Asia. Yet the machinery of a government ruled by the masses may get clogged or rusty and cease to function for the good of the masses. Such is the condition in this country at the present time.

We have expected aid from the federal government in this depression; such aid has been given some industries before now, but this depression is of such magnitude and has so affected every line of business that when the government made moves to furnish aid it found the problem so great and its financial condition in such shape it has reversed the table and we are aiding it with increased taxes.

This being the case, we must turn our thoughts and efforts in another direction, and when we are convinced this is a job for each and every one of us, and manifest our conviction to the public, this day will be the greatest mile post ever erected by mankind on this earth, and with this fellowship in our heart and mind, we will be able to master any question or condition that may arise.

We cannot expect aid from the federal or state government for at least one year. Proof of this is the progress that has been made with our postoffice. Our city coffers are empty

The Social Ideals of Jesus of Nazareth

An Interpretation

Written for The Labor World
By WILLIAM L. MOSS

Chapter IV
JESUS' TEACHING ANALYZED
Part XIV

A better understanding between the rich and poor is a moral as well as an economic question.

—Rev. Dr. Percy Stickney Grant.

Last week's article closed with this question: If the betterment of life today calls for the individual's devotion to the spiritual ideal of the social life, what good can the individual hope to bring about among people who find all their time consumed by an everlasting bitter fight for their daily bread?

WM. L. MOSS

On one side the individual sees religion unpopular among many of his fellow-workers and even criticized by many church-goers among the working class. On the other side he sees a capitalistic controlled church.

Over here the individual who yearns for a better social life for all the people sees the toilers shut out from all influence in the church—made to feel they are interlopers. Over there he sees a pulpit which preaches only what it is sure capital will approve, or at least it preaches what will certainly not offend capital; what is worse, he sees business men who occupy positions of influence and trust in the church teach the Golden Rule on Sunday, "Do unto others as ye would that they should do unto you," and on Monday sell their wares and cry, "Caveat emptor!"—"Let the buyer beware!"

And there is still another grave charge the workers with justice bring against the church. "When ever did the church," asks the workingman, "during some great economic crisis like the rebellion of the Colorado miners from their exploitation by the wealthy coal barons, come forward and scathingly denounce and condemn the perpetrators of such social injustice?" It must frankly be admitted no case is known where the church has made any such protest. Why no example is to be found is illustrated by either the Colorado or Ludlow mascacre of labor unionists, or, more recently, by the Harlan, Ky.. affair: the church would not, of course, denounce its most influential members!

"I could make a lightning change," a girl told her boy friend, who had, according to Brushville Betty, waited an hour and a half, "but I would look like thunder."

BILIOUS

"I have used Black-Draught . . . and have not found anything that could take its place. I take Black-Draught for biliousness. When I get bilious, I have a nervous headache and a nervous, trembling feeling that unfits me for my work. After I take a few doses of Black-Draught, I get all right. When I begin to get bilious, I feel tired and run-down, and then the headache and trembling. But Black-Draught relieves all this."—H. C. Hendrix, Homerville, Ga.

William J. Burns Passes

William J. Burns has passed on to whatever reward there is for detectives.

Labor will remember William J. Burns a long time and there may have been times when William J. Burns wished his conduct toward labor might have been otherwise. For Burns made of himself by totally unnecessary tactics one of labor's best hated enemies.

More than once has labor excoriated Burns. More than once did Burns tell the world what he thought about labor, meaning union labor.

And now William J. Burns will not ever again thrust a lance at labor, nor labor at him. William J. Burns is finished with this life and the labor movement goes on to meet a higher destiny.

Burns undoubtedly had a sense of the dramatic. That he was a great detective is open to doubt. What he did have was an organization. With an organization it is not difficult to produce results. It can be done even with an organization of such flat-footed gentry as make up the usual run of private detective forces.

Nobody can overlook the fact that an organization, even of the dumbest, must sooner or later stumble on some results.

It was probably not brilliance with Burns. It was organization.

And, as we pass, let that be a lesson to us. Great numbers, united and working to a purpose, are likely to arrive.

Burns was the Nemesis of the McNamaras. Burns' great moment was when he clamped down on the McNamaras and the others who went with them. He had no other very high moment.

Aside from that one high moment, Burns ran a commercial organization. He organized a great force of men for a purpose. His name is on bank doors everywhere. He has been called in to help solve some of the nation's great mysteries. Fewer were solved than remained unsolved.

With Harry Daugherty, Burns came to the Department of Justice. But the record is empty of any great achievement in that post. The truth seems to be that Burns was more tradition than fact, more shadow than substance.

Burns had no social outlook. He made pompous statements when he joined the Department of Justice. They had no depth and no sense.

And now Burns is gone. So passes the individual, in every field.

Institutions often live. Truth always lives. It is better, in this life, to give adherence to something that lives, so that at least an impulse will go on, down through the corridors of time, when the flesh of the individual shall have gone back to impalpable nature.

Well, What Is Left?

"After the Wage Cuts, What's Left to Spend?" pertinently asks The Business Week in an article on the extent of wage cuts in American industry.

Wage cutters don't like to be asked this question, because they have no answer to it. It embarrasses them greatly and hurts their feelings. But it is a question that should be asked the length and breadth of the land, at every available opportunity. If it is asked often enough, perhaps it will get under the hides of the wage cutters and compel them to do some real thinking. If they are forced to think, they may see the folly of wage cutting and cast about for some better means to cope with the depression.

Playing With Fire

Advocates of cutting Federal employes' pay are going about their campaign with seeming disregard of the terrible consequences that are sure to follow such cuts.

Reducing the pay of Federal employes is bound to bring a disastrous wave of wage cutting in private industry throughout the nation—a wave that will further depress commodity prices and bring more unemployment, bankruptcy, unrest, misery and death.

The Passing Show

Note and Comment on Things Doing in the March of Events

Out of 5,300 boys under 18 who worked last year in the coal mines of Pennsylvania, 739, or one out of every seven, were injured in accidents, the state department of labor and industry reports. Five were killed and 11 permanently crippled. Most of the injured were between 16 and 17, while six were under 16.

With millions of men walking the streets in search of employment, why are boys, with their greater susceptibility to accident because of inexperience and immaturity, kept at work in such hazardous employment as coal mining? Let the masters of industry answer.

Words of William Green, in protesting against federal wage cuts, deserve to be emblazoned where all may read. He sets before congress an ideal of progress, not retrogression. He bids congress look upward to higher standards, not down to lower standards.

Congress, says Mr. Green, "should strive to build mass morale, inspire hope, stimulate buying power, restore prosperity and increase spiritual values.

"Congress can do this by announcing to the world that the American standard of living, prevailing among the employes of the government of the United States, will not be lowered through the imposition of a reduction in wages."

Tearing into sweatshop conditions in clothing shops, the Labor News, of Trenton, N. J., is showing what labor papers can do to expose industrial abuses. The Labor News has found instances of almost unbelievable exploitation, one woman being paid only $1.50 for a week's work. The factory boss said she had spoiled a considerable amount of work. Why she was permitted to continue for a week after she had demonstrated her "unfitness" he did not explain. The excuse of "spoiled material" is said to be a stock one at factories when investigators ask questions.

The News is continuing the investigation, which promises to make Trenton labor exploiters extremely uncomfortable and force some needed reforms.

Will wonders never cease? The Denver Post has gone socialist!

A news item telling of the re-election of Mayor Hoan of Milwaukee, Socialist, is accompanied by an editorial note, saying:

"Hoan is the man under whose administration Milwaukee not only got out of debt but accumulated a four-million dollar surplus in the city treasury. If this be socialism, let us make the most of it!"—Colorado Labor Advocate.

Now is the time for city officials to realize that the low price of real estate and the need to provide "made work" for the unemployed gives them a splendid opportunity to acquire and develop park and playground areas, a writer in the American City suggests. According to many park and city planning authorities, an acre of open space is needed for every 100 inhabitants, and of this from 30 to 50 per cent should be devoted to active recreation uses.

What Next!

Discovery of a new source of rayon, in bagasse, the refuse from cane sugar production, was recently announced by the department of agriculture. Department chemists used cheap nitric acid in developing the process, according to the announcement, and it is regarded as commercially feasible in view of low acid costs. There has been increasing need for a new source of raw material for rayon, the department said, and the process provides a large new source available every year.

"UNFAIR" CAFE IN BELLINGHAM

The Central Labor union of Bellingham, Wash., placed the Model cafe on the "we don't patronize list" at the request of the Culinary Workers union.

On Oct. 1, 1931, the union took a voluntary cut of 10 per cent. The cafe recently, without notifying the union, slashed the wages of its waitresses an additional 25 per cent, which reduced their pay to $2 a day. The management refused to consider the cut with the union.

WHAT IS OUR ANSWER?

By ELIZABETH CHRISTMAN
Secretary-Treasurer National Woman's Trade Union League

(Note: The following article arrived just too late for publication in the supplement to this issue of The Labor World. Miss Christman is one of the best-known woman trades unionists in the United States, and her work with the National Woman's Trade Union league has been outstanding. Her contribution to this issue is greatly appreciated, and we regret that its tardy arrival necessitated its exclusion from the supplement.—Editor.)

All through the twentieth century we have boasted of our marvelous successes along the line of mechanical invention and mass production. Now suddenly we are faced with our failures in the field of human relations. Having gone ahead with giant strides in the former realm and at a snail's pace in the latter we discover that our lop-sided development has resulted in a chaotic depression.

How are we as labor groups reacting to this acid test? Can we pull through it without being hopelessly seared? These and similar queries related to the past, present and future confront us. But in our desperate emergency we must concern ourselves primarily with the problems of the present. Such problems we need to face with all the strength and courage of our united forces. Our energies must be devoted to changing the discouraging course of present events. Capital, labor, government must unite as never before to pull the country out of the morass.

Since my activities have been connected with wage-earning women I wish to approach these problems first from their viewpoint. It is necessary to stress certain aspects pertaining peculiarly to women, in our efforts to get a better understanding of labor's position as a whole.

Every woman worker has come to know in the past year the bitter meaning of unemployment, either directly through personal experience or indirectly in the lives of friends and acquaintances. Extensive as unemployment has been among women it has perhaps been somewhat less severe than among men. The tragic reason for this lies chiefly in the double wage standard, one set of rates for men, and a lower set for women doing practically the same kind and amount of work. Such a system cuts like a two-edged sword, working an injustice to women and causing in time of depression substitution of women for men in many jobs or a lowering of men's wage standards.

Increased unemployment of men means increased economic burdens for women who hold on to obs. These women in most cases are carrying back-breaking burdens of family responsibilities. The economic problems of men and women today are closely interrelated, nod that woman's status has so definitely changed, and now that approximately eleven million women are gainfully employed.

The depression has caused a leveling of wage standards not just down to the low water mark of women's rates in normal times but a dropping to an even lower point, to a veritable pauper wage. Women's earnings in the past two years have been slashed not only by loss of jobs, reductions in hour schedules, part-time employment, and lay-offs, but by definite cuts in rates. A recent report of the women's bureau of the U. S. department of labor of the effects upon women in South Bend, Ind., of the disturbed industrial conditions of 1930 tells a typical story, but represents the first part of the depression rather than the more severe conditions of the past year. Wage decreases varying from 20 to almost 50 per cent were shown for three-fifths of the more than 3,000 women included in the study. Due to hour and wage reductions and part-time work, some women were receiving only 10 to 40 per cent of what they had formerly earned. Comments from the schedules illustrate typical situations: "Rate cut from 40 to 28 cents an hour;" "Wage rates cut from 3 to 2 cents a dozen;" "In November I made around $20 a week, now as low as $5 or $6 a week."

To be even more specific—in the state of Massachusetts in 1931 Emma, aged 32, with three years' experience was working in a factory at $9 a week; Gladys, aged 17, with seven months' experience for $5, and Concetta with no experience for $4. Emma, Gladys and Concetta are symbols of thousands and thousands of women everywhere in the country. How do they live and help support others, as they must? Or even worse, what is happening to the unattached, unemployed women, of whom there are legions today and whose plight is so pitiable? We do not need to draw on our imaginations for the answer; we are surrounded with the tragic evidence.

Certainly it takes no trained economist to visualize the tremendous reduction in the purchasing power of millions of workers, both men and women, and the crippling effect on industry of the loss of such markets for its goods. However, here is the economist's story. Dr. William Leiserson finds that loss of wages due to part-time employment and wage cuts cost American workers ten billion dollars in 1930 and two and a half billions for the first four months of 1931. Data from the bureau of labor statistics show that while the cost of living dropped 15 per cent from 1929 to 1931, wages declined 35 per cent in about the same period.

Lowering of employment standards has necessitated a pathetic lowering of living standards—American standards that it has taken a century to build up. We see on all sides what this means in the way of undermined health, resulting from undernourishment, lessened resistance to disease, no chance for recreation, with children suffering ill effects from the depression, with women, who are the mothers and future mothers of the race, losing their health and strength from detrimental standards of employment and living, may we not expect many citizens of an inferior type for the next few decades? Of the psychological effect and depressing sense of failure accompanying lowered standards and loss of jobs, of the deterioration in skill and employability I do not need to speak. You know it all as well as I.

We are not only depressed but bewildered at the landslide in wages and standards. We had perhaps pinned our faith to the president's conference in December, 1929, when employers entered into a "gentlemen's agreement" to refrain from wage reductions. To be sure these same gentlemanly employers if confronted today with the question of why their promise was not kept would answer definitely, and to themselves convincingly, that it was inevitable; that it was the only way. What they mean is that it was "the easiest way."

Experience has proved that this is the direction taken by most employers cornered by financial difficulties. Dividends may be cut eventually, but wage cuts come first to safeguard dividends. We fail to understand why the same ingenuity manifested along technical lines by industrialists cannot be employed to avert disasters to labor, the most important factor in industry.

Unwillingness to change their methods in dealing with labor is due, it would seem, largely to the manufacturers' blindness, inability to grasp how closely their welfare is dovetailed with that of labor. Their short-sighted policies start a vicious circle of lowered purchasing power for workers, reduced consumption, surplus goods without markets, curtailed production, stagnant industries, dwindling profits and shrinking capital.

And so we have almost daily illustrations of employers posting brutal notices of wage slashes to go into immediate effect without consideration of, or consultation with, employes.

At times a wage cut may be unavoidable, we admit, but certainly there is a much sounder and less brutal way of going about it. We have occasional demonstration of the progressive employer's realization of the value of consulting workers and asking their co-operation in necessary reductions; for example, the recent conference of this type in the railroad industry. Wage cuts are always hard, but their blow is softened when workers have been asked for the practical suggestions which they are in a position to make from intimate knowledge of the jobs, and which sometimes succeed in lessening the size of the cut through the use of greater efficiency in management and work.

And how have trade unionists met the wage and unemployment emergencies of the past year? Some have learned the slippery attitude of their employers toward trade union agreements when the crucial test comes. With thousands of unemployed clamoring at the gates for jobs, workers inside the factories have not dared risk all to uphold their rights as in normal times. The words of a topper in a hosiery mill hits the nail on the head—"I was not voting for the wage-cut. I was voting to keep my job."

But there is another vital point to the trade unionists' inability to wage a fight in the past year. They have not been able to carry on their usual constructive program for growth and power to get new members and retain old ones. What a handicap has been the ebbing in funds caused by dwindling in membership and dues! I don't need to stress the fact that practically all available trade union funds have had to be diverted to unemployment relief as more and more members have been caught in the tentacles of distress. Up to the present, trade unionists have kept their jobless members out of bread lines. The employed have made sacrifices to help the unemployed. For example, members of the International Ladies' Garment Workers have given a day's pay a week and the Typographical union members have paid 10 per cent of their wages for unemployment relief.

The trade unionists have thus pursued the American way of making the best of a bad situation and of helping each other. They have frowned on radicalism and communistic demonstrations of a conspicuous sort. They have hoped through law and order to win more. Sometimes we wonder if there has been too much patience manifested in view of the desperate situation and little prospect of relief? Have we failed to seize even the straws of encouragement proffered by a few progressive employers attempting through some form of economic planning to remedy present unemployment and guard against future emergencies when the details of such plans are not entirely satisfactory to the employes?

Stuart Chase in a recent publication offers a dim ray of hope in the offing when he says "the ablest business men in America today are committed to high wages, short hours and admirable working conditions. They find that such measures and mass consumption provide leisure time to consume leisure-time goods, keeping operating costs down. For the first time in history they have a genuine stake in the abolition of poverty. This hardly converts them into angels, but their horns and tails have visibly receded."

This sounds fine in print and is, of course, in a measure true. However, we have had reams of printed material to encourage us, but what we need now is real action—action on the part of these same ablest business men, of labor qualified by experience to have a much bigger share in management than it has as yet ever really tried to get, and of a government willing to shoulder responsibility for its workers in bad times as well as in good, without the fear that it is giving "a dole" any more than members of a trade union consider dues paid into their treasury in normal periods and used for tiding them over difficult spots are a form of charity. What such a system means for both the government and unions is unemployment insurance. Labor, it seems to me, has the right to expect a government, unable to prevent the occurrence and recurrence of unemployment emergencies, to keep the burden falling on those least responsible for the calamity and least able to bear it.

The situation calls for searching questions. Have I done all I could in the past year to gain for labor a firmer foothold? Have you? Has this union and that? Or have we accepted burdens and injustices with too much resignation? Are we not challenged to action personally and collectively, nationally and internationally, for a drastic change in conditions that govern industry? Overwhelming as the job is, certain concrete proposals stand out on which we might unite for definite action; for a co-ordinated system of employment exchanges; for a national economic council with labor participating fully as it is qualified to do; for a system of shorter hours of work, and of adequate wages with unemployment insurance as a guarantee of security; for elimination of child labor; and for provision old-age pensions? What is our answer?

It's so awfully simple to demand UNION GOODS and SERVICE that it is simply awful more trade unionists do not do this important thing.

PUBLIC OWNERSHIP SAVES EDMONTON $600,000 TAXES

The electric light system, power plant, telephone and waterworks departments of the city of Edmonton, Canada, showed a surplus of over half a million dollars in 1931 and the estimated surplus for 1932 of $616,000. Edmonton, which has a population of 78,000, is the capital of the province of Alberta. "The taxpayers of Edmonton," says the Alberta Labor News, the official organ of the Alberta Federation of Labor, "will be relieved of taxation to the extent of $600,000 this year as the result of profitable enterprises operated under public ownership."

MAYOR OF MINNEAPOLIS VETOES PAY CUT RESOLUTION

Says Government Should Maintain Living Standards. Wage Cuts Injure Labor and Business and Threaten Economic Collapse.

Minneapolis, Minn., April 28.—William A. Anderson, mayor of Minneapolis, vetoed the city council's resolution ordering salary reductions of more than 10 per cent for employes under its jurisdiction.

"In returning this resolution without my approval," Mayor Anderson said, "I feel that I should first call attention to the economic fallacy of a general reduction of wages.

"A reduction of wages of public employes is preceded and will undoubtedly be followed by other reductions in private industry.

"There isn't any question but what the United States has sufficient soil and natural resources to maintain not only the population we have of approximately 100,000,000, but to maintain 300,000,000 people.

"We announce with pride that the American form of government is something different—that it is sufficient to provide for the welfare of all the people—and it is, if properly administered and its constitution and laws properly construed.

"If this is the case, should not the government itself definitely place itself upon record, put into effect and keep in effevt a living standard of wages sufficient for these employes to maintain their families, educate their children and provide for old age? If the government, the state and its subdivisions, cannot and will not do this, how can we expect the private employer to do it?

"As to the economic fallacy of a reduction of wages, it is readily seen that the buying power of these employes and the buying power of other wage-earners in private industry inevitably affects the business man.

"If they have less to spend, the merchant will sell less goods. If the merchant sells less goods, the wholesaler sells less, and then, in turn, the farmer's market is reduced to just that extent.

"So the whole economic structure of society is affected by a reduction in wages of working people, with the inevitable reduction of the standards of living of not only these workers, but of the business men, many of them driven into bankruptcy, and the reduction of the standards of living of the farmers, because their market for goods is reduced.

"I am fearful that in the trying times through which we are passing, if we keep on crippling the buying power of the workers and the market for the farmers, that the result to the business world will be much more serious than anyone even now contemplates.

"I am afraid that a few more blows to the great producing masses on the farms and the workers in the cities may result in complete economic collapse to the business world and to the transportation industry of the United States."

As a substitute for the wage reductions Mayor Anderson submitted a list of proposals for city economies amounting to $402,052, which he said could be made without seriously affecting either efficiency or service.

Jobs and Men

A Series of Contributed Editorials Discussing Industrial Conditions.

Although there are certain classes of railroad workers whose unions are affiliated with the American Federation of Labor, namely, the telegraphers, machinists, trackmen, shop repairmen, car builders, and to some extent, the switchmen, the large number of workers are not affiliated with the federation through their organizations. These unaffiliated organized railroad men call their organizations "brotherhoods," and group themselves as follows: (1) Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, (2) Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen, (3) Brotherhood of Railway Trainmen (which embraces in its membership conductors, baggagemen, brakemen, flagmen and switchmen in yards and train service) and (4) Order of Railway Conductors.

These "brotherhoods" were organized originally as mutual insurance societies, due to the fact that railroading is characterized as an extra hazardous occupation by insurance companies and few, if any, of these concerns sell policies which fully meet the needs of the men who man our railroads. Theoretically, the life of a railroader is slightly under twenty years, and something like nine a day, or 3,000 a year, are killed, according to Helen Marot in her "American Labor Unions." Along with this heavy fatality record there must be taken into account the extremely high total disability average among railroaders which, to an even greater extent, brings disaster to the homes of these men. Unable to buy insurance policies to meet their needs, the railroad workers established their own insurance companies, so to speak. But once they were organized, even though it was for the benefits organizing might bring them in an insurance way, it was but a short step for the railroaders to take when they began to use their brotherhoods for the purpose of securing better hours, better pay, and for the fortification of and protection of their rights and privileges while on the job.

Go to your Union Meetings

Don't say you are too tired; the weather is bad; or there is too much quibbling and "hot air" to interest me.

Every time you miss a meeting and leave it to the other fellow to look out for your interest, you are doing an injustice both to yourself and your organization.

Your views on especially vital subjects should be represented in discussion and by vote, and the only way for this to be done is for you to be at your union meeting.

You are responsible for the good and welfare of your organization, and non-attendance of union meetings on your part is not excuse enough for you to voice your opinion after a measure has been passed. It is then time for you to concur in what has been done and work in harmony with the officers and other members of your union.

Go to your union meetings regularly and induce others to do the same, because one important thing to remember is the meaning of the slogan:

"United we stand, Divided we fall."

So at last, he point-blank asked the question of the host:

Traveler: How in the world do you make a go of things at all out here?

The host (pointing to the hired man across the room): Well, you see that fellow over there. Well, he works for me, and since I can't pay him, it is agreed that in two years time he gets the ranch for what I owe him. Then I go to work for him until I get it back.

GEORGIA POWER COMPANIES CUT WAGES; KEEP PROFITS

Atlanta, Ga.—A firm demand that public utility companies operating in Atlanta should be compelled to reduce their rates for electric light and power to conform with present low wages and low prices of materials that go into the cost of production was made by the Atlanta Federation of Trades and Allied Unions in a resolution directing public attention to the facts.

The federation declared that although the public utilities have materially reduced salaries and wages and are buying materials at prices greatly below those which prevailed when the consumer rates were established, there has been no reduction in rates. Consequently all the economies resulting from lower production costs have been appropriated by the companies as added profits instead of being passed on to the consumers in reduced prices for light and power.

The resolution adopted by the federation stressed the fact that many of the consumers, who are compelled to pay the inflated prices are workers who are either totally unemployed or have had their earnings reduced by part-time work.

MAYOR MURPHY RAPS PAY-SLASHING BUDGETS

Detroit's Executive Opposes Additional Wage Cuts for City Employes — Praises Labor Leaders in City Government.

Detroit, April 28.—Frank Murphy, mayor of Detroit, assisted in installing Frank H. Martel, president, and the other new officers of the Detroit Federation of Labor.

Mayor Murphy declared it was his policy to have a number of representatives of organized labor in his official family. "These appointments were made," he said, "because I want to balance the government so that labor would have its share and its proper representation. No effort is made to give labor more than its share, but labor must have its share in a well-balanced government."

In reply to the shrieks of Detroit business men about balancing the budget by means of more wage cuts for city employes, Mayor Murphy stated that the municipal workers were being asked to do more than their share to help balance the budget.

"Balancing the budget," he said, "is necessary, but it is an objective. It isn't a god, a sacred thing that is to be accomplished at all costs. It is not right to shatter living standards and bring human beings to want and despair to achieve such an objective.

"Government is not a business, and God pity the day when we consider government as only a business.

"Government is an organization originated for the peace, safety, education and comfort of the citizens and their families.

"There are business aspects to government. They should be isolated, and the business part should be handled in the most careful and business-like manner.

"But we must not forget it is our duty to get the social significance of government and proceed on its administration with a human-mindness which will do the greatest good for all.

"To sacrifice everything to balance the budget is fanaticism.

"We need the labor movement now more than ever. Labor has bloomed under abuses, and there are plenty of them today. Your movement must aid the beaten, the cowed and the wrecked humans. Link your arm through theirs and help them to rise."

TIMES PAYS TRIBUTE TO FINE CHARACTER

Following editorial tribute to "Uncle Jake" Smith appeared in Monday's issue of the Chattanooga Times:

JAKE SMITH, 77.

Jake Smith died at his home, 1712 Read avenue, last Saturday at the age of 77 years. Perhaps the most interesting thing about this man, from the standpoint of the general public, was the fact that he was the oldest employe of the Cincinnati division of the Southern railway, the building of which was an important event in the life of this community.

Because of its typicalness of the life of the great masses of men, the significance of Mr. Smith's life went all but unnoticed except by a comparatively small circle of friends and acquaintances. But for fifty-five years he served the railroad, which served the people of this section. And for fifty of these years he was a citizen of, and contributed to the life of, this community.

During this time he rose from the position of engine wiper, machinist, fireman, engineer and finally foreman. During those years he reared and supported a family, helped to support his church, worked for the improvement of the lot of labor and otherwise contributed to the life of the city in which he lived.

Industrious, faithful, unostentatious, his life was typical of the lives of the uncounted millions who go their way "unhonored and unsung" in a world which is too prone to recognize only the exceptional. And having been a native of Germany, Mr. Smith was also typical of millions of sturdy immigrants whose industry and worth have entered more largely than is generally realized into the making of America.

COOKS AND WAITERS REJECT WAGE REDUCTION

The Cooks' and Waiters' union of San Francisco, Cal., unanimously rejected proposals for a third wage cut carrying from 12½ to 33 per cent coming from practically all of the large hotels and restaurants. Union officials said that, having already taken two wage reductions, the time had come to stop the stampede toward lower living standards sought by the employers. It was stated that the present wage is equivalent to that paid in 1907, while living costs are materially higher than in the pre-war days. Moreover, most of the union members are now on part-time basis.

ALBERTA LABOR PROTESTS MOTHERS' ALLOWANCE CUT

The labor group in the parliament of the province of Alberta, Canada, protested against the action of the government in reducing mothers' allowance 10 per cent. Pointing out that the average amount paid to widows with four children in urban centers is $45 and to those living in small towns $40, before the reduction, the labor members declared that the original rates were no more than adequate to provide a decent living for mothers with dependents and urged that the former scale be restored.

SPOKANE BAKERS' UNION CONTINUES JOBLESS BENEFITS

The Bakery Workers' union of Spokane, Wash., voted to continue the weekly unemployment payments to its members which the union began last November. The benefit fund is raised through an assessment under which each working member pays into the treasury a certain percentage of his earnings during the entire year.

because the citizens cannot pay their taxes. If there can be some way found where the city can borrow the money that is laying idle, at a fair return, then it can, in turn, help the unfortunates with employment. I think the people would welcome vast improvement in street surfacing.

Our city debt is $13,000,000, or $108. per capita. One more million would make it $14,000,000, or $116 per capita, which is not such a big debt after you realize that we are just going to pay the interest and part of the principal and pass the remainder on to the next generation. We have inherited most of the present debt from our forefathers.

This million dollars can be gotten here in the city by selling small bonds to the people that have idle money and have been waiting for a safe investment.

This amount would pave Market street from the river to Main, Main from Carter to Dodds, Dodds from Main to McCallie, McCallie from Dodds to Georgia avenue, Broad from the river to Chattanooga creek, with the power company doing their part. This would employ men to operate the Signal Mountain cement plant, in which I have no interest, just mentioned it because it is a local plant and is shut down at the present time, men to get the gravel and sand from the river and haul it to the job, men to put down the new surface and haul the old surface away and fill in low ground, of which we have too much.

The expenditure of this money can be confined to this city for both material and labor are abundant at an abnormal figure, the necessary machinery is laying idle, experts are willing to render their service at a living wage.

Such a program carried out, the citizens holding the bonds have a million dollars safely invested in their own city which would tend to make them more alert citizens. Then the city would have one million dollars worth of street surface. Statistics teach us that every dollar loosened, even in this depression, is handled ten times before it goes back in hoarding. If that be true, and every person handling it makes ten per cent, that wouuld be one million dollars clear just from circulation. Now we have employed lots of men, made vast improvements, and the original million is still here and the money paid for interest and on the principal will remain.

Every car owner uses some of the above mentioned streets daily, thereby saving his per capita in wear and tear on his car, not mentioning the comfort that comes with riding on smooth surfaces.

This would make such a lasting impression on tourists they would, in turn, advertise our city throughout the country as being made up of citizens who fight depressions and have stepped forward and have shown the other cities the way out.

CALIFORNIA PRINTS 550,000 ARITHMETICS FOR SCHOOLS

The California state board of education authorized the state printing office to print 550,000 new arithmetic textbooks used in the public schools.

The publishers rent the plates to the state printing office for a nominal sum. State Printer Harry Hammond said the textbook job will enable him to keep from 75 to 100 men at work until the legislature meets next January.

LOS ANGELES UNION DRIVE.

The Los Angeles, Cal., local of the Bakery and Confectionery International Union of America is carrying on an active campaign against non-union bakeries. The local engaged an illuminating company to furnish a sound car and an illuminating service at a number of union shops in boosting the Bakers' union label used on all bread made in signed contract shops.

STATE COLLECTS UNPAID WAGES

During the last month victimized workers filed new claims for unpaid wages totaling $8,647 in the Santa Barbara office of the division of labor statistics and law enforcement of California. The division was recently successful in collecting unpaid wages for the workers in the Santa Barbara section amounting to $3,823, and still has some 600 wage complaints.

The UNION LABEL and SHOP CARD are the guide posts that tell us how we can advance the cause of labor.

TEACHERS' CUT OPPOSED.

The Central Labor union of Hibbing, Minn., took a strong position in opposition to the contemplated cut in school teachers' wages recommended by the Mesaba Range School Boards association.

Declaring that "our interest in the welfare of our schools is paramount to all other interests outside the home and our concern for future citizens is a vital one," the union demanded the retention of the present salary standards of school teachers.

Always demanding the UNION LABEL and SHOP CARD is evidence that you are a real live member of organized labor.

Delegates to the thirty-sixth annual ention of the Tennessee Federa- of Labor late Wednesday after- concluded one of the most con- ctive and businesslike meetings held by the representatives of workers.

From the opening of the sessions a ognition of the seriousness of the omic situation was evident, and ry delegate appeared conscious of importance of his or her duty in ing the many problems which con- Tennessee workers. Underlying all, however, was a feeling of op- ism, and confidence in the ability American toilers to work out in or- ly fashion the great burdens ed upon them was expressed by y who addressed the convention. as predicted by The Labor World e two weeks ago, attendance was re the average, which, in view of ditions, was regarded as remark- , and indicative of the determina- and stability of the federation's ers.

Senators Asked To Save Jobs of American Toilers

Labor Urges Upper House to Approve Collection of Customs Duties Based on Normal Value of Foreign Currencies.

Washington, May 5.—Following up its appeal to the senate finance committee to approve a bill directing the secretary of the treasury to collect all customs duties on the basis of the normal value of foreign currencies, America's wage-earners' protective conference, Matthew Woll, president, has sent the following letter to each member of the senate:

"It is conservatively estimated that there are some eight million (8,000,000) of America's industrial workers unable to secure any work. In addition, there are upwards of two million (2,000,000) additional who are working only part time.

"We realize that we cannot prevail upon employers to give these workers employment while conditions continue wherein employers know that they cannot sell the product of American labor in competition, in America, with the products of foreign workers, owing to price conditions, due to the depreciation of foreign currencies.

Rate Changes Not Sought.

"Further, we realize that employers will not produce articles, which compete in the American market with the products of foreign workers, when they know that similar or comparable articles can be purchased, the product of foreign workers, for less than the American costs of production.

"We are not asking any change in tariff rates.

"We contend that a national emergency exists; that the intent of congress is being nullified through the importation of articles valued on the basis of the present depreciated foreign currencies; that the time for congress to act is now.

"We maintain that hundreds of thousands of additional American workers will be forced into idleness unless congress sees fit to take prompt action.

What Labor Asks.

"We believe, and we respectfully request, that the finance committee, or the senate, incorporate in the pending revenue bill language which will make possible and mandatory the collection of customs duties by the treasury department as was intended by the congress when the present tariff act became the law.

"The depreciation of foreign currencies has made it possible for importers to secure the landing of the products of foreign workers in America at total landed costs, far less than the American costs of production, something which was not intended by any member of congress when the present tariff act was enacted.

"We believe that the treasury department should be directed to add to the declared import value the percentage of depreciation in foreign currencies prevailing and that customs duties should be collected on the basis of such value.

Other Nations Have Acted.

"Action similar to that which we have suggested has already been taken by several foreign countries, notably Canada, France, Germany and Spain.

"Trusting that we may be favored with your support and that you may be able to prevail upon the finance committee or the senate to comply with this request of labor and thus help American workers retain or secure additional employment.

"MATTHEW WOLL,
"President."

UNION LABOR DRIVE TO HELP LAUNDRY WORKERS

Unemployment among a large number of its members stimulated the Laundry Workers' union of San Francisco, Cal., to inaugurate a fight against unfair laundries. Union officials stated that besides the business slump, which has greatly curtailed their work, the industry has to contend with the Oriental laundries and hundreds of small concerns which are operated with no regard for working conditions, hours of labor or wage scales. It was reported that these cut rate concerns menace the operation of large laundries which employ union workers and pay the union scale.

Resolutions Cover Wide Range; National and State Governments Asked to Battle Unemployment

Indorsement of the legalized sale of beer brought out the only real battle in the deliberations of the state convention at Nashville this week, several delegates opposing the proposition on the ground that organized labor should not, as an organization, take part in the controversy. The resolution passed, however, after considerable debate. The federation placed itself on record on many questions of interest to the masses particularly in these trying times, a complete list of these pronouncements being as follows:

and daily press of the state, and copies sent to all affiliated locals and central labor unions.

URGE PURCHASE OF UNION-MINED COAL.

Whereas, present conditions have forced many of our affiliated organizations into battles for their very existence, among those hardest hit by the so-called depression being the United Mine Workers of America; and,

Whereas, the United Mine Workers have shown a spirit of determination and a demonstration of real unionism which is the wonder of all citizens and the pride of all who believe in maintaining American standards and the independence of American workers; and,

Whereas, this fine spirit of unionism had resulted in signed agreements with operators in Fentress and Overton counties, Tennessee, in which are the only union mines in our state; therefore, be it

Resolved, by the Tennessee Federation of Labor in annual session assembled, That we regard it not only a duty but a pleasure to appeal to organized labor and its friends throughout the state to demand the product of these union miners in preference to that produced in other communities of the state by workers who are in most cases kept in virtual bondage by unfair and unscrupulous mine operators.

APPROVE PROGRAM OF POSTAL WORKERS.

Whereas, the affiliated postal organizations at successive conventions have adopted resolutions favorable to improved working conditions, relating particularly to the elimination of harmful, objectionable speed-up practices; the liberalization of sick and vacation leaves; the improvement of the retirement law; the reduction of night work; the establishment of a civil service employes' court of appeals; the improvement of the postal substitute employes' and village letter carriers' working and wage conditions; the establishment of adequate wage standards and kindred betterments; and,

Whereas, various bills covering these objectives of the affiliated groups of postal employes have been introduced for action in the Seventy-second congress to conform to their legislative program to establish and maintain such employment standards; therefore, be it

Resolved, That the thirty-sixth annual convention of the Tennessee Federation of Labor reaffirm its position in favor of higher government employment standards and continue its co-operation with the affiliated organizations of postal employes in furtherance of the remedial legislative objectives herein mentioned; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be spread on the minutes of this convention and a copy be sent to the ten congressmen and the two United States senators from Tennessee.

DENOUNCE PLAN TO ABOLISH PRIMARY.

Whereas, during recent months many leaders of the major political parties have expressed themselves as favoring the return to the convention system of selection of nominees for public office, and in some instances the convention system did replace the primary election in recent campaigns in some counties in the selection of nominees for county officers; and,

Whereas, the American labor movement has repeatedly voiced its protest against the unrepresentative and unsatisfactory system of choosing candidates by the convention system, which deprives the self-respecting citizens of their constitutional right to go to the polls and vote for their choice of candidates in a decent and respectful manner; therefore be it

Resolved, That the thirty-sixth annual convention of the Tennessee Federation protest the attempt of some of the political leaders of this state to destroy the primary election and substitute the convention system; and be it further

Resolved, That all members and friends of organized labor be urged to make every effort to resist the attempt to return to the convention system in choosing candidates; and be it further

Resolved, That copies of this resolution be given to the labor

ASK PARDON FOR ALFRED HOFFMAN.

Whereas, Alfred E. Hoffman, organizer of the American Federation of Full Fashioned Hosiery Workers, which organization is affiliated with the American Federation of Labor through the United Textile Workers of America, has been convicted of conspiracy for his activities in a strike of the Full Fashioned Hosiery Workers and has been sentenced to two years' imprisonment and is now confined in the Monroe county jail at Stroudsburg, Pa.; and,

Whereas, Alfred E. Hoffman is well and favorably known to many trades unionists in this state for his part in the spontaneous strikes of the rayon workers at Elizabethon, Tenn., where his conduct was such as to merit the commendation of this state; and,

Whereas, under trying conditions during the strike at Elizabethton Mr. Hoffman showed great patience and self-control; and,

Whereas, the only unlawful acts as a result of the two strikes at Elizabethton, Tenn., were committed by the governor of Tennessee, who sent the state militia into that community in violation of the constitution of Tennessee, and by a mob of armed business men of Elizabethton, who deported Mr. Hoffman and Edward F. McGrady, a representative of the American Federation of Labor, from that community; and,

Whereas, although the members of the mob of armed business men were identified and were well known they were not indicted for that crime; and,

Whereas, application for a pardon is pending before the board of pardons of the commonwealth of Pennsylvania; therefore, be it

Resolved, That this the thirty-sixth annual convention of the Tennessee Federation of Labor respectfully petition this honorable body to grant a pardon to Alfred E. Hoffman; and be it further Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be sent to the Hon. Gifford Pinchot, governor of Pennsylvania.

GIVE SUPPORT TO LEGALIZED BEER.

Whereas, the Volstead act, imposed upon the American people at the behest of organized and intolerant zealots, has produced political and economic chaos, and is rapidly sapping the foundations of this republic; and,

Whereas, the dire results of this legislative policy were perceived and understood by the American Federation of Labor, which as early as 1921 impressively indicated the following, each of which has increased and intensified from year to year:

1. A general disregard for this law and its enforcement, breeding contempt for all law and defiance of orderly government.

2. The creation of an army of moonshiners, hijackers and racketeers, breeding uncontrollable lust for use of force and violence.

3. An amazing growth in the traffic of narcotics and poisons, followed by increases in the number of suicides and commitments to hospitals and asylums.

4. Increase in the rate of insanity, blindness and all manner of diseases.

5. Increasing unemployment due to the closing down of industries directly or indirectly connected with the manufacture and distribution of wholesome beer.

6. A stupendous increase in taxation, national, state and municipal, on account of the cost of enforcing prohibition, coupled with loss of legitimate revenues derived from the manufacture and sale of beer.

7. A dejected and despondent citizenry, due to governmental interference with personal habits and liberty of the individual; and,

Whereas, compelled to act by the plight of the people, labor's national committee for the modification of the Volstead act, composed of outstanding spokesmen in the cause of organized labor, has outlined a plan of campaign to restore legalized and wholesome beer which, if pressed to success, will furnish employment for 1,125,000 people, start 180,000 freight cars loading and furnish work for thousands of the idle building mechanics in the reconstruction of rundown and dismantled brewing plants, thus bringing about a revival in at least 100 industries, directly or indirectly aided and stimulated into activity, and providing and opening up new sources of revenue for national, state and local governments through the resumption of the lawful trade in beer; and,

Whereas, the removal of this legal blight will advance the cause of temperance, will invigorate and strengthen the moral fiber of our people, will restore them to cheerfulness and happiness in daily life, and will recreate respect for government and law, things so necessary to the American people in these times of depression in business and trouble of spirit; therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Tennessee State Federation of Labor hereby records itself in favor of the modification of the Volstead act, and to that end urges each and every city central body and each affiliated union to take an active part in the campaign now being conducted by said national committee for the purpose of the passage of an act of congress to legalize the manufacture and sale of beer in conformity with the recommendation of the A. F. of L.

OPPOSE PAY CUTS FOR FEDERAL EMPLOYES.

Whereas, the country is suffering the greatest epoch of unemployment in its history; and,

Whereas, big business is now clamoring for a reduction in salaries of government employes, in order that they may likewise further slash wages in every line of business; and,

Whereas, congress now in session contemplates the reduction of salaries, and also lowering the working standards of its employes which will cut the buying power of the working man, and lower the American standard of living, besides prolonging the depression; and,

Whereas, we believe that economy in the government should come by abolishing useless bureaus and subsidies instead of reducing salaries of the employes; therefore, be it

Resolved, That the thirty-sixth session of the Tennessee State Federation of Labor, assembled in Nashville on May 2, 3 and 4, go on record condemning the reduction of salaries and the lowering of working conditions of government employes; be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be sent each of our ten congressmen and two senators from Tennessee.

WOULD ABOLISH JOB OF BACK-TAX COLLECTOR.

Whereas, the state of Tennessee has a back tax law operating in all counties in the state under the direction of a back tax attorney; and,

Whereas, said attorney receives handsome fees for his service, enforcing collection of back taxes, and forces many small home owners to lose their homes through the process of collecting back taxes; therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Tennessee Federation of Labor in session assembled instruct the legislative committee to call upon the next general assembly to abolish the office of back tax attorney and empower the county trustees to collect back taxes at actual cost, no penalty to be attached only in cases of refusal to pay back taxes.

URGES SUPPORT OF DAVIS-KELLY BILL.

Whereas, the mining industry of this country is in the worst condition of its history;

Whereas, the demoralized and deplorable condition has brought financial disaster to the coal operators, bankruptcy to financial institutions and business in communities dependent on the coal industry;

Whereas, the policy pursued by the coal operators not only has brought financial ruin, but has passed their mismanagement on to the coal miner and his dependents, inflicting want, suffering, deprivation, starvation and establishing living conditions that are inhuman; and,

Whereas, coal conferences have been held in many coal producing states; these conferences were called in some instances by the coal operators, in others at the request of governors, but nothing was done to correct the condition; and,

Whereas, the president of the United States endeavored to have a joint coal conference through a call initiated by the officials of the United Mine Workers of America, but the coal operators refused to respond or co-operate; and,

Whereas, there is a mining bill introduced in congress, Senate Bill 2935, and House Bill 7536, better known as the Davis-Kelly bill, that is for the purpose of correcting the deplorable state of the mining industry and all of its attendant evils;

Whereas, this mining bill is the only constructive and practical solution that has been offered to stabilize and create a healthy condition to the mining industry; and,

Whereas, there are civic organizations such as the Kiwanis, Rotarians, chambers of commerce, manufacturers' associations and other kindred organizations, who have no connection or knowledge of the mining industry, who are active in lending aid, support and influence in behalf of the nonunion coal corporations to prevent the passage of the Davis-Kelly bill; and,

Whereas, these civic and business associations are in some instances bringing pressure to bear on railroad officials by having their superintendents use the threat of discharge and intimidating the railroad employes in various ways for the purpose of preventing the railroad workers from cooperating with the miners to have the Davis-Kelly bill enacted into law; therefore, be it

Resolved, That this convention go on record as condemning the actions and attitude of these organizations for their unfair and unfriendly attitude in opposing the passage of the

A. F. of L. Report Shows Total of Idle Still Rising

President Green Warns Only Shortening of Work Hours Will Avert Risk of Worse Unemployment Crisis.

Washington, May 5.—"Obviously we have yet failed to turn the tide toward economic recovery," President William Green, of the American Federation of Labor, declares, in making public a report of the federation showing an increase in trade union unemployment during April.

Pointing out that the new rise in unemployment is of the greatest significance, coming at a time when employment is usually increasing, instead of declining, President Green warns that unless hours are shortened to give work to more unemployed the nation runs the risk of a worse crisis. "A universay five-day week would afford work for a large number of unemployed," he says.

President Green's statement follows:

"Union unemployment reports in April show a new danger: Industrial unemployment is increasing at the peak of the usual spring busy season. Never before in the five years of our reports has unemployment increased in April, not even in the two depressions years just past.

Report Is Warning.

"This new rise is of the greatest significance. We cannot count on any improvement from industrial gain in the near future, but we may be faced with a growing unemployment problem. Obviously we have yet failed to turn the tide toward economic recovery. Only by putting people back to work to create wealth and earn their living can we put industry on a stable foundation. When unemployment increases, we cannot look for industrial improvement. It is a warning to make ready relief and public works. We are passing through one of the most critical periods in the depression. The next two months will test whether the government reconstruction measures can bring about a start toward business recovery. Business hangs on buying power; and unemployment is cutting buying power to still lower levels.

"It is no longer possible to meet unemployment by relief measures alone. Already cities are reporting the failure of funds. Several report funds already out, others expect their relief money to last until May, June or August; very few have enough for the full year. There is only one way to give men enough work to keep body and soul together and at the same time stimulate buying: Divide work time among those who need work by shortening work hours.

Shorter Week Would Help.

"President Hoover is reported as convinced that the five-day week plan will become a necessary principle in the economic recovery of the country. A universal five-day week would afford work for a large number of unemployed.

"Trade union reports are a warning that unless hours are shortened to give work to more unemployed we run the risk of a worse crisis. Our weighted figures show 22.9 per cent unemployed in April compared with 22.5 per cent in March—an increase of four-tenths of one per cent in unemployment at a season when unemployment usually declines at least six-tenths of one per cent.

"Labor department figures show the same trend: 1.5 per cent of the four and a half million workers in their reports were laid off from Feb. 15 to March 15.

7,900,000 Estimated Idle.

"Estimating unemployment in the country as a whole on the basis of our figures from unions, we find that nearly 100,000 have lost their jobs in industry since March. Last year, from March to April, over 280,000 were taken back to work in our industries.

"Although work on farms provided jobs for some in April this year, with the usual spring planting activity, the jobs so created are seasonal. Some 150,000 workers were hired on farms from March 1 to April 1, but 7,900,000 were still unemployed in the country as a whole."

SHORTER HOURS URGED.

Asheville, N. C.—Woodruff Randolph, secretary-treasurer of the International Typographical union, urged every member of organized labor to take an interest in the matters of government in an address to the semi-annual meeting of the Virginia-Carolinas Typographical conference at its two-day meeting here.

CIVIC LEADERS PROTEST CITY HIRING JOBLESS

Chamber Committee Favors Soup Kitchens.

OPPOSE PROPOSAL TO EMPLOY LABOR

Want Brainerd Sewers Laid by Machinery for "Economy's Sake."

Perhaps nothing which has occurred during the past few months with reference to the unemployment situation has created more widespread indignation than action taken by the so-called taxation committee of the chamber of commerce in passing resolutions against the city commission's plan of laying the new Brainerd sewers with laborers instead of machinery.

It was recently announced that, in order to relieve to some extent the widespread suffering of local citizens through unemployment, the big sewer job would be handled with manual labor, giving employment to 100 or more men for several months. The proposal was approved by the mayor and commissioners, but the "taxation" committee, under the direction of Fred Arn, local capitalist and republican factional leader, straightway held a meeting and "resoluted" against it, holding, in effect, that out-of-works might be fed at the soup kitchens and through the various charities and the sewer work done by machinery.

Trades unionists were inclined to question the implication that a majority of the chamber's committee approved the resolution, many contending that among the members of that committee are several who hold at least a degree of sympathy for the plight of the hungry, and would not further add to the misery of the out-of-works by kicking them deeper down into the mire of despair and placing them on the plane of a mendicant.

An indication of the temper of Chattanooga workers respecting the published position of Mr. Arn's committee is seen in a communication received by The Labor World Thursday, which follows:

Editor The Labor World:

As one of our great humorists writes, "all I know is what I read in the papers," and recent news of the activities of the Chamber of Commerce taxation committee has given me something to think about.

It seems that the Mayor and city commissioners have decided to build the Brainerd sewer system with city forces and employ thereon some of our out-of-work citizens, but this does not suit the taxation committee at all, so they bring forth this resolution:

"In view of the fact that sewer construction by untrained and inexperienced forces equipped with only hand implements is very much more expensive than the performance of the same work by modern equipment and laborers capable of performing that work * * *"

Ye gods, when has the science of digging ditches become so hard to master that the competent labor heretofore employed in the mills of Chattanooga cannot learn it, and why the slur on the lowly "hand implements." Just how many sewers in the city have been dug with modern ditch-digging machinery?

The leaders of thought in this country have contended that the workers of the country are not asking for a "dole," but they are asking for a chance to make an honest living for their families. Even should the construction of these sewers cost just a little more, and that is doubtful, would it not be better for the citizenry to have men earning their living by honest work than have them stop on their way to and from the soup kitchen and watch a big machine do the work at a possible saving to the taxpayer? The committee says it favors such relief as is necessary to keep these people from starving, but it does not look with favor on a plan to give them work.

When will the blind see? When will some people realize that the worker of this community does not want charity? He wants self-respecting work, and I venture the assertion that he would rather work for the smallest wage than stand with hat in hand before the Social Service Bureau or the taxation committee of the chamber asking for food to support his family. The Social Ideals of Jesus of Nazareth

An Interpretation

Written for The Labor World
By WILLIAM L. MOSS

Chapter IV
JESUS' TEACHING ANALYZED
Part XV

The ultimate value of every institution is the distinctly human effect—its value upon conscious expression.

—John Dewey.

WM. L. MOSS

The toiler cannot understand why our ministers of the gospel, almost to a man, shun any recognition of the existence of an economic problem in spite of the fact that a majority of their congregations are being daily faced with the vexing and at times destructive struggle it forces men into. Working people know that the struggle for existence is the primal instinct; there is not the slightest doubt, in fact, among any class of thinkers about the first activities of mankind being a search for food. Religion is not a primary impulse; a man can live his entire life outside the pale of religion's influence, probably he won't live so happily nor so completely, but I say that he can exist without it. It is then a secondary and contributory impulse notwithstanding all its spiritual and cultural powers.

Although the toiler is asked to share the burden of the support of institutionalized religion—ministers' salaries, church buildings, church hospitals and other institutions, missionary work, etc.—he very quickly discovers when the test comes that not only does the church fail to help conserve his interests but openly turns its back on the very existence of an economic problem that vitally affects him. For this reason it is no small wonder that both Protestant and Catholic thinkers are viewing with alarm the fact that the church has lost ground and is continuing to lose ground. At least it is not making any widespread and sweeping advances. Dr. Louis H. Wetmore, speaking from the Roman Catholic viewpoint, has declared the church—he means his own of course—has failed to "establish a sane, balanced and just human society on this earth." The Christian Advocate, airing the Methodist viewpoint, comes to the conclusion "the working people are on the move, socially, economically and politically," and that "the economic motive, which is the motive of finding a chance to live, is the weightiest consideration in the minds of millions," yet "religion, unhappily, is already in the thinking of multitudes divorced from the cause of human welfare." Hence the masses of humanity—and this does not mean the "radicals" only—are "drawing steadily and with increasing current away from the church, Protestants as well as Catholics." Working people see, says this church paper, the church is not using its powers "to break the barriers that keep them from the life abundant." If the church is to live the working people must be shown that the church is fighting their battles against the wrongs of which capitalism is guilty. This must be done, concludes the Christian Advocate, "because it is the will of God that these people be saved." "If the world is to be a new world the principles of Jesus must be revived and applied to its problems." "The foundations of any economic system, where they are rotten with injustice and selfishness, must be removed and new foundations laid in the righteousness of God. Only on such foundations can the new order of a Christian society be reared." And only on such new foundations can the old church be saved. Let's save it—it is the one recognized force for good existing in the world!

INSURANCE AMENDMENT TO CALIFORNIA CONSTITUTION

The socialist party of California began the circulation of initiative petitions calling for an amendment to the state constitution to authorize the establishment of a system of unemployment insurance which will pay $10 a week to single men and women and heads of families, with an additional $3 a week for each dependent. The petitions will need about 205,000 signatures to put the amendment on the ballot, while only a majority vote is required to adopt it.

Public Ownership of Utilities

The people can't manage public utilities, utility propagandists say. This in the face of the fact that the people ARE managing utilities and doing it successfully. In Indiana, for example, according to a report of Lawrence F. Orr, chief examiner, state board of accounts, public-owned utilities in 1930 earned enough after paying all operating costs, setting aside depreciation funds and moneys for bond issues to have a surplus of approximately $4,000,000 which was paid into the general funds of the municipalities, thereby aiding in providing moneys other than property tax for municipal administration.

In one city the municipality was enabled to build a city hall from the surplus utility funds.

In another city the surplus funds from the municipally-owned light plant were turned into the general fund, and no tax levy was necessary for that fund.

This could hardly be called a record of failure. It can be matched in a good many other states, as well as in Canada and other foreign nations.

Proposed Federal Wage Cuts

Are advocates of Federal wage cutting mad? No, they are only very foolish, but it is easy to see why the question is being asked.

If the pay of Federal employes is slashed, the already chaotic business and price situation will be rendered even more chaotic and industry will receive a staggering blow. Private wage cutting is bound to follow on an unprecedented scale and purchasing power will receive a wallop that may be all but fatal, while unemployment, misery and starvation will increase.

No wonder the sanity of Federal wage cutters is questioned. Could madmen work more evil?

About Your Labor Paper

Only through bona fide labor papers may organized labor and the principles it represents receive the publicity earned by a long and courageous fight for public recognition. The daily press, whatever its stand regarding organized labor in its own plant, caters to a general class of readers. A labor paper appeals but to one section of the mass and in turn has a right to look to that section for encouragement and support.

Never was the necessity greater for co-ordination between the labor press and labor. Get behind your local labor paper, if you are so fortunate as to have one in your community, and help yourself and your organization by aiding those who aid you in an editorial and news way.—The Typographical Journal.

Progress of the Workers

By WALFRID ENGDAHL
Secretary, Twin City Carpenters' District Council

(From a radio address over station WCCO, Minneapolis, Minn., on "The Worker in Art and History." The address was sponsored by the Minneapolis State Federation of Labor.)

Scanning the history and the progress of the laboring class, we find a gradual change of the world in its attitude toward the common man. It will grow in momentum as time goes on. The day is at hand when he who toils will receive all the benefits and rights of his labor.

The labor movement is indebted with gratitude to the artists and writers of the last century for their undying art, which has inspired us on in our efforts to make humanity free. They have elevated our thoughts and lightened our task by their encouragement.

We are indebted to the thinkers who consecrated their lives to the causes of truth and humanity, who aided us in throwing off the shackles of superstition and fear and made our minds magnificent and free.

We are indebted to the scientists for their eternal vigilance in combating diseases and ignorance, transforming nature itself from the cold, indifferent enemy it once had been into a warm and helping friend.

We are indebted to all the inventors who have made it possible to produce for every material need of man, and lifted the heaviest burdens of toil from off our shoulders.

But first and foremost, we are indebted and thankful to the working people, who after long and weary hours of toil still had time and strength to dream and work for a better day. No glory was theirs, no immediate reward. Yet they labored to transform the best thoughts of the prophets into actual life.

Out of these dreams and thoughts was born the labor movement.

Many of our efforts have been crowned with victory; many remain yet to be finished.

We are waiting for the masses to lend us their helping hand.

Some day they will see the light, and will be drawn to our organization with irresistible force.

They will forget their petty jealousies and small personal grievances and will live and labor for the common good.

The labor movement reaches out its hands to welcome every one into its fold.

It has within itself the power to make good every promise, every great exalted dream and aspiration ever breathed in the breast of man.

It has the power to give all a most beautiful life, filled with kindness, love and tolerance.

It has the power to relieve humanity from hunger, insecurity, worry and want; to give freedom and justice to every man, woman and child, and to bring out of the hearts of man the noblest, the greatest, the most self-sacrificing thoughts and deeds.

GUILTY AS CHARGED!

Editor Labor World:

With genuine pleasure and much profit, I have just read the last edition of The Labor World and the artistic supplemental, "The Acid Test." All of the articles are highly interesting. The one by George Forbes, recalling President Gompers' final message, is worth more than the price of one year's subscription to the paper. For a number of years I have kept posted concerning matters pertaining to the craft by being a regular reader of your splendid publication and have often thought it would be profitable to our business and professional men generally if more of them would become regular subscribers and readers of your good paper.

With congratulations and all good wishes, I am,

Sincerely yours,
JAMES H. ANDERSON.

"COME DOWN!"

Editor Labor World:

It was with great pleasure that I found upon my desk this morning a copy of your recent special edition, and I hasten to congratulate you. I find this edition, "The Acid Test," a decidedly cheerful omen at this trying time, and it gives me a new faith in the rank and file of the American people.

I quite frankly confess that I have been no little worried at the turn in industrial affairs and have wondered just what attitude labor would take with regard to the depression. It is generally admitted that we are facing a crisis in American affairs and it is indeed gratifying to find that labor is standing firmly behind the principles of American government. Of course, you who know me so well, are aware of the fact that my interests are with and behind organized labor, and you can understand, perhaps, just how good I felt after having read the editorial written by yourself and the articles by Chester Wright, Holt Ross and others. I am for your movement exactly 100 per cent.

Apart from my appreciation of your edition for its value to labor and the labor movement, I cannot quite forget my newspaper training and I want to also congratulate you upon the splendid job of editing and make-up. Your special edition is a triumph and you cannot be criticized if you should give yourself a hearty pat upon the back.

Yours sincerely,
NICK G. GIVENS.

Did you ever notice that the guy who gets up on his hind legs and proclaims loudly to the wide, wide world that this wonderful depression has "came and went," is the very one who has a good job, at steady pay, and has not, as yet, suffered that dreadful sinking sensation?

I see where Brother Fred Arn, of the Immaculate Chamber of Commerce, is objecting to the city's laying the Brainerd sewers by hand labor, and wants the job let out by contract to the cheapest bidder. Do you know if Mr. Arn stands ready to feed these common laborers which that plan would keep out of a job at which they could feed themselves and families? I pause for an affirmative reply!

What's the difference in paying a few cents more taxes to enable the city to put laborers to work and digging down into your jeans for dollar after dollar to keep the soup stations functioning? Looks as if some one was suffering from a "penny-wise-pound-foolish" complex, don't yon think?

Today is Thursday, May 5, and the Lindbergh baby case is still on the "front page," and the baby is still not restored to its parents after some ten weeks' absence. There's a moral in this somewhere! I am worried now for fear the parents may not know the youngster at sight when and if restored to them. Wouldn't that be dreadful?

Jobs and Men

A Series of Contributed Editorials Discussing Industrial Conditions.

THE guiding principles of the four railway brotherhoods and the American Federation of Labor radically differ at several points, and for this reason no true insight can be had into what the labor movement as a whole in the United States is like unless one has an understanding of what constitutes these differences. It must be remembered, to begin with, that there is really no comparison to be made between the federation and the four railway brotherhoods. The brotherhoods are spread over a limited field (the nation's railway systems) and their organizations govern only a specific class of workers. On the other hand, the American Federation of Labor comes in close and intimate contact with every imaginable class of workers (including some railway employes) from the Atlantic to the Pacific oceans and from the Canadian to the Mexican borders, and in its international capacity is in direct touch with the workers' organizations of the entire North American continent. But since, as was mentioned at the beginning of this article, there is so much difference between the guiding principles of the brothedhoods and the federation and because, in spite of the differences, both the brotherhoods and the federation are successful beyond a single doubt it is best for the labor unionist to know what these differences are. No organization ever created is perfect, and there is much both the brotherhoods and the federation can learn from each other as we shall see later on.

In the fact that both the brotherhoods and the federation have depended on their conservatism for their growth there is little difference between them. But the railway brotherhoods' conservatism is based on an absolute faith in established institutions. That is, they lay stress on the personal conduct of their members and make no protest against the exploitation of any class of workers, whether in their own line of employment or outside of it. In fact, the efforts of the Brotherhood of Trainmen to become a business organization has incurred the criticism of the more radical labor unions.

Anti-Unionists Checked in War On Electricians

Court Decision Setback to Fight Against New York Local Union, Granting Only One Request of Union's Opponents.

New York City, May 5.—The large scale "fishing expedition" organized by anti-union lawyers in behalf of fifteen suspended members of Local Union No. 3, International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, was stopped by the refusal of Supreme Justice Frankenthaler to grant the ex-members' demands. Following the strategy set up by anti-union leagues in their effort to destroy wage insurance and working conditions of the Electrical Workers and to strike at the international organization, John Holly Clark, Jr., attorney for the fifteen suspended members, asked for the following, among other objectives:

Opportunity to cross-examine thirty-five officers of the local; opportunity to cross-examine H. H. Broach, president, International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers; opportunity to examine the books and financial records of the local union; opportunity to examine the books and financial records of the Union Co-operative Insurance association.

The order of the court granted Clark authority to examine the thirty-five local union officers. The other three demands were denied.

Characteristic of this open shop drive on the Electrical Workers, who have been out in front of the battle for working conditions in New York, has been the timing of the court case with the demand by the Building Trades' Employers' Association of New York for a 35 per cent general cut in wages. Characteristic, too, has been the general indifference or open hostility of the press. Wild allegations of racketeering made by the attorney in his application for discovery and intent were featured with bold face headlines by such papers as the New York Times, and others, as if the irresponsible allegations were established facts. Frank P. Walsh is representing the local union of the Electrical Workers.

The case is attracting wide attention because it is believed to be a part of the strategy of antiunion leagues to lay a basis for new court decisions. The antiunion leagues have succeeded in writing into court decisions the theory that labor unions on strike against nonunion goods and competition is a conspiracy in restraint of trade. The new anti-injunction law passed by this congress makes ineffective this former strategy. These leagues now seek to write into court decisions between unions and employers are racketeering and a conspiracy in restraint of trade.

LABOR QUERIES

Q.—Who said: "It is a widely accepted principle that the government as an employer should on its own account and as an example take the lead in establishing just and practical conditions of employment?"

A.—This is from a declaration by the 1920 convention of the American Federation of Labor.

Q.—Does organized labor believe that victims of occupational diseases should come under provisions of workmen's compensation laws?

A.—Yes. The 1918 convention of the American Federation of Labor said: "We believe that trade and occupational diseases should be considered in law as in fact an obligation of industry, and that those who contract for the employment of the workers should be required to provide compensation to those suffering from health impairment due to their employment.

DEATH OF FRANK McCARTHY.

Boston, Mass.—Frank H. McCarthy, one of the best known trade unionists in the New England states, died here on March 23, 1932.

He was born Feb. 23, 1864, and became a member of Cigar Makers' Union No. 97, Boston, on May 12, 1883.

He represented both the Massachusetts State Federation of Labor and the Boston Central Labor union in conventions of the American Federation of Labor since 1900, when he was a delegate from the Boston central body.

Mr. McCarthy was an active organizer of the American Federation of Labor since 1902. He was a forceful speaker, a staunch trade unionist, and contributed greatly to the upbuilding of the labor movement.

Go to your Union Meetings

Don't say you are too tired; the weather is bad; or there is too much quibbling and "hot air" to interest me.

Every time you miss a meeting and leave it to the other fellow to look out for your interest, you are doing an injustice both to yourself and your organization.

Your views on especially vital subjects should be represented in discussion and by vote, and the only way for this to be done is for you to be at your union meeting.

You are responsible for the good and welfare of your organization, and non-attendance of union meetings on your part is not excuse enough for you to voice your opinion after a measure has been passed. It is then time for you to concur in what has been done and work in harmony with the officers and other members of your union.

Go to your union meetings regularly and induce others to do the same, because one important thing to remember is the meaning of the slogan:

"United we stand, Divided we fall."

MORE ABOUT EPOCHAL MEET

sentatives of the gratefulness of the convention for their warm welcome, Mayor O'Connor advanced into a discussion of the unemployment problem and labor's interest in it. There were, he pointed out, more unemployed in this country than ever before in its history. It was labor's duty to conduct a search into the causes for the present economic ills causing unemployment and the depression generally, he said.

He cited as the worst feature of this situation that this country was not a poor one, that there was every evidence of great wealth in it, and that still there were many citizens without food.

Mayor O'Connor drew the applause of his fellow delegates when he asserted although the United States government did not owe any of its citizens a living, it did owe them "the opportunity to earn their living."

It was the Knoxville mayor's belief that much of the present situation was due to fear. He said it was that feeling among those who did have jobs that they might at any time lose them, that limited their purchasing to the extent of exaggerating conditions.

Mayor O'Connor attacked the policy of curtailment of business activity and reduction of salaries and wages. This was the product of a "philosophy of fear," he said, and was being followed at a time when a "reassertion of courage" was needed.

He declared, in presenting causes for unemployment, that the machine as it had been used by employers in industry, had been an important factor in bringing about the unemployment situation. He said that the employer had been short-sighted in using the machine to throw men out of work. He had overlooked that the goods he was producing must be consumed, the speaker said. Mayor O'Connor asserted that the eight-hour day was a thing of the past.

Suggesting a stand on concrete proposals for the improvement of the labor situation, Mayor O'Connor requested the convention to support the La Follette bill, which would appropriate $5,500,000,000 for a national program of public construction.

Mayor O'Connor said that such a building project would so resuscitate the building materials industry and place so many idle men to work as to "lead the way" for the whole nation out of the depression. He also suggested to the convention that it reaffirm its previous stand on the disposition of Muscle Shoals and Cove Creek and a state constitutional convention.

Following an invocation by the Rev. W. H. Rollins, Mr. Hill formally opened the meeting.

He reviewed briefly the history of the federation and expressed his pride in having been able to "contribute some small part" to its organization.

Mayor Howse suggested as a relief to the farmer and other debtors to banks, trust compnies and other loan organizations that "in place of foreclosing his mortgage would extend it five to ten years." He opposed warmly the cancellation by this nation of its European loans.

Mr. Cheek assured the convention that there existed in Nashville "a splendid feeling" between the business of business had found that their interests were in line with those of labor, he said, and added, "the chamber of commerce will never foster anything detrimental to labor."

John P. Murphy, president of the Nashville Trades and Labor council, extended a welcome to the visitors in behalf of the local group. Mayor Ed Bass, of Chattanooga, and City Commissioner O. I. Kruger, of Memphis, were introduced to the convention and made a few remarks.

William Turnblazer, of Jellico, was elected delegate to the convention of the American Federation of Labor. The delegates voted to hold the next convention in Memphis on the first Monday in May, 1933.

In a brief speech of general indorsement, Commissioner Love told labor delegates that he had enjoyed his attendance at their convention and that his department stood ready to co-operate in any way.

A few of the delegates fired questions at the commissioner on specific matters regarding to administration of his department. State Senator Carl Larsen wanted to know of the commissioner how labor should go about effecting a modification of the workmen's compensation law, which the commissioner had said should be changed. The legislator pointed out that labor had devoted many years in this effort without success. The commissioner replied that the state organization should begin work now and not wait for the legislature to assemble.

William Turnblazer, president of District No. 19, United Mine Workers, took the commissioner to task about the enforcement of the "wash house mine law," pointing out that certain operators continued to violate it flagrantly. Commissioner Love declared that he had turned this matter over to his chief mine inspector, and knew nothing of violations. He assured Turnblazer that all laws would be forced impartially and that violations would be dealt with when called to the department's attention.

Ben Williams, representative of the United Mine Workers, reviewed the situation of the miners in Harlan county, Kentucky, and made an appeal for contribution for food and clothing for unemployed miners in that section, early in the morning's session.

He was followed by Hollis Reid, member of the Locomotive Firemen's union, and chairman of the nonpartisan committee, who told the convention that his committee would act in selecting a candidate to support in the coming gubernatorial election following the period for qualification. He said he felt that several now in the field would drop out at this time.

Reid was warm in his praise of the support for labor interests in congress rendered by this state's delegation. Virtually every man in the delegation was active in support of legislation in the interest of organized labor, he said.

Stating his own attitude in the state gubernatorial contest, Reid was, regardless of any other consideration, for "cleaning out that crowd of buccaneers on Capitol Hill," whom he would always oppose, he said.

A Presentation Of Labor's Point Of View by Radio

Leading Organization Officials Telling the Story of the Efforts of the Workers to Build a Bigger and Better America.

In its crowning radio achievement the American Federation of Labor took the air over the entire Columbia coast-to-coast network on May day for a series of ten great broadcasts, the sum total of which will be a complete presentation to the American people of the whole story of organized labor in its effort to build a better America.

The broadcasts synchronize with the fiftieth anniversary of the founding of the American Federation of Labor. They will be given at 1 p.m. eastern standard time each Sunday for ten weeks, concluding on July 3. And that is but half the story. On Labor day a series of ten broadcasts will begin.

No such story of labor has ever been told. Each broadcast will hold the air for thirty minutes and the arts of music and drama will be called upon for embellishment and to help express the high drama of labor's great contribution to American progress.

"The offer of the National Advisory Council on Radio in Education and the Columbia broadcasting system to arrange through the workers' education bureau for a nation-wide broadcast of labor's contribution to the development of the American nation is a service of the first importance," President Green said in Washington.

Program Stirs Enthusiasm.

"The program which has been arranged will be accepted by labor throughout the country in a most enthusiastic and appreciative way.

"It is my purpose as president of the American Federation of Labor to recommend to the millions of organized workingmen throughout this land that they arrange listening groups in their labor temples, their unions or their homes, for this labor series, so that the story of labor's contribution to American civilization, in which countless workingmen have made and are having a part, may be presented to the entire nation."

No Wage Cuts for City Employes in Nashville.—Howse

No city employe at Nashville has been asked to accept a cut in pay, "voluntarily" or otherwise, according to Hilary Howse, mayor of the capital city, and furthermore, as long as he is mayor, said the Nashville executive, none will be made.

Mayor Howse made the above statement in addressing the convention of the state federation of labor Monday morning. The city of Nashville, he said, is in splendid financial condition, a city owned and operated light plant and waterworks saving thousands of dollars annually for the taxpayers. Surplus from the operation of the waterworks, the mayor said, constitutes a large portion of the funds which are used to make up the budget.

The Nashville executive declared that only one man had personally appealed to him for a reduction in the tax rate—and this was a citizen who inherited a large fortune from his father and grandfather, and "never earned a dollar in his whole life."

Mayor Howse's address was a feature of the convention.

TEXAS LABOR ASKS EFFECTIVE PREVAILING WAGE RATE LAW

Contractors on State Work Pay Skilled Workers 25 Cents and Laborers 10 Cents Per Hour — "Lowest Bidder" Fallacy.

El Paso, Tex., April 28.—A demand for the enactment of an effective state prevailing wage rate act similar to the federal law on this subject will be one of the major questions before the Texas State Federation of Labor convention which convenes at Fort Worth on May 9.

Opinion of labor leaders in favor of such a law has been accentuated by the reactionary wage cutting contractors in the execution of recent contracts awarded by the board of regents of the University of Texas. It is claimed that the successful contractors, whose bids were between $800,000 and $900,000 below the estimates of the state engineering department, reduced wages more than 50 per cent, paying skilled mechanics 25 cents per hour and unskilled workers 10 cents.

"This in itself," declares the editor of the El Paso City and County Labor Advocate, "is ample proof that not a single successful bidder on this work contemplated recognizing existing wage standards."

In reply to the contention that on the basis of the low bids the contractors were compelled to cut wages, the Labor Advocate says: "The question that underlies all is the fact that these bids were accepted under the rule of the 'lowest and best bid.' This in turn is accepted on the basis of who can make bond.

"This theory is basically unsound on any work, and especially so upon public work.

"It cannot be correct that the state would be party to undermining the working and living standards of its own citizens.

"Legal machinery must be evolved that will guarantee proper work to the state and a proper wage to the worker. Industry has been and is being constantly safeguarded in its rights of return and the worker must seek similar protection. The plea of personal liberty must not be prostituted to permit public license."

ICE WAGON DRIVERS WIN STRIKE AGAINST WAGE CUT

The union ice wagon drivers and helpers of Rochester, N. Y., won their strike against wage reductions which the Rochester Ice and Cold Storage company sought to impose upon them. Under the new agreement route drivers and supply truck drivers receive $33 per week of six days and helpers not less than $24. Union members will be employed exclusively except when the union is unable to supply experienced men, in which case the company may employ such men as it needs provided they receive a working permit from the union.

The ice wagon drivers and helpers belong to the International Brotherhood of Teamsters, Chauffeurs, Stablemen and Helpers of America.

A. & P. STORES PICKETED.

The Meatcutters' union of St. Louis, Mo., established militant picket lines in front of the Atlantic & Pacific stores in a campaign to persuade the management to employ union meat cutters. The pickets carried umbrellas and paraded the sidewalks in front of the stores advising the public that the concern employed non-union men at the meat counters.

LONGSHOREMEN STRIKE AGAINST REDUCED WAGES

New York.—A strike of longshoremen was called here against a wage cut of 8 and 10 cents an hour on regular and overtime work, respectively, which was decreed by the officials of Clyde-Mallory, Morgan and Savannah coastwise steamship lines. The companies had been paying 75 cents an hour for a 40-hour week and $1.10 an hour for overtime. The new schedule was 67 cents an hour and $1 for overtime.

The strikers, over 700 in number, were enrolled in the International Longshoremen's association by Joseph P. Ryan, president of the association. The affiliation ended a breach with the association that developed in 1920.

The Eastern Steamship and Old Dominion Lines, also engaged in coastwise trade, it was stated, maintain the old scale of 75 cents and $1.10.

It costs no more in effort or money to secure UNION GOODS and SERVICE, if you demand and insist on them.

Forbes Furnishes 'Inside Story' On Convention Delegates

Realizing that "Old Ananias" is a piker in the minds of the average labor skate when compared to a delegate returning from a convention, I should head this column "Believe It or Not," but as that is my normal attitude whether I am coming or going I will omit it.

A labor convention is a serious matter and a very important event, and the delegates from Chattanooga were sincere and earnest in their efforts to perform their duty and return home with the satisfied feeling of a duty well done, and no doubt they did, but there always are a few little things that happen to the best of them that they never tell, and it is the function of this column to drag them out and spread them on the minutes of the convention.

I'll start with myself. I was all puffed up with the fact that I was the only delegate called upon to talk at the banquet, and foolishly bragged about it to my sparring partner, Bill Eckenrod. Bill was sore anyway because I beat him shooting pool and playing five-up, so he said, "That was just the way the committee had of proving the statement made by the toastmaster, Albert Hill, that it was to be a speechless banquet."

It was suggested that Paul Aymon be elected president of the W. C. T. U. after his speech on modification. It made Ben Williams say, "I'd give a dollar for a good cold bottle of Budweiser right now."

The sergeant-at-arms had to call Walter Gardner down several times for laughing out loud and acting boisterous. I asked Walter what was so humorous and he said he was thinking about Jimmy O'Connor, his roommate, obtaining transportation under false pretenses. He had told Eckenrod, in whose car he was riding, that he had a quart in his grip but when he got to the room the grip contained just the regulation wardrobe of the molder—a deck of cards and a pair of sox.

It certainly was a relief that Bob Cooke had a good seat with an unobstructed view of the ballet dancers. You know, he is a specialist in dimples.

Bill Turnblazer, president of District 19, United Mine Workers, said he sure would like to take Brother Kennedy, of the Machinists, up to Harlan county, Kentucky, with him as an organizer after listening to him talk on the resolution about the back-tax collector.

When Arthur Kamin, who transported the Cookes to and from the convention, was asked by Bob if he had room in his car to take our old friend "Brush" Smith home, he replied, after due reflection, "Yes, if Mrs. Cooke will ride in the front seat with me." After much discussion it was decided to let Mike Nicholson put a safety device over Brush's whiskers and put him in the front seat with Kamin. You see, Kamin is a very careful driver and he was afraid the whiskers would get tangled up in the steering wheel.

The best speech made at the convention was made by the delegate from the Barbers' union of Chattanooga. Now, don't misunderstand me—I did not say a Chattanooga barber. They had to send to Indianapolis and import our old friend Bill Birthright to represent them.

Bill Canada and Elmer Crosby had a big argument coming back from the sightseeing trip to the Hermitage. Bill thought that Mrs. Jackson had poor judgment on interior decoration and should have put "oatmeal" paper and a "moray" ceiling on the back parlor, while Crosby said the electric wiring was far from being modern, but maybe President Jackson was a believer in Hoover economy.

As Bill Lange, the Machinist, was riding up to his room on the tenth floor he asked the elevator operator what would happen if the elevator should slip and they fell clear through to the basement. "Well, in a case like that," replied the elevator boy, "I guess I would lose my job."

* * *

T. R. Cuthbert, chairman of the label committee, in making his report said, in effect, "If the delegates here that did not have on union label clothes were forced to leave there would not be enough left to conduct this convention." In this statement I feel that he was wrong—I am sure that he and I could have run it by ourselves.

BUSINESS ORGAN DENOUNCES PUBLIC WORKS CURTAILMENT

New York, May 5.—Curtailment of public construction work is unsparingly condemned by the Business Week, leading journal of business news, in an editorial declaring that such curtailment is not only a "powerful deflationary force intensifying the depression, but is the most stupid kind of economy to practice."

"As we have repeatedly pointed out in these pages," The Business Week says, "the only possibility of promoting business recovery is by restoring the purchasing power of consumers, and this means applying credit or currency expansion at that point in the economic circle at which it will do so most speedily—which is in the hands of the unemployed."

The editorial continues:

"Public business is almost the only business left which can expand in the present situation unhampered by considerations of immediate profit. Suspension of public construction as well as most other aspects of economiserilness in public expenditures, is cutting off the principal remaining source of consumer purchasing power and the sole immediate possibility of expanding employment.

"Economy" Increases Idleness.

"With prospects for total construction for this year running about three billion dollars below 1931, and for public improvements almost 1.5 billion dollars below, it looks as though, through the suspension of public construction, we shall be adding a million workers to the ten millions unemployed at present.

"This is not only a calamity deplorable from the point of view of the interest of business generally in maintaining a consumer market; it is equally deplorable from the point of view of sound economy. We may marvel at the immediate mental confusion of steel manufacturers who speed their salesmen on the sanguine task of selling more structural steel with sermons for the public ear on the necessity of cutting public expenditures which now constitute almost the sole source of steel demand; or of automobile manufacturers who cheer attacks of after-dinner speakers on governmental extravagance, a large part of which has consisted in laying tracks for cars that could not otherwise have been sold. We may smile at the unconscious inconsistency of subsidized shipbuilders who sign reports calling for less government in business, although it alone keeps them in business.

Public Penury Unjustified.

"But why should a people in a country plunged into widespread distress in the midst of a surplus of private productive capacity and idle capital, natural resources and even consumption goods sufficient for unparalleled prosperity allow itself to be stampeded into panic and public penury by such appeals? It knows that the complex, fast shifting civilization in which it lives needs and will need an ever-increasing amount of social services provided by public improvements made necessary by new types of transportation and intensified urban congestion. It knows that it can purchase these improvements now much more cheaply than ever before, that it can profitably draw upon its future productive power to buy them now, and that it would be real economy to do so. It knows that there is no more reason why government should expect to cover the cost of capital investments out of current revenues than for a private business concern to do so. Not only will these improvements pay for themselves, on the same principle that good roads have, out of the increased social efficiency they result in, but they will help to pay for themselves in the increased employment, purchasing power and business activity upon which all tax resources are ultimately based.

"Common Sense Economy."

"Increased expenditure for public improvements during depression is common sense economy; its curtailment is a form of social suicide, of which a free, sensible and progressive people should be ashamed."

CANADIAN RAILWAY LAYOFF PUTS 1,600 ON RELIEF FUND

A. Farmilio, secretary of the Trades and Labor Council of Edmonton, Canada, criticized the Canadian National railways for laying off 1,600 men in their shops west of Winnipeg. Mr. Farmilio, who spoke on behalf of the Edmonton local of the Brotherhood of Railway Carmen, said the men had only been working fifteen days a month for a long time and would be immediately thrown on unemployment relief funds for support of themselves and their dependents. He claimed there are thousands of cars needing repairs in the Edmonton district, and strongly condemned the government for the anomaly of laying off thousands of men from the national railways and then planning a direct relief budget amounting to many millions of dollars to take care of the jobless and their families until next December.

Davis-Kelly bill; and be it therefore further

Resolved, That we, the delegates to the thirty-sixth annual convention of the Tennessee Federation of Labor, assembled in Nashville, Tenn., go on record in favor of the Davis-Kelly bill and request the support and vote of senators and congressmen and urge them to use all efforts to have these bills passed and enacted into law during the present session of congress and a copy of this resolution be incorporated in the records of the subcommittee on mines and mining and also the minutes of the congressional Record. We further recommend that a copy of this resolution be furnished the president of the United States, Senator McKellar, Senator Hull and each congressman of the state of Tennessee and congressman of Pennsylvania, also the subcommittee on mines and mining.

FOR REPEAL OF TOBACCO TAX.

Resolved, That we go on record as favoring the repeal of the state tobacco tax, and the legislative committee of the Tennessee Federation of Labor is instructed to urge the repeal of this tax at the coming session of the state legislature.

PROTEST REDUCTION FEDERAL BUILDING.

Whereas, it has come to our attention that it is proposed among other economy moves to reduce the building appropriation bill now pending in congress in an amount in excess of two and one-half billion dollars, and while we are not unmindful that rigid economy in governmental expenditures at this time is highly essential and that our public servants advocating proper economies are to be commended, still the above mentioned proposal will add materially to unemployment and will tend to an abandonment of our traditional policy of building for permanency; and,

Whereas, we are of the opinion that our government should not lend itself to any project that will cause more unemployment; therefore be it

Resolved, That the Tennessee Federation of Labor in its thirty-sixth annual convention call this matter to the attention of the Hon. Kenneth D. McKellar and urge that he use his influence against any such proposal; be it further Resolved, That the state non-partisan committee be requested to handle this matter with the Hon. K. D. McKellar.

REAFFIRM POSITION ON NORRIS BILL.

Whereas, the Norris bill for the operation and further development of the Muscle Shoals (Wilson dam) received a clear majority of the United States senate and congress, and the president vetoed this measure; and,

Whereas, the passage of this act would be of vast benefit to the entire United States and to a large degree bring about normal conditions in agriculture and industry everywhere; and,

Whereas, the power interests have circulated the report that the Norris bill will never become a law and have circulated the further report that the Wilson dam is obsolete and have sought every means of publicity to discredit the potential value of this project that is now largely dormant; and,

Whereas, the power companies, namely, the Tennessee Power and Light company and the Alabama Power and Light company, now obtain power from one unit of the Wilson dam and pay the United States government two-tenths of a cent per kilowatt hour and for merely distributing this power charge the citizens of adjacent cities a few miles away a minimum charge of 10 cents per kilowatt, the most extraordinary profit extracted from the people since the world began; therefore be it

Resolved, by the Tennessee Federation of Labor on this 4th day of May, 1932, That we demand that our United States senators and congressmen redouble their efforts to pass the Norris bill over the veto if necessary of the president; and be it further

Resolved, That any and all licenses granted to build power dams on the Tennessee river should be invalidated and not permitted to further enslave the people of the south; and be it further

Resolved, That copies of this resolution be forwarded to the United State senators and congressmen for Tennessee and that copies be forwarded to Senator George N. Norris, the president of the United States and the president of the American Federation of Labor.

WORKERS ADVISED TO PAY POLL TAXES.

Whereas, the power of the ballot is one of the most important weapons of defense and offense in the hands of organized labor; and,

Whereas, certain vicious elements are conducting a systematic campaign tending to shift the burden of state and federal government on the shoulders of the poverty-stricken working men and women of our state and federal governments; and,

Whereas, organized labor has been repeatedly deceived by false promises from those in high places, who have aligned themselves with the powers opposed to the masses; therefore be it

Resolved, That the Tennessee Federation of Labor, in session at Nashville, Tenn., this the 4th day of May, 1932, to go on record as urging all locals and central bodies throughout the state of Tennessee to adopt a policy of urging all members to pay their poll taxes and to exercise their right of franchise to the end that only those candidates for office who are known friends of organized labor may get the united support of union men and women.

Organizing Listening Groups.

Energetic steps are being taken for organization of listening groups throughout the nation. Unions and central bodies everywhere will gather to hear the broadcasts and to discuss them. The effects of the whole series will be to picture organized labor, not as a so-called class conscious sect, but as a great body of American citizens, battling for human progress as a living, vital part of the nation, eager for its perfection.

The labor press is being called upon to devote special attention to this tremendous, record-breaking series. Schools, universities and colleges are planning listeners' groups and discussion periods. Clubs and civic societies of all kinds are doing likewise.

Labor Seeks Jobs, Not "Handouts"

Ottawa, May 11.—Organized labor is protesting against the decision of the Dominion government to limit its duty in the crisis to grants for the direct relief of unemployed on the ground that it is cheaper to provide the jobless with just enough to keep them alive than to carry on works involving the payment of wages sufficient to enable workers to expend a little energy.

PLAN GREATEST CELEBRATION OF LABOR DAY

Elaborate Program Will Be Presented This Year.

SENATOR McKELLAR INVITED TO SPEAK

Central Body Reiterates Opposition to Wage Cuts at Busy Session.

Plans looking to the greatest celebration of Labor Day ever attempted by local trades unions were started at Central Body Monday night in a preliminary report of members of a committee named recently to have charge of the affair. Paul J. Aymon, general chairman of arrangements, stated that while nothing of a definite nature could be announced at this time, steps have been taken to insure the appearance here of some of the finest attractions available, and a gala day is being planned, with something to interest local citizens from early morning until midnight. Senator K. D. McKellar has been invited to deliver an address during the afternoon. W. A. Witt, who will have charge of the barbecue which it is planned to stage at noon, assured the delegates that he could, if necessary, feed 20,000 people at a remarkably low cost to the individual, and, with Mr. Witt in charge, success of this feature of the day is practically assured at the start.

None but major attractions will be brought into the city for the celebration, it was said, and it is planned to advertise them throughout the section, with the idea in mind of bringing to Chattanooga several thousand visitors from neighboring cities.

REITERATE PROTEST OF CITY PAY CUTS.

In a general discussion of recent "voluntary" pay cuts for members of the Chattanooga fire and police departments, it was recalled that Central Body had vigorously protested such action when it was first publicly announced that the cuts were planned, and the protest was apparently ignored. At the conclusion of the discussion, a motion prevailed which instructed the executive board to appear at city commission meeting and notify the board that the position of organized labor on wage cuts has not been changed.

WILL GUARANTEE SCALES ON POSTOFFICE JOB.

Secretary Cuthbert reported that he had received communications from several building trades unions, in response to a query from a local bonding company, stating that these unions would not attempt to alter wage scales during the progress of the work on the new postoffice building, if organized labor is employed. Motion was made and passed that Central Body will not support any local union which might attempt to raise wage scales on this particular project, after the work has started. This was amended to read that the right is reserved to protest vigorously any and all deviations from established wage scales locally.

OFFER CO-OPERATION TO THEATER UNIONS.

As noted in another column, present situation with respect to the closing of several movie houses consumed a great part of the meeting Monday, and at the conclusion of the discussions executive board was instructed to render any possible assistance to the unions involved if such becomes necessary. Position of the unionists in the controversy was unanimously indorsed.

RECORDER'S NOTES COVER ROUTINE.

A number of routine matters of more or less interest are noted by the recorder, as follows:

New delegates obligated are: Soft Drink Workers, W. F. Strickland; Moving Picture Machine Operators (alternate), C. E. Curle; Lodge 56, Machinists, W. L. Wergin, Herman Metz, F. H. Palmer; Painters, M. H. Ortwein.

Label committee reported several kinds of union-labeled smoking tobacco is obtainable at the Easy Way grocery, 417 Market, and 2310 McCallie. Also that Curlee clothes for men, handled by the Koblenz store in East Chattanooga, are still listed as "unfair" by the United Garment Workers.

President Perry reported on conference with Hon. W. G. McAdoo, and delivered a message from the former presidential candidate to the trades unionists of Chattanooga. "Stay in there and fight," was, in brief, the message of the distinguished Chattanoogan to the workers of his home city.

Secretary was instructed to write Senator K. D. McKellar inviting him to deliver an address in Chattanooga on Labor Day.

Delegates to Tennessee Federation of Labor made an interesting report on the deliberations of that body, and stated their conviction that much good will come of action taken by the convention at Nashville.

Theater Employes Marking Time as Houses Stay Dark

Officers of Local Unions Deplore Effort of Power Company Attorney, Employed by Theater Owners, to Inject Bitterness Into Unfortunate Situation — Thank Many Friends for Assurances of Confidence, and Ask That Public Withhold Judgment and Await Developments.

Chattanooga moving picture projectionists and stage employes are marking time pending the outcome of action taken last Saturday night, when seven picture houses were closed, five of them ostensibly closing their doors because of a demand on the part of the stage employes that the Independent Theaters company comply with provisions of a contract which called for employment of a maintenance man at the American theater, which course, the unionists say, is a protection to the public against fires and accidents of various kinds. Two houses operated by the Bijou Operating company also are closed, apparently in a sort of "sympathetic" strike against the unions.

Members of the organizations involved declare that no other issue was brought forth until Sunday morning, when a typical union-haters' statement was issued on behalf of the theater owners by T. Pope Shepherd, local attorney, who is also counsel for the Power Interests, in which it appeared that the theater operators take exceptions to practically all advances which the unions have made in wages and working conditions since the installation of sound pictures in the various houses.

The organizations involved declare that the newspaper publicity was the first notice they had that the theater owners were planning to demand a return to "silent-days" conditions, and possibly to that time when one operator was compelled to stay in a stuffy, insanitary booth for some twelve hours each day for a compensation of possibly $12 or $15 per week, when the danger of fires and consequent panic of audiences was ever present.

The real cause for the "disturbance" is described by the employes as "ruinous competition," which has gone "from bad to worse" during the past few months, and which has led to the inevitable end.

"The theater employes," said J. Burson Lowry, president of Local 259, "regret this unfortunate situation, but it is not of our making, and we are, as always, ready to do anything within reason to assure the reopening and profitable operation of all the closed houses. We have dealt with local theater operators for many years, and while we have at times disagreed with them, we have always managed to iron out any differences. That these theater operators should now take the drastic step of closing their houses and employing corporation counsel, who cannot possibly know anything of our mutual problems, as their mouthpiece before the public, we regard as regrettable, but we have no other course to pursue than to await the pleasure of our employers, with whom we still have signed contracts.

"On behalf of the organizations involved, I want to take this opportunity of thanking our many friends, both in and out of the labor movement, for their expressions of confidence and assurances of support. Particularly do we wish to express our heartfelt appreciation for the action taken by Chattanooga Trades and Labor council Monday night, which assured to us the undivided support of our fellow trades unionists and their many friends throughout this territory."

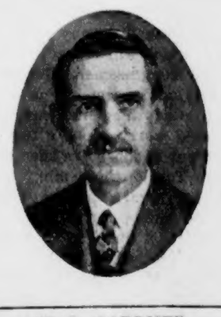
Miss Alice Goode Slowly Recovering

Miss Alice Goode, 16-year-old daughter of George Goode, well-known local trades unionist, is recovering slowly from a serious operation at Physicians and Surgeons hospital. It was said that Miss Goode will probably be taken home Friday or Saturday.

DEPORTATION OF 2,000 IDLE INDIANA MEXICANS IS PLAN

Hammond, Ind.—What to do with 2,000 jobless Mexicans whom the employers here have thrown into the unemployed army is a puzzle for the officials of the county. Judge Maurice E. Crites, of the Lake county superior court, presented to the county board a plan whereby the Mexicans could be deported to Mexico at less cost than it would take to keep them alive by charity. He said the United States government would supervise the transportation of the Mexicans to the border, where the Mexican government would take charge of them.

Vice-President



W. L. GARDNER

Mr. Gardner was elected vice-president of the Tennessee Federation of Labor at the annual convention of that body in Nashville last week. Mr. Gardner needs no introduction to local trades unionists, having been a member of Chattanooga Typographical union since 1890, and during that time having filled practically every office within the gift of the membership. His record in Chattanooga Trades and Labor council is almost identical, both in length of service and in the official places which he has graced.

"Walter" is not addicted to blowing his own horn, but when there are particularly knotty problems to solve he's a good one to have hanging around—and he's always in reach when organized labor is to be served. He will make a valuable addition to the official family of the state body.

SOCIALIST LABOR PARTY PICKS REYNOLDS FOR PRESIDENT

New York.—The national convention of the socialist labor party nominated Vernie L. Reynolds, a former steamfitter, as its candidate for president of the United States. J. W. Aiken, of Boston, was nominated for vice-president.

W. T. Grant Store In New Spring Garb

Patrons of the W. T. Grant store, Market street, were greeted this week with a fresh, "springy" atmosphere, due to the fact that the big store has been completely renovated and brightly painted and decorated throughout. The "job" was the product of union labor strictly, the following members of Local 226 having participated: John Smith, George Goode, A. L. Surrett, George Sivley, Albert Jones and W. A. Howell.

With the above crew of competent craftsmen in charge, "it had to be good," and it is understood Manager Lyons is highly pleased with the results.

MASS. RADICAL JOBLESS MAKE DEMANDS OF STATE

Boston.—Approximately 500 unemployed demonstrators from various sections of Massachusetts marched to the heavily guarded state house and sent a delegation to confer with Gaspar C. Bacon, president of the state senate, relative to their request for the convening of a special session of the legislature to enact unemployment relief legislation.

Their resolutions prepared for Gov. Ely asked unemployment insurance at the expense of the employers and state government; immediate relief at the rate of $15 a week, to be paid pending the passage of the insurance measures, this money to be raised by reducing the salaries of all state officials to $2,000 a year, by transferring all funds now used for military and police purposes, and by suspending payment of state debts to bankers, etc.

The unemployment relief program also included a state construction program providing for tearing down all slum dwellings and replacing them with decent homes to be rented at low cost, and entirely free to the unemployed.

MAKES APPEAL FOR STATESMEN AS LEGISLATORS

O'Guin Decries Indifference of People.

HOLDS STATE GETS SERVICE PAID FOR

Too Much to Ask Man to Sacrifice Interests for $4 Per Day Job.

By W. W. O'GUIN

I notice that some of the substantial citizens of Hamilton county are interesting themselves in the selection of candidates for the legislature. This is well and good and even more interest should be taken.

Too many times I have seen the interests of Hamilton county suffer through lack of intelligence and integrity on the part of her lawmakers. When I say intelligence I mean not only native ability but I especially refer to a lack of information regarding the procedure and activities of the legislative body.

Not so long ago I observed the part which an educated and otherwise intelligent legislator played at Nashville and it was pitiful indeed. He lacked understanding or sympathy with the legislative spirit and his efforts virtually all came to naught.

Some of the qualifications of a worthy legislator are honesty, intelligence, and a general understanding of legislative procedure. This can be obtained only by having been in contact with the law-making bodies during their deliberations.

Not only are these essential at this time but the legislator who can best serve the people this year must be one who is acquainted with the administrative machinery of the state, the functions of each department and the cost of its operation.

Any man who does not already have this information should obtain it and be able to discuss it freely during the campaign, before the voters put their confidence in his ability to help them.

I once heard a governor in his inaugural address say: "Last year the state collected $12,000,000 from the taxpayers. This is a stupendous sum and should be, can be and will be reduced."

After serving two terms this man who made the marvelous promise was exacting in taxes from the people of the state more than $25,000,000 annually.

When I heard the inaugural I remarked that any man who would make such a statement was either too ignorant to be governor or too big a falsifier, because I knew that the state could not reduce this revenue and meet its obligations as the result of demands for roads and schools and other progressive matters.

"Mediocrity" describes the average legislator, I regret to say, and I feel that I am charitable in saying it no stronger. I have said this to my friends who have never attended a session of the legislature: "You should attend one session any way, and thereafter you will have a great deal more respect for the county court, for it is an august body compared to a Tennessee legislature."

I have heard men vote "aye" on bills and have gone to them immediately and asked: "What did you vote for?" They would answer: "I don't know. What was it?"

I had a member come to me during the latter half of a session of which he had been a member and ask how to substitute a senate bill for a house bill. In other words, he wanted me to tell him the parliamentary procedure necessary to make this change and pass the senate bill in the house. I told him and he undertook the task and had it not been for the kindness of the speaker he never would have been able to make his motions.

Now this man had been there during the greater part of a 75-day session and could not place his bills on final reading.

I would not be misunderstood. There are always some strong, fine outstanding members of the legislature but they are often overwhelmed by the weaklings.

BARBERS OPEN NATION-WIDE MEMBER DRIVE

Will Continue Indefinitely, Says President.

SHANESSY APPEALS FOR LOCAL SUPPORT

Declares Progress of Union Justifies Every Effort of Individual Members.

An intensive organization and educational campaign recently launched by the Journeymen Barbers' International union will be carried into all corners of the United States, according to James C. Shanessy, general president, and will continue until every competent craftsman eligible is enrolled in the organization.

A statement sent out by President Shanessy this week calls upon every member of the craft to do his bit in the campaign, and to lay aside all minor personal and individual opinions that conflict with a program for the benefit of the whole membership.

Mr. Shanessy sums up the purpose and intent of the campaign in the communication, which follows:

Ahe you milling about in a sea of despondency?

Snap out of it!

Let's face facts as they are! The economic structure that we thought so enduring has come crashing about our ears. We are suffering a depression and how shall we get out? This is one answer—through proper leadership!

There is an old saying that every crisis brings forth the leadership that saves the situation. Some men thrive and develop on adversity. It brings out their latent abilities and stimulates their courage. Like the pine tree on a rocky bluff that wars with the elements and grows strong, these men move to the front when put upon their mettle, and eventually emerge as real leaders.

Conflict wears off the rough edges and gives the potential leader a new slant on things. It makes him more tolerant, and he more deeply appreciates harmony, and peace, and good will.

In this campaign which the Journeymen Barbers' International union has started, and which is to be continuous and an integral part hereafter of this organization's policies, leaders are expected to be developed.

No cause can march forward when captained by mediocre leaders or without leadership. There must be a directing force, a consecration of effort, a continuous display of interest and an understanding of the principles involved. The cause must be first in every thought and action of the leader. Abraham Lincoln gave not only his thought and every fiber of his being to saving the states from disintegration, but gave his life. Consecrated leadership.

Never before in the history of the trade-union movement in America has the need of leadership been more apparent. The Journeymen Barbers' International union, entering a campaign to last continuously, in its efforts to bring every nonunion barber and beautician into the fold, will develop more leaders. We have intelligent and loyal members consecrated to the great work of bettering their union and bettering the conditions of their brother craftsmen. These men are capable of leading because they have the cause at heart and only need to exercise their talents.

Leadership in any crusade does not necessarily mean cyclonic action, nor the sounding of trumpets and beating of tom-toms. It does mean the ability to harmonize dissonant elements; to be charitable when considering the views of others; to pluck out the thorns of irritations that so often disrupt our local unions.

But a real leader cannot hide his light under a bushel. In time it will shine. If a leader appears in your local union and you see he has the best interests of the membership at heart, if he is filled with the zeal of the cause he represents, if his judgment is sound and his reasoning plain, he is worth listening to and worth following.

If such a man is a more capable leader than you are stand aside, for the cause of the Journeymen Bar-

The Social Ideals of Jesus of Nazareth

An Interpretation

Written for The Labor World
By WILLIAM L. MOSS

CHAPTER IV
JESUS' TEACHING ANALYZED
Part XVI

He drew a circle that shut me out—
Heretic, rebel, a thing to flout.
But Love and I had the wit to win:
We drew a circle that took him in!
—Edwin Markham.

Laboring people have a just quarrel with the church. There is a vast amount of truth in the charge they make that the nation's "Christianity" is after all merely a "front" worn for respectability's sake and in reality hides the exploitation of them as a class. Further, it is also true as charged by some laboring men and women, that our wealthy people as a class are not wholeheartedly assisting in any kind of program of economic progress for the masses.

WM. L. MOSS

All this and more is true, but does the method of righting these manifest wrongs lay in laboring people refusing to have any connection with the church simply because the church has upon its rolls members who are guilty of social wrongs? I do not think that withdrawal from the church is the best method by which these wrongs can be righted. The church belongs to the masses as much as it does to the self-styled "select few"—in fact, it is the precious possession of all men and for the masses to voluntarily relinquish the slightest hold on it is to rob themselves of a part of God's great gift to mankind.

By all means laboring people ought to remain in the church. As little as they might think about it the old Hebrew religious background out of which the Christian church developed was the scene of unceasing religious war carried on by the prophets in defense of the common people. Their demand for "righteousness" of which we read in the Old Testament was largely a demand for what we call "social justice." Cheating of widows, low wages, land monopoly, usury and hardness of heart (i. e., absence of social conscience in a man) were all bitterly and energetically assailed by the prophets of Israel. Read the books of Amos, Hosea and parts of Isaiah and be convinced.

Furthermore, it was this righteousness which was the "law" Jesus said must be fulfilled—every jot and tittle of it! The majority of the members of the church of Jesus' day disagreed with Him about this, just as a great many of our church members disagree with the idea today. It was not long before Jesus had entered a synagogue for the last time. But remember this, Jesus did not voluntarily withdraw from the church. He was in the habit of regularly attending synagogue service on the Sabbath. Jesus was kicked out of the church.

After He was thrust out of its doors what was His attitude? Certainly not the attitude of so many today who have turned their backs on the church. Jesus did not start belittling religion, He did not slander the church, He did not strive to keep others from fellowship with it. His sense of social opportunism would not permit him to do this. In spite of men's enemity toward Jesus He still loved them. By His life and words manifested through love He drew the circle that would have taken them in had they been but willing. Shut from out of the church Jesus set His whole heart and soul to the task of uplifting and ennobling religion instead of dragging it down through destructive criticism.

What Next!

A new device recently demonstrated "vacuum-cleans" the hole in rock drilling and removes the silica dust, so dangerous to the lungs of rock drillers. The cost of installation is offset by increased drilling speed and the sale of the collected silica dust which has several commercial uses.

Just as Easy—Like That!

Charlie Schwab is the funny face, for sure. Here he makes a speech, this rich fellow does, in which he says what we need is to get to work and sweat.

Yes, isn't that fine? Isn't Charlie the wisenheimer? That's all we need—just to get to work and raise a sweat. Eight millions of Americans would just like to have the chance to do that. Eight millions would like the chance to raise a sweat and earn some money.

Charlie says that's all they need, but they KNOW they need it—BUT FIRST OF ALL THEY HAVE TO GET THE CHANCE. They tramp around for months and they hand Charlie Schwab a sneer as they say, Yeah, try and get it!

Yes, they need a chance to raise a sweat, but TRY AND GET IT!

* * * *

Charlie goes on to say there are no rich in this country any more, at all, at all.

What a line of tripe! No rich! No Rockefellers, no Morgans, no Kahns, yes, and maybe no Schwabs? What is this steel magnate handing us? Where does a bird get off with prattle like that?

All WE need to do to get rid of our troubles is to raise a sweat, and there are no rich any more! They have called people crazy for a lot less than that.

As the weeks roll by it becomes clearer and clearer that those who have financial and industrial power have no sense. They don't know what is going on and they don't know what is in the wind.

It requires a lot of hunting around to find more stupidity than the high and mighty ones are showing in this crisis.

* * * *

Put this down: Right now those that HAVE are getting more every day. The few big ones are getting bigger. The little ones are being washed out and somebody has to get that which is washed out. And they do!

Schwab probably was resorting to bunk, hoping to make the miserable ones feel less miserable.

It doesn't work. It's no go.

We aren't being fooled today as much as we were being fooled three years ago.

There are plenty of men in business, industry and finance who see and admit the truth. Their numbers grow. In their midst this Charlie Schwab looms up like a jackass and may the jackass forgive the comparison.

Robert G. Ingersoll and Labor

The ashes of Robert G. Ingersoll were buried in Arlington Cemetery, within sight of the nation's capital, on May 4. The ashes rest in Arlington because of his military service in the Civil war.

The occasion will recall to older labor leaders the glowing tribute that great liberal paid to the workers in their age-old struggle for liberty.

He died in 1899. The guiding principle of his philosophy was "that no nation founded upon slavery, either of body or mind, could stand."

He clearly saw that the unequal distribution of wealth constitutes the major element in the downfall of civilizations and the servitude of the toilers. Among his utterances one finds this crisp truth:

> "Whoever produces anything by weary labor, does not need a revelation from heaven to teach him that he has a right to the thing produced."

Ingersoll passed away thirty years before the revolutionary introduction of labor-displacing machinery and the equally revolutionary increase in the wealth-producing capacity of the workers created an unemployment army numbering millions. But he visioned even then the truth so apparent today that machinery is not a social blessing when the increased wealth resulting from its use is appropriated by those who own and control industry without either reduction in the hours of labor of those who do the work or increase in their wages to enable them to enjoy larger and larger portions of the wealth increase.

Here is what he said on labor-displacing machinery and its relation to the workers:

> "Just as life becomes more complex and as every one is trying to accomplish certain objects, all the ingenuity of the brain is at work to get there by a shorter way, and, in consequence, this has been an age of invention. Myriads of machines have been invented—every one of them to save labor. If these machines helped the laborer, what a blessing they would be! But the laborer does not own the machine; the machine owns him. That is the trouble.  We have got into that contest between machines and men, and if extravagance does not keep pace with ingenuity, it is going to be the most terrible question that man has ever settled."

If Ingersoll were alive today he would substitute "purchasing power" for "extravagance" and "wealth production" for "ingenuity," so that the last sentence in the quotation would read:

> "We have got into that contest between machines and men, and if purchasing power does not keep pace with wealth production it is going to be the most terrible question that man has ever settled."

The "terrible question" predicted by Ingersoll is here. We have nearly nine million workers totally unemployed, depending for a living for themselves and their families on the scanty rations furnished by charity organizations, and many millions more working part time with the consequent lowered living standards.

The "terrible question" is not only here, but it is unsolved. Those who own and control our business institutions have no remedy of their own and refuse to apply the shorter work week and work day demanded by labor to provide jobs for all the unemployed with wages high enough to permit the workers to buy ever-increasing portions of the ever-increasing amount of wealth which is largely produced by them.

The millions of jobless are living under an insufferable form of slavery. This condition must be ended. Ancient civilizations fell because larger and larger portions of the population became slaves. If American civilization is not to take a similar course, unemployment must be ended.

Cure Unemployment Now!

All talk of curing unemployment by legislation or by mysterious methods of credit expansion, revival of foreign trade and such devices is just sheer bunk.

There are measures that will help a great deal, some of them legislative. It is a sure thing that falling commodity prices make for lower wages and more unemployment, though a great many workers do not see that. As for foreign trade, altogether too much is made of that. The greatest market Americans have is in the United States and that always will be the case.

For permanent cure of unemployment we must have a greatly shortened work-week. Right now we need a 35-hour week. The American Federation of Labor properly and wisely points out that the depression has speeded up the use of machinery, so that at the end of the depression there will be more PERMANENT unemployment than ever. Not only must there be a shorter work-week now, but there must be an acknowledged policy of continuously shortening the work week and of continuously readjusting ALL wages UPWARD, if there is to be permanent cure for unemployment.

Stupidity still rules in most of the employing world. But by next winter the whole charity mechanism will break down. If there is any sound sense among America's leaders they will labor as they have never labored before to bring about sound cure before that breakdown comes.

The Rising Cost of Government

For months the people of the United States have been bombarded with propaganda regarding the alleged menace of the increasing cost of government.

We have been told that the interests of the taxpayers demand that appropriations for the administration of government institutions be drastically reduced. In many instances the propaganda comes from anti-labor employers whose main contribution to our social life consists in endeavoring to bring about wholesale debasement of the living standards of the working people by drastic wage cuts.

People who are caught by this propaganda overlook the fact that no small part of the increased cost of government comes from the necessity of protecting the masses of the people from the greed of the business groups, who are loudest in the tax-reduction demand.

A striking instance of this is found in a recent event in the District of Columbia.

A man and his wife were killed in their home by carbon monoxide gas escaping from a hot-water heater without a flue outlet into the chimney.

The coroner's inquest revealed that the plumbing contractor had failed to make an opening from the chimney crock into the flue lining. This neglect provided no escape for the gas, which backed up into the room and killed the couple.

It was also revealed that a number of houses in which the plumbing was installed by the same contractor had the same flue defect. The only reason the occupants of all of these houses were not killed was the fact that the others did not use gas heaters. The plumbing inspector testified that a large number of gas heating boilers had been installed in residences without any inspection "other than the casual visual inspection which may be given by the building inspectors." He said his inspectors had not required mechanics to remove flue pipes to examine chimneys. It was assumed that plumbing contractors knew their business and made proper flue outlets.

As a result of the facts revealed at the coroner's inquest the district commissioners, in order to prevent further fatal accidents caused by faulty gas pipe connections on heaters, issued an order providing that flue pipes from gas water heaters shall not be connected until the flue has been inspected and approved by an inspector of the office of the inspector of plumbing.

The plumbing inspector said that the administration of the new rule would require the employment of additional inspectors.

The employment of the additional inspectors will increase the cost of government in the District of Columbia.

The increase has been brought about by the necessity of having representatives of the people survey the work of building contractors in order that occupants of buildings shall not be killed by the failure of contractors to properly install plumbing appliances.

An honest survey would reveal that a considerable portion of the increase in the cost of government has been made necessary by tragedies similar to the one which caused the commissioners of the District of Columbia to increase the number of its plumbing inspectors.

It is needless to add that the people will insist that the social welfare and the public welfare activities of federal, state and municipal governments shall not be curtailed to satisfy the sophisms of the lower-cost-of-government propagandists.

DEPRESSION

When the frost is on the window, and the holes are in your sock,
And your pants are thin as paper, and your overcoat's in hock,
And the flour bin is empty, it is then you get the shock
Of republican prosperity—so early in the morning!

When all the votes are counted, and the tally's on the sheet,
And the crowds are all scattered, and the extra's on the street,
And you wake up in the morning, and look at the sheet,
You're old "Vox," the same old jackass, so early in the morning!

There's a happy time a coming, when we're free of all our cares,
When we leave this world of sorrow,
and climb the golden stairs,
But I surely wish to Heaven, with my soul all full of tears
I could see this mess all straightened, so early in the morning.

I reckon there'll be a lot of congressmen out of jobs this fall and greatly increase the army of the unemployed, which will be bad, especially for the congressmen. But, somehow, I just can't seem to run a temperature, or anything like that, about it. I should worry about a few congressmen out of jobs! I've been out of a job now for lo, these many weeks (it seems years!) and I haven't noticed one single congressman that seemed to give a tinker's dam whether I even got another or not!

Why didn't our beloved chamber of commerce and that association of contractors kick and raise the devil about all those sewers out in South Chattanooga being laid by hand—and by city employes? The need of the worker is more acute now than then. They're like all the rest of us now, fighting for a job. If the contractor wins this fight it will be an outrage. Those who wilfully cause more delay and consequent starvation of those willing to work, and try to take profits to themselves by machine substitution for manual labor at this critical period are skating on very, very thin ice! If they fall through they have only themselves to blame.

Husbands Don't Matter.

NEW PROMOTION RULE WILL BENEFIT FEDERAL WORKERS

Washington.—The U. S. civil service commission announced that hereafter employes in the government service will be given preference in filling vacancies in higher positions.

The ruling was recommended by the Council of Personnel Administration recently created by President Hoover. One of the functions of the council is to fill the higher positions by transfer rather than by original appointment. It is claimed this new policy extends career possibilities in the federal service.

Q.—Is union membership growing in Great Britain at the present time?

A.—Writing in the organ of the Trades Union Congress General Council, Herbert Tracey recently said: "Trade union membership is beginning to show an upward tendency. Notwithstanding the prolonged industrial depression, some unions are able to report substantial accretions in numbers."

WASHINGTON CARPENTERS STRIKE AGAINST WAGE CUT

Washington.—The Carpenters' District council has ordered its members to strike against a 30 per cent wage cut order issued by the Master Builders. The union scale is $11 per day. The employers undertook to knock it down to a maximum of $8 and a minimum of $5. Local union officials said the strike would be directed by the national office of the United Brotherhood of Carpenters and Joiners of America, whose representative was already here.

RUN-DOWN and WEAK

"I began taking Cardui when in a weakened, run-down condition," writes Mrs. F. S. Perrit, of Wesson, Miss. "I took one bottle, and I seemed to improve so much that I sent for six bottles. After I had taken the six bottles, I seemed entirely well.

"Before I took Cardui, I was nervous, restless, blue and out of heart. I felt depressed all the time. After I took Cardui, all this disappeared.

Railroad Would Use U. S. Money For Labor-Displacing Machinery

Washington, May 12. — Here's pretty near the classic example of how the next depression is now in the making.

A big railroad, which must for the moment be anonymous, applied to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation for a loan of three million dollars.

The railroad proposed to apply half of this loan to retirement of money borrowed from banks and which the banks demanded—matured bond issues, in other words.

The railroad proposed to use the remaining half—a million and a half dollars—in installing machinery equipment which would enable 140 men to do the work now done by 1,400 men!

HOUSE ELIMINATES WORST FEATURES OF "ECONOMY" BILL

Washington, May 12.—Organized labor has won a big victory in its fight against reducing the pay of federal employes. The sweeping omnibus "economy" bill, designed to make drastic cuts in the pay of federal workers, has been torn to shreds in the house and sent to the senate minus many of its most objectionable features. If it had passed as presented by the special house economy committee, the bill would have been a tremendous blow to wage and working standards of government workers.

The bill retains a provision for an 11 per cent pay cut, but the house exempted salaries of $2,500 and below, thus, in effect, setting up $2,500 as the minimum income needed by a federal worker. Efforts to cut salaries beginning at $1,000 were decisively beaten. Labor will continue its fight against any pay cuts.

Proposals to eliminate Saturday half holidays and furlough workers in accordance with President Hoover's plan, were rejected by big majorities.

As finally approved and attached to the legislative appropriations measure, the omnibus bill gives the president authority to reorganize the government departments; provides for consolidation of all public works, except rivers and harbors; cuts federal pay 11 per cent, with $2,500 exemption; eliminates overtime government pay; reduces printing costs for $4,000,000; suspends army and navy transfers; reorganizes the shipping board; cuts federal travel and subsistence allowances; forces retirement of superannuated employes, and suspends automatic pay increases.

Organized labor is not at all satisfied with the bill as passed by the house, but looks to the senate to reject objectionable provisions, including those eliminating overtime pay and suspending automatic pay increases. It is felt that the stand taken by the house against ruthless assaults on government employment standards will have its effect and that the senate will vote for maintenance of high federal pay and working standards.

SURVEY SHOWS PAY CUTS FAIL TO HELP BUSINESS

New York City, May 12.—Organized labor's contention that wage cuts do not bring prosperity is upheld by the results of a survey just completed by the National Association of Cost Accountants.

Wage cutters argue that pay reductions lower costs, thus stimulating sales, increasing production and boosting workers' earnings. The survey, as pointed out by the Business Week, leading business news organ, seriously challenges the wage cutters' theory.

Plants which have made the most drastic wage cuts since 1929 have worked the fewest hours, while those making the smallest cuts have operated most nearly on full time schedule, the cost accountants' investigation disclosed. The median wage level of the group was from 90 per cent to 94 per cent of 1929 levels at the end of 1931. In plants within the median group, working hours were 79.8 per cent of those for 1929 and the number of workers employed was 66.1 per cent of 1929 pay rolls. In every group which has made higher wage cuts, fewer hours were worked, while in plants with smaller wage cuts, more hours were worked.

In addition, plants which cut wages most drastically had to lay off the most men, so that plainly the wage cuts did not help their business. In plants where wages were cut 75 per cent or less of 1929 scales, the average number of employes at the end of 1931 was 29.2 per cent of 1929 pay rolls. In plants where wages were above 1929 levels, the number of employes was 68.8 per cent of those employed in 1929.

In the plants surveyed, average hourly rates had declined 5.6 per cent; working hours per week, 20.9 per cent; weekly earnings, 25.3 per cent; number of workers employed, 29.8 per cent; total wages paid, 47.5 per cent.

Decrease in earnings of employes of various industrial groups included in the 257 plants varied widely: Food, 15 per cent; printing, 22.6 per cent; paper, 25.9 per cent; leather products, 33.4 per cent; stone, clay and glass, 7.7 per cent; chemicals, 27 per cent; rubber products, 38.4 per cent; machinery, 62.9 per cent; forest products, 57.8 per cent; transportation, 54.6 per cent;; non-ferrous metals, 54.8 per cent.

The percentage loss of workers' earnings varied in different states covered in the survey. New England had the smallest loss. Percentage loss was least in Hawaii, Kentucky, California and Indiana.

SENATE BEER BILL CONDEMNED AND APPROVED IN REPORTS

Washington. — Wide divergence of views on the beer question was shown in the majority and minority reports of the senate manufactures committee on the proposal to legalize the manufacture and sale of four per cent beer.

A committee majority of seven, in a report prepared by Senator Hatfield, of West Virginia, asserted it would "add to enforcement difficulties" and retard rather than aid economic recovery.

A minority of four, in a statement prepared by Senator Metcalf, of Rhode Island, declared that beer would promote temperance and provide both revenue and employment. It denounced prohibition, which we described as "driving the people to hard liquors with a resultant increase in drunkenness, deaths from alcoholism and general lawlessness."

The minority group estimated that immediate employment would be given to a minimum of 500,000 persons and possibly more than 1,000,000 within a brief period following the proposed legalization of beer and asserted that the government would derive an annual revenue of around $1,100,000,000 from beer taxes.

Go to your Union Meetings

Don't say you are too tired; the weather is bad; or there is too much quibbling and "hot air" to interest me.

Every time you miss a meeting and leave it to the other fellow to look out for your interest, you are doing an injustice both to yourself and your organization.

Your views on especially vital subjects should be represented in discussion and by vote, and the only way for this to be done is for you to be at your union meeting.

You are responsible for the good and welfare of your organization, and non-attendance of union meetings on your part is not excuse enough for you to voice your opinion after a measure has been passed. It is then time for you to concur in what has been done and work in harmony with the officers and other members of your union.

Go to your union meetings regularly and induce others to do the same, because one important thing to remember is the meaning of the slogan:

"United we stand, Divided we fall."

MORE ABOUT BARBERS' DRIVE

bers' union is greater than any man in it.

The dullest member should know that we have a goal well worth reaching. The wisest member can know nothing more important to his well being.

Workers outside our union fold are waiting to me led into the light. They need to be told about our principles and what real trade unionism will do for them. They will, many of them, be stiff-necked or dull of comprehension. It will take courage and the priceless ability to keep everlastingly at it to achieve our only objective—getting that person to become one of us and thus better himself.

America is a great country—a giant among nations. For the time being, it is sick with doubt and apprehension. The trade union movement, as a part of our social and industrial aspect, has suffered along with this great country.

The labor movement now has a wonderful opportunity to show this nation what it really stands for. The Journeymen Barbers' International union hopes to lead the way. The cause of all organized labor is our cause. All members are our brothers.

Thus our great organizing campaign gets under way. Our membership will renew its trade union spirit. Almost every local union, after getting into the thick of the organizing fray, will develop some outstanding leader in that particular community. That is what our organization—and in fact any organization—must have.

So let us all be of one mind and one accord. Let those who can serve in the front lines get there; let those who are hewers of wood and carriers of water take their places. Eventually balance will be established; trade unionism will have taken another step forward, and the Journeymen Barbers' International union display a solidarity that will be the envy of all.

Thus we must all do our part in this great work.

"Small service is true service while it lasts;
The daisy by the roadside, by the shadow which it casts,
Protects the lingering dewdrop from the sun."

Hard headed thinking—careful consideration of every step of the way—loyalty to our cause—consecrated leadership—unselfish service—a constant pulling together as of one mind and one accord—these are the things that will make our membership drive a success!

Then up and at it.

MORE ABOUT MAKES APPEAL

Is it any wonder? Tennessee pays $4 per day for legislative service and she is getting about all she pays for. If the state would pay decent wages for men to stop their regular vocations and go to Nashville and stay seventy-five days as lawmakers, they would probably get men of intelligence and integrity to serve them.

Another cause for the extravagance and unbusinesslike methods in the legislature is that the public does not seem to give a hoot about the type of men who represent them. A man may attend one session and make a rotten record and be re-elected without opposition.

The most disgusting of all the types of lawmakers is that whose members camp on the doormat of the executive office. I remember having heard members of the legislature say: "I am for whatever the governor wants, right or wrong." In other words, they have no convictions of their own, no mind of their own, but are mere puppets in the hands of the governor.

What we need at Nashville next January are men who will stand up and fight for what they believe to be right whether it pleases the governor or not. The voter must use discretion in selecting men. Give no heed to the demagogue who stands for all things in order to get votes and will be bound by nothing after his election.

Above everything, avoid electing men who are to be the tools of some individual or interest.

I saw three men vote to pass an odious election law which they bitterly opposed because an attorney who controlled them told them to do it. He told them to support it because he represented a large utility and the governor had warned him that unless he supported this measure the taxes on his utility would be greatly increased.

"God give us men," as representatives in the next session of the general assembly.

OLD-AGE PENSIONS ASKED FOR DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

Washington. — Delegates representing 12 social agencies in the District of Columbia urged the district commissioners to endorse the bill introduced by Senator Capper, of Kansas, for old age pensions here. At present old people without means are sent to the poorhouse. Senator Capper is chairman of the senate committee on the District of Columbia.

MORE ABOUT

MR. ARN WINS

Still another paragraph states that Bernard M. Baruch, prominent New York financier, described Robinson's plan as "sound, necessary and effective."

A jobless Chattanoogan remarked Thursday that if the chairman of the chamber of commerce "taxation" committee could be induced to switch the dial on his radio for a few moments from the White House to the halls of congress, and have lunch for a day or two at Judge Fleming's flophouse instead of at the Mountain City club, he might change his impressions as to the "universal acknowledgment" as to public works, and as to the need for appropriations to provide work for hungry men and their families.

Big Danger Seen Unless Congress Provides Relief

A. F. of L. Spokesman Tells Senate Committee Government Must Act Quickly — Social Workers Picture Acute Want.

Washington, May 12.—"If something is not done and starvation is going to continue and perhaps increase, the doors of revolution are going to be thrown wide open and leaders of the country ought to know it," Edward F. McGrady, speaking for the American Federation of Labor, told the senate manufacturers' committee. He appeared before the committee in behalf of the Costigan-Lewis bill to provide $500,000,000 for advances to states and municipalities for relief work.

Before Mr. McGrady spoke, social workers from New York, Chicago and Philadelphia had testified that local relief funds were failing and appealed for federal help.

"The administration ought to know that more than balancing the budget is needed. Bread and butter are needed. We want to get it through work, but if we can't do that we are going to get it anyway," McGrady said.

Labor Losing Patience.

Labor leaders, McGrady added, "have lost patience with the government's failure to provide relief.

"The employment situation is worse than at any time," he said, warning that next winter would be more serious than last.

"A number of uprisings in industrial cities have been tossed off by saying they were led by communists," he continued, "but most of those people know nothing of communism. What they wanted was bread."

Many of the social workers who testified were among those who appeared in support of federal aid several months ago, but there was one new witness, C. C. Carstens, executive director of the Child Welfare League of America, who said he had been opposed to federal relief, but now favors it.

"It is the only way to keep family life together," he said.

Relief Funds Near End.

A nationwide survey of conditions was presented by H. H. Lurie, chairman of the unemployment subcommittee of the American Association of Social Workers, which he said showed relief funds are "being spread thinner and thinner." He said:

"Relief has been continuously and gradually reduced so that whole families are getting an average of $2.39 a week."

Mrs. Helen Hahn Tyson, deputy secretary of welfare for Pennsylvania, said that funds and workers are inadequate in her state, that the need is extreme, and that "the American standard of living is a dream of the past for great numbers of people." She said conditions in Pennsylvania "beggar description," and that at least "1,000,000 persons are receiving or need aid."

Heart of Nation Not Touched.

Senator Costigan opened the hearing with a short statement.

"The session of congress draws to its close," he said, "and nothing affirmative or constructive has been done by congress or the administration.

"Famine has touched the mind, but neither the heart nor conscience of America."

BIG CORPORATIONS COULD HAVE ENDED DEPRESSION

United Action by Giant Industries to Use Surplus Funds for Employment Would Have Kept Millions of Wage Earners at Work and Averted Present Crisis.

By CHESTER M. WRIGHT

New York, May 5.—Had a moderate fraction of the surplus funds in the treasuries of corporations listed on the New York Stock exchange been used to finance employment, six million wage-earners could have been employed, the present crisis averted and an example set before the world.

Some of the best authorities in this city believe that, unless there is unforeseen change, a great many of the corporations that still have surpluses will be forced to utilize their full resources to avoid going to the wall.

Thus surplus money that could have been kept intact will go into wasteful efforts at salvation. Had a small part of the surpluses been used for employment a national calamity could have been avoided, while as matters stand many corporations will lose, not a small part, but all of their reserves.

The facts demonstrate clearly that America has suffered from the industrial misrule of one of the blindest autocracies known to history. If Nero fiddled, American industrialists have played jewsharps.

Banker Control Stands Out.

Going ahead the picture in an effort to find out why the corporate organizations of the nation have failed to see and seize their opportunity one fact stands out. There is scarcely an industrial corporation of size or importance that is not dominated by the presence of bankers on its board of directors and by banker control of either its finance committee or its executive committee, as the case may be. Moreover, the controlling committees are so interlocked that the policy of a single bank may run through as many as a hundred corporations.

It is conceded that the action of a single corporation, or even of a group of corporations, would not have saved the day for employment. But had there been a power of sufficient prestige, possessed of the courage and the initiative, to bring American corporations into united action, and doing the same thing on a pro rata basis, American unemployment could have been wiped out with scarcely an effort. So far have American institutions failed in the nation's greatest industrial crisis. The power to bring about action existed, but the initiative, or the courage, or both, were lacking. The eight million unemployed are still unemployed and the six million partly employed are still, with slight change, but partly employed.

Nine great corporations—and not all of them are among the greatest—have surpluses of roughly one billion, eighty million dollars.

Slump Could Have Been Ended.

Less than half the surplus of this little group of corporations would have kept one million men at work for half a year! It would have given them working time enough so that each man could have earned $500 in that half year. If he earned it he would have spent it and half a billion dollars would have run its course in the commercial channels of the nation.

It is clear that had the corporate leaders of the nation a year ago been called into conference and led to act in unison, perhaps the expenditure of 25 per cent of the corporate surpluses would have ended depression, whereas many of them now will use up all of their surplus funds, with depression still running its course unchecked.

The nine corporations whose aggregate surplus ran well over the billion on the face of their last statements are: B. F. Goodrich company, G[illegible] year Tire and Rubber, Firestone [illegible] and Rubber, Nash Motors, Anaco[illegible] Copper, General Motors, General E[illegible]tric, Radio Corporation and U[illegible] States Steel.

In addition, American Telep[illegible] and Telegraph, which has laid [illegible] 50,000 workers, made a profit of [illegible] 000,000 last year!

LOAN URGED BY CONTRACTO[illegible]
$1,500,000,000 PUBLIC WOR[illegible]

Washington.—The governing b[illegible] of the Associated General Contrac[illegible] of America recommends a $1,500,0[illegible] 000 federal bond issue, the proc[illegible] of which would be lent at cost [illegible] states, cities and other civic agen[illegible] for the construction of public [illegible] provements.

A "productive reconstruction [illegible] corporation," to be created by le[illegible] lation would administer the bond[illegible] sue proceeds.

The governing board reached [illegible] conclusion that many states and [illegible] ser civic agencies are willing but [illegible] able to finance work-creating [illegible] provements, and that they will d[illegible] provided they can raise loans at [illegible] interest rates. A Statement From Local 259, Moving Picture Projectionists, and Local 140, Stage Employes

Due to the closing of seven local picture houses a number of our members are out of employment.

Immediate cause of this situation, so far as we were informed prior to last Saturday night, was a violation of our agreement on the part of the management of the Independent Theaters company.

It appears, however, from statements published in the Chattanooga Times from T. Pope Shepherd, speaking for the theater management, that we must surrender wages and working conditions which we have built up over a period of many years before we are to be re-employed.

We have no desire at this time to go into a detailed defense of our position, but full information will be furnished our friends and the general public if and when such becomes necessary.

For the present, we ask that theater patrons withhold judgment and await developments.

In the meantime, we desire to thank our many friends among the citizenship for their expressions of confidence, and particularly our brothers and sisters of Organized Labor for their hearty assurance of support as expressed through Chattanooga Trades and Labor Council Monday night.

WORKERS' EDUCATION SECRETARY TO BE GUEST OF CENTRAL BODY MONDAY—SPEAKS AT COURTHOUSE

Spencer Miller, Jr., Nationally-Known Economist, Will Address Public on Unemployment and the Remedy Therefor—Trades and Labor Council Meeting Called Off to Honor Distinguished Visitor.

Spencer Miller, Jr., secretary of the Workers' Education Bureau of the American Federation of Labor, will be a guest of Chattanooga trades unionists Monday, and regular meeting of Central Body will be passed in order that Mr. Miller may be given the opportunity of addressing a public gathering at the criminal court room at the courthouse. The meeting will be held in the third-floor corner room.

At a special meeting of Central Body Monday night it was reported that the exact time of Mr. Miller's arrival had not been learned, and at presstime this information had still not been obtained. Program for the entertainment of the distinguished guest will naturally depend upon this point.

Mr. Miller is an economist of national fame, and is widely recognized as a deep and intelligent thinker. His work with the education bureau of the American Federation has been outstanding, and has commanded the attention of leaders in various lines of thought.

An institute and round-table discussion under the direction of Mr. Miller was a feature of the recent convention of the Tennessee Federation of Labor at Nashville. Participated in by leading economists of Nashville universities, the institute consumed almost a full day of the three-days' convention, and delegates were unanimous in the declaration that the innovation was one of the most educational and instructive features ever attempted by the federation. So much were the officers and delegates impressed with the affair that it is planned to devote one entire day of each future session to similar discussions.

Mr. Miller, aside from his technical knowledge of the subjects in which he is most interested, is an exceptionally entertaining talker with the ability to put force into his arguments, and the general public as well as local workers will find unusual interest in his address.

Further announcement, it was stated, will be made in the daily press, and officers of Central Body asked that The Labor World urge upon every trade unionist in this vicinity, as well as the general public, to hear the address of the federation official.

Local Labor Mourns A Faithful Friend

Passing, Wednesday, of Patrick W. Delaney, at the age of 80, was a matter for sincere regret by hundreds of local trades unionists who, if they did not know this substantial citizen personally, were well acquainted with his generally known attitude of fairness in his relationship with his associates and his employes.

Mr. Delaney came to Chattanooga in 1889 as general superintendent of the Ross-Meehan company, and after some four years of service with that concern he established the Eureka Laundry, which has since been operated — always, incidentally, as a strictly union shop.

Mr. Delaney was an honorory member of the Iron Molders' Union of North America, and enjoyed the respect and esteem of every member of the local union. He is survived by his widow, two sons, William P. and Frank T., and one daughter, Miss Julia, all of Chattanooga, and a brother, Daniel, of Auburn, Wash. Seven grandchildren also survive.

The Labor World speaks for the entire local labor movement in extending to the bereaved relatives of this good citizen heartfelt condolences in their great loss.

NEW ZEALAND UNEMPLOYED PROTEST AGAINST WAGE CUT

Wellington, New Zealand.—Discontent with the unemployment situation broke out again in Wellington when 4,000 men who had quit work on city relief projects in protest against a cut in the wage scale paraded with their wives and children to parliament house to present a protest petition. On their return march a few of the reckless marchers left the procession and smashed a few windows in Willis street, the main shopping center. Policemen and 100 special constabulary dispersed what the authorities called a "riot" in half an hour without serious casualties on either side.

Miners Negotiate New Wage Scale

Ben Williams, representative of the United Mine Workers in District 19, is in the Wilder field this week assisting local mine union officers in negotiating a new wage scale for that district. Joint contract in Fentress and Overton counties expires early in June, and Mr. Williams states that no trouble whatever is anticipated in the signing of a new pact. Most cordial relations between employer and employe exist, he said, and the mutual feeling of good-will has been increased during the past year of union operation for these particular operations.

Aymon, Cheek Speak At Knoxville Confab

Paul J. Aymon and W. E. Cheek, president and secretary-treasurer, respectively, of the Tennessee Federation of Labor, returned Thursday morning from Knoxville, where they had been for several days on business for the state body.

Incidentally, the labor chiefs were invited to and did address a public mass meeting in the sister city, called by Mayor O'Connor to discuss the question of federal relief for the unemployed.

Mr. Cheek will remain in Chattanooga until Saturday morning.

Wann Funeral Home Being Redecorated

Interior of Wann's funeral home, at 660 Georgia avenue, is being completely renovated and redecorated this week by two of the famous Witt brothers, W. A. and G. S.—or, if you prefer, "Zeke" and "Skinny."

The Wann company, it is said, always specifies organized labor on any project of this kind, which is, of course, assurance of a high-class job.

Organized Labor To Be Employed On Big Projects

Executive Officers of Central Body and Local Building Trades Unions Make Effective Campaign for Workers---Expect Postoffice Job to Be "Fair"--Week's Budget of News Creates Spirit of Optimism for Future Employment Conditions.

Lacking only official confirmation by one local union, an agreement was consummated this week which completely unionizes one big construction job which had been started by non-union workers in nearly every craft, and assures to members of local trades unions exclusively the construction of at least one other large project for which contract has already been let and actual work begun.

Following a series of conferences between executive board of Chattanooga Trades and Labor council, representatives of various building trades crafts, business men and contractors, the new Arcade building, Market street to Broad, which was officially declared "unfair" shortly after the preliminary work started some three weeks ago, became a 100 per cent. union project, all non-unionists being laid off and replaced by members of locals in good standing. After the formal action by one local mentioned above, there remains only the formality by Chattanooga Trades and Labor council of officially removing the project from the "unfair list."

A second item of major interest to local workers is the assurance that the new $100,000 Sears-Roebuck building at Sixth and Market streets, will be "100 per cent. union." For many weeks officials of Central Body, working in co-operation with various building trades unions, have conducted a campaign to "sell" representatives of the big mail-order house on the idea that the use of union labor on the project would be both right and profitable. On behalf of this concern, it should be said that their reaction to the claims of the union representatives was very gratifying, and every consideration was given to the workers' arguments.

The building, however, is to be erected for Sears-Roebuck by the Chattanooga Trust company, and the officers of that concern also must be given full credit for their fair-minded attitude in awarding the contract to a general contractor who would assure the employment of organized labor in the building operation.

Work of tearing down the building at Sixth and Market streets has already begun, and the actual construction will begin immediately when the site has been cleared. While the new Sears-Roebuck local home will be only two stories and basement, it will cover the full block between Market and Broad on Sixth, and will be a creditable addition to the more modern buildings in the downtown section.

Coincident with the announcements outlined above, Chattanooga trades unionists were elated with the news that the low bidder on the new million-dollar postoffice building was a firm which has for many years used union labor exclusively in big building projects throughout the country. Ralph Sollett & Sons company, of South Bend, Indiana, who were the lowest bidders, it will be remembered, erected the beautiful and modern American Trust and Banking company building at Eighth and Market street, which gave employment for several months to large crews of local building tradesmen of the various crafts.

Although, as stated above, official confirmation of the agreement made by officials was yet to be made by one of the locals interested, it is felt that such action is a mere formality, and assurance of employment for a substantial number of union workers has served to create an optimistic atmosphere regarding the prospects for sustained employment during several months to come.

Another item of interest in the budget of good news for the week came in announcement from officials of Local 226, Painters, that E. M. Murphy, local contractor who for many years was the largest employer of members of this craft in Chattanooga, but who several months ago "broke" with the organization, is again in the fold, having signed the Painters' agreement this week after conferences with union representatives.

Chattanooga trades unionists are very well satisfied with the outlook, confident that the above and other recent developments indicate that a solid foundation has been built against the time when business turns that corner and finds Old Man Prosperity ready to begin making up for all the time which he has lost in the past two years.

SEVEN RAIL UNIONS ADVOCATE 25-YEAR WAR DEBT MORATORIUM; SIX ORGANIZATIONS OPPOSE

Railroad Workers Will Be Obliged to Ask Dole Unless Immediate Unemployment Relief Steps Are Taken, President Is Told—Other Unions Oppose Moratorium Plan.

Washington, May 19.—Railroad labor will be obliged to demand a dole unless immediate steps are taken to increase employment and relieve distress, heads of seven big railroad unions told President Hoover in an appeal to the chief executive to move for a 25-year moratorium on war debts owed the United States as a means of encouraging foreign trade.

That the plan for a moratorium on war debts did not meet with the approval of all the railroad labor organizations was stated later by the leaders of six unions who conferred with the president and told him their organizations were emphatically opposed to the moratorium proposal.

Members of the delegation which appealed for a moratorium included D. B. Robertson, president of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen; S. N. Berry, Order of Railway Conductors; A. F. Whitney, Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen; T. C. Cashen, Switchmen's Union of North America; E. J. Manion, Order of Railroad Telegraphers; J. G. Luhrsen, American Train Dispatchers' association, and D. H. Fljozdal, Brotherhood of Maintenance of Way Employes. In a statement to the president, they said:

"Mr. President, we have come here to tell you that unless something is done to provide employment and relieve distress among the families of the unemployed, we cannot be responsible for the orderly operation of the railroads of this country; that we will refuse to take the responsibility for the disorder which is sure to arise if conditions continue.

"Nor will we accept responsibility for the demands that will surely be made upon representatives of the government and which we predict will be more far-reaching than any yet made, including the dole.

"It would be with great reluctance that those we represent would ask for a dole. On the other hand, Mr. President, what other alternative is there available? Everything else suggested has either failed or been denied. If something is not immediately done we will be obliged to demand a dole."

The six organizations whose leaders expressed opposition to the plan for a moratorium were the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, Brotherhood of Railway Carmen of America, International Brotherhood of Firemen and Oilers, Brotherhood of Railway Clerks, International Association of Machinists, Sheet Metal Workers' International association.

G. W. Laughlin, legislative representative of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, said the seven organizations proposing the moratorium represented 550,000 workers. The fourteen other brotherhoods, he said, represent 1,200,000 employes.

Laughlin said that although only six of the fourteen brotherhoods were represented at the White House conference, the remainder also objected to the proposal.

The six representatives asserted, however, that they shared the opinion of the other group that "economic conditions in the country today call for immediate constructive action on the part of the federal government."

Many Methods Used to Boom Union Label During Big Drive

Washington, May 19.—Reports received by the Union Label Trades Department, American Federation of Labor, show that New York, Pittsburgh and Chicago have been particularly active in the big nation-wide union label campaign conducted during April by the department. Chicago has used the radio several times each day to call attention to the campaign, the management of station WCFL donating all available time to the campaign. A union label display is one of the special features planned by those in charge of the campaign in Chicago.

Houston, Tex., held a dance and union label style show during the campaign, the local merchants co-operating in making the show a success.

Spokane, Wash., arranged with the local merchants to have union label displays in their shop windows. An open meeting of the Central Labor union was held and an entertainment was held in connection with the meeting. Cascade County Union Label league, Cascade, Mont., started the April campaign with a big rally on March 25. Addresses and an entertainment were a part of this meeting.

East Liverpool, O., is taking an active part in the drive and planned to secure samples of union labeled products for free distribution. A great amount of literature was distributed.

The Garment Workers of Kansas City, Mo., are waging an active campaign. Vast quantities of label literature has been distributed under the able guidance of the officers of this local union of the United Germent Workers of America.

Garment Workers in the following cities have distributed great quantities of label literature secured from the Union Label Trades Department free of cost: Denver, Colo.; Birmingham, Ala.; Oshkosh, Wis.; St. Louis, Mo.; Mobile, Ala., and Omaha, Neb.

Los Angeles, Cal., held a union label dance on April 1 with free admission to those holding cards secured from members of the committee. Prizes of union labeled articles were awarded, these prizes being donated by different local unions. This dance was given as a special feature of Union Label month.

ENGINEERS EQUALIZE SHOVELMEN'S WAGES IN NORTHWEST STATES

Portland, Ore.—The International Union of Operating Engineers announced the adoption of a new scale of wages for power shovel operators in the northwestern states to apply outside the building trades radius of the larger cities. The scale conforms with the scale in force in the southwestern district and makes the shovelmen's rate ahe same in the following states: Oregon, Washington, Idaho, Montana, Wyoming, Nevada, Colorado, New Mexico, Utah, California and Arizona.

"We believe," says the Oregon Labor Press, the official organ of the Oregon State Federation of Labor, "that this is one of the most progressive moves that has been made towards 'stabilizing' wages for a group of workmen over a large area and removing the confusion caused by many different union scales in the same area, thereby setting employes of union shovelmen on an even footing when bidding for work in the different states."

The Social Ideals of Jesus of Nazareth

An Interpretation

Written for The Labor World
By WILLIAM L. MOSS

Chapter IV

JESUS' TEACHING ANALYZED
Part XVII

The tree is known by its fruit.
—Matt. xii 33

What was Jesus' "sense of social opportunism?" It was His conviction that we do not and cannot live isolated and apart from each other and, this being true, we should make our relations be of the best. In other words, "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself." (Matt. xxii:39.) To the followers of Jesus "social opportunism" simply means meeting squarely and without shirking all that is demanded of him in his social life in the name of Christianity. If there is any doubt in the mind of the follower of Jesus as to where he should start in applying what he has learned from the Master he has but to remember His words, "I am in the midst of you as one that serveth." (Lk. xxii:39.) These words bring the follower of Jesus face to face with the question: Am I, in my own little place in life, always moved by the spirit of service? That is, am I contributing anything to the general movement which lifts and ameliorates the life of my fellowbeings? Am I producing, distributing and administering what little or much I may have in such wise as to be truly called a laborer together with God? Or am I a social parasite and a social highwayman, thwarting the ideals of God, usurping to my own exclusive use the generosity and fullness of nature, and fattening on the misfortunes of others?

WM. L. MOSS

According to my analysis of the teaching of Jesus to me the evidence of what we call success in life—or what is called "glory" in the gospels—is found only in the capacity and willingness to serve. There is not, nor has there ever been, a totally detached or isolated life—whether we will it to be so or not, our lives contact others. Therefore, try as hard as we may we cannot explain away our social responsibility toward our fellowmen nor can we offer any legitimate excuse for not fulfilling that obligation. This is made clear in the words of Jesus when He said, "Come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you . . . Inasmuch as ye did it unto one of these my brethren, even the least, ye did it unto me." (Matt. xxv:34, 40.) What is this social service the follower of Jesus must render? "Whosoever shall give to drink unto one of these little ones a cup of cold water only . . . he shall in no wise lose his reward." (Matt. x:42.)

Thus Jesus teaches us that the conversion of our social life must be into the channel of service, or from an idealistic viewpoint the extent to which we have fulfilled our social obligations is determined by whether when we had the opportunity we have placed a cup of cold water to the thirsting lips of a little child.

To transfer His saying to real life means our lives are judged by whether or not we might improve opportunity or obstruct the insignificant life.

LABOR QUERIES

Q.—How old is the Boot and Shoe Workers' union?

A.—April 10, 1932, marked the 37th anniversary of the establishment of the organization.

Q.—How many states have union-label laws and what is the purpose of the laws?

A.—The District of Columbia and forty-four states have such laws, which in general authorize organized workers to adopt a device to designate the product of their labor. Labor organizations are therefore secured in their right to register, etc., the labels chosen by them to distinguish their products.

It costs no more in effort or money to secure UNION GOODS and SERVICE, if you demand and insist on them.

Consistency Put on the Spot

The Hamilton county democratic convention yesterday morning was a highly successful affair. The bosses, the officeholders and the candidates could have desired nothing more. Their well-oiled machine did not produce so much as a solitary squeak. It was such a meeting as democrats can hold only when they are thoroughly under control.

Believe it or not, the above quotation is from the Chattanooga Times, which paper started a leading editorial on last Sunday morning with the paragraph quoted, commenting on the democratic convention of Saturday.

The morning paper, some may remember, is an advocate of abolishment of the primary and a return to the time-worn and vicious convention system throughout the state, and has printed reams of "argument" purporting to extol the virtues of the convention system and deploring the "iniquities" of the people's primaries.

Shakespeare, or somebody, once said something to the effect that consistency gathers no moss, or something.

Oh, consistency, verily thou art badly used at times!

The Gentlemen of Wall Street

What a fine lot of patriots the Wall Street gents have turned out to be. They have profiteered in peace as they did in war, in hard times as they did in good times. What the rabble rousers have got now to talk about!

If any gang in America has a panning coming it's the Wall Street gents who have gouged, rigged and juggled to their own tremendous advantage, while millions have been in want. What a spectacle! And they still have the nerve to hold up their heads and think they are great men.

The difference between Al Capone and the Wall Street racketeers is one of geography and field of operations. Moral difference? Just where?

Perhaps the multitude doesn't understand that the market jugglers reap a harvest going down just as well as going up—perhaps they do better going down. And gangs get together to rig a market so it will do just what they want it to do, in which event the multitude loses its shirt—as has happened.

The United States Senate, with the able help of Congressman La Guardia, who doesn't seem to lose his head, has been giving us the evidence. One of the interesting things today is that the severest critics of Wall Street brutality and deviltry are found in the ranks of decent business men. Perhaps that's because they know best what has been going on. The honest banker is the severest critic of all. He, too, has been victim of the rotten outfit, often compelled to play a hand in a game he knew was rotten.

One banker said to this writer this week: "If the people knew ALL that has been going on among the big fellows none of them would be left. But rotten as they have been, we need them until the country can get out of this mess. We've got to keep the shell together until the nation is functioning normally again."

Strange talk, from a banker of conservative bent. But one of the strange things about this situation is that the best understanding of it comes from men who in other times would have denounced the critics.

Wise men in all ranks today look for cure through work. They are determined to curb the power of financial crooks and autocrats, but they know that cure must come through finding work for the masses.

The six-hour day proposal, first put forth by organized labor, finds new converts every day. Many men frankly say the nation faces the choice between work and revolutionary outbreaks by next winter.

These are critical, but stirring, times.

Of course the six-hour day must come. Perhaps a work-day shorter than six hours—and certainly a five-day week. There is no escape from that, unless we contemplate ruin.

One man said: "What are machines for if not to bring mankind the benefit?"

True, of course. Look forward to the six-hour day and a wage higher than we have ever known! Those things are coming. Organized labor leads the way, but the followers are not as far behind as they used to be. History will show that today we are going somewhere with tremendous speed.

Suffering is acute today. It may be more so. But we are moving mighty fast—toward something.

Observe the Stock Exchange

Defenders of the Stock Exchange explain that it is necessary that there be a market for stocks and bonds.

There is no need to quibble with the idea that there must be a market. But it has become clear beyond dispute that there does not have to be the kind of market that trades in stocks for the purpose of robbing the nation.

Recent revelations, if they were needed, prove beyond cavil that the present Stock Exchange is a national menace, that it has contributed enormously to the increasing density of depression, that it has, in plain words, been a den of thieves and a place of iniquity.

Four months ago labor contended that the Stock Exchange was pounding stock prices down, down, down, to ever lower levels, throwing the nation into further despair and disorder. Is there today any doubt about the truth of that assertion?

The buying and selling of stocks does not have to stop, any more than the buying and selling of real estate or dried prunes has to stop. But it is, in all earnestness, about time that the nation stepped in to stop rigging and gambling in the ownership of its industries.

The Stock Exchange can be reformed, but no reform of consequence has yet taken place. Congress, on the basis of its own evidence, must very soon, if it is honest about it, either require drastic reform, or else do that reforming itself.

"Equal Rights" for Women Workers

The National Woman's Party is still carrying on propaganda in favor of its so-called "equal rights" amendment to the Constitution of the United States. The latest endeavor of the party's representatives in this direction is the adoption of a resolution urging President Hoover to support their proposal.

The outstanding feature of the amendment is the repeal of all laws that protect women in industry. Over a long period of years organized labor has participated in securing the enactment of a large number of state laws protecting women workers against the greed of profit-mad employers, ever ready to impose working conditions that are unjust to their women employes and an insult to the social conscience.

These laws limit the hours of work, prohibit night work, and establish minimum scales of wages.

The Woman's Party equal rights amendment to the Federal Constitution would take away from the states this power to provide legal protection for women wage earners.

The American Federation of Labor emphatically condemns the amendment as destructive of the legislation which is necessary to guard women workers against industrial conditions that would be highly detrimental to their welfare.

It is improbable that President Hoover will lend his support to such an anti-social proposal.

The Passing Show

Note and Comment on Things Doing in the March of Events

Communities building or remodeling school buildings now benefit from a greatly reduced cost of construction. Pennsylvania reports that building construction costs resembling those of twenty years ago are indicated in the awarding of contracts for schools in various parts of the state. Exceptionally low prices on general construction and heating, ventilating, plumbing and electrical work are reported.

Conditions such as reported from Pennsylvania give added point to the vigorous denunciation of curtailing public construction recently made by the Business Week, a leading business organ, which scored suspension of public building not only as a powerful force intensifying the depression, but as "the most stupid kind of economy."

Bruce Barton, author and advertising man, makes the interesting proposal that the United States government spend $50,000,000 a year to advertise against war. He would make the fund available by reducing the total cost of the army and navy 5 per cent, exclusive of non-military activities of the war department. His anti-war advertising would appear largely in American publications, and also in the leading daily papers of European capitals. The campaign would attack war and its evils from every angle. "Let us advertise this hell," he says.

Well, why not? As Mr. Barton points out, Americans are long on talk but short on cash in promoting peace. Why not spend to promote peace only a tiny fraction of what we spend on war and show some real earnestness in fighting the hell that is war?

To many the virtual pardon of the four persons convicted in the misnamed Hawaiian "honor slaying" will seem like open condonation of murder and lynch law. The accused four murdered a man; they go free, while many convicted of lesser crimes are severely punished. The killing was done in retaliation for an atrocious crime, it is true, but the four had no right to take the law into their hands and execute murderous vengeance. What makes their action even more reprehensible is the fact that three of the four were navy men, sworn to uphold and enforce the laws.

The whole episode reflects no credit on American justice and raises the question: "Would the four have gotten off as easily as they did if the two principals had not been persons of wealth and influence?" The only answer to this can be, "In all probability, no."

There was no demand for harsh punishment of the four, but to pardon them for murder and lynch law is a travesty on justice.

Senator Carter Glass recently startled the senate by declaring that two former United States solicitors-general had ruled banking affiliates illegal and that these opinions had been suppressed. This he cited as an indication of the blandishments of great wealth. If there is any place where wealth's blandishments get in their dirty work, Washington is the place. The nation is waking up to the iniquities of the great banks of Wall Street and they may some day get what is coming to them.

The old cry against congress as a destroyer of business is being raised again. Wall Street and its organs are charging that congress is blocking business recovery. The same cry was raised a year ago, when the nation was assured that everything would be lovely if congress would only adjourn and not hold an extra session. Congress did adjourn and no extra session was called, yet business failed to boom and everything was not lovely.

This is not a blanket defense of congress, which has its shortcomings. But congress is not responsible for the business depression nor the failure of business to recover. The cry against congress comes quite largely from the interests that distrust democracy and would like to see a "strong" president run the nation without interference from legislative bodies. Bankers and others whose blundering and actual crookedness contributed to bring on the crisis lead in the defamatory chorus. Let believers in democracy remember these facts when they hear the charge that congress is preventing business recovery.

It seems strange. Maybe others have noticed it, but it's a fact that I haven't found one single dollar bill, dime, nickel, and only one single one-cent piece, in two and a half years. And in the two and a half years before that I had found one ten-dollar bill, four ones and innumerable dimes and nickels, but not one quarter or half have I found in ten years, and I found plenty of pennies. Alas! Them were the days! It's very sad that this is thus!

FORECLOSURES BID FAIR TO SET ALL-TIME RECORD

Sales of Property for Unpaid Taxes Throughout Nation Reveal Devastating Effects of Depression and Bring Home Imperative Necessity of Action to Reduce Taxation Burden.

By B. C. CLARKE

Washington, May 19.—Foreclosures on property for unpaid taxes in both cities and rural districts are approaching the highest peak in the nation's history. At the present rate, 1932 will set a new all-time record in the number of people deprived of homes and farms through inability to pay the staggering load of state, county and municipal taxes.

In a single day this month, 60,000 farms in Mississippi alone — one-fourth of those in the state—were sold for unpaid taxes. While the owners have two years to redeem them if they can pay the taxes, the prospect of a like tax burden next year and the year after holds the likelihood that most of these farmers have permanently lost their properties.

In Philadelphia recently a tabloid newspaper carried ten pages of sheriff's notices in small type advertising the sale of homes for unpaid taxes.

Nothing could bring home so poignantly, and with such heart-breaking reality, the devastating effect of depression, with its kindred misfortune of excessive taxes, reduced wages and salaries, and unemployment, as the growing number of foreclosures and seizures of homes for unpaid taxes or defaulted payments on mortgages.

Savings of a lifetime are being swept away. Thousands of people after struggling for years for a start are finding themselves homeless, penniless and destitute.

Estimates are that if foreclosures were effected in every case of delinquent taxes in all of the states, from one-fourth to one-third of the home and farm owners would be deprived of their properties. Especially is this true in the agricultural states of the mid-west and the south.

Kansas Tax Burden Typical.

The people of Kansas, for instance, have a normal productive income, according to Senator Arthur Capper, of that state, of a little less than $500,000,000 a year. Yet their tax burden is from 125 to 130 million dollars a year. This state is probably typical of the average mid-western or southern state.

Practically every taxing unit from the federal government down to the smallest municipality is faced with a deficit this year. Taxation in many cases has already become confiscation, and is hitting the little property owner and little home owner as hard or harder than it is anyone else.

A solution can be found in only one direction: costs of government must be reduced. This means retrenchment and reorganization, and the elimination of every type of service or function that can be classed as a "luxury." Any unnecessary expenditure is a "luxury" when people are being deprived of their homes from unpaid taxes.

Taxes Hit Capital.

Taxes upon industries and upon agencies that give employment have become so great that in the effort to pay the bill, capital is deprived of a fair return, and holders of securities of these industries are throwing them on the market for what they will bring. In the effort to check this tendency, wages and salaries are being cut, and additional numbers of people thrown into unemployment.

The main burden of taxes is not coming from the federal government. It is found in the levies of the states, counties and cities, where the need for retrenchment and economy, and reduction in taxes, is greater than in any other quarter.

The state and local governments must retrench and cut to the bone. High taxes in a season of depression can be collected only at the expense of employed men and women, and as the burden increases, with more and more unemployed men and women.

Economy Must Be Accepted.

Economy has been forced upon factories, mills and plants, and upon people in their homes. The same thing must be accepted by governments, whether local or otherwise, with the elimination of every expenditure that can be classed as a "luxury."

Forced sales mean destroyed property values, and are a sure and certain means of indefinitely prolonging the business depression with its kindred evil of idle men and women.

SENATOR WAGNER INDORSES UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

Washington.—In an individual report of the special senate committee to investigate methods to alleviate unemployment, Senator Wagner, of New York, recommended compulsory unemployment insurance or wage reserves to be regulated under state authority.

Senator Wagner pointed out that his plan does not mean that the states must operate the insurance systems or even contribute to them, but that "the employer is under statutory obligation to provide insurance or reserves to protect his employes against a stated period of unemployment." Under his scheme the federal government would contribute by allowing employers to deduct from their income tax a portion of their payments into the unemployment reserves.

CALGARY OFFICIALS REDUCE JOBLESS RELIEF PAYMENTS

Calgary, Alberta, Can.—The Calgary city council made wholesale slashes in unemployment relief. Married persons were cut $1.50 per week and married persons without children $2.50 per week. All ablebodied single men except returned ex-service men and all single unemployed girls living at home were struck from the unemployment relief pay roll. The three labor aldermen voted against the slashes.

MINNEAPOLIS MAYOR BLOCKS BANKERS' WAGE CUT SCHEME

Minneapolis, Minn.—Mayor William A. Anderson blocked an indirect attempt to reduce the pay of the city employes of Minneapolis by vetoing a resolution adopted by the city council making arbitrary cuts in appropriations for all departments.

The roundabout attempt to reduce living standards was an application of the plan said to have been sponsored by one of the big bankers here that the way to force pay cuts is to slash appropriations to a point that makes it impossible for departments to function unless wages are reduced. The wage cutters in the city council did not have strength enough to override the mayor's veto.

Telephone ...Mrs. Green"

"Mother says to hurry as it sounds like an important call."

"Tell her that I'll be over as soon as I can take the dinner out of the stove."

Do you use your neighbor's telephone? Think how much better it would be to have one of your own. Then you need not bother anyone, and your friends can call you without embarrassment.

The entire family will find many uses for the telephone, with the added comfort of knowing that in emergencies the telephone is always ready to summon aid.

You, too, can have a telephone of your own for only a few cents a day. In fact, the service is so low in cost that it really doesn't pay to try to do without it.

Go to your Union Meetings

Don't say you are too tired; the weather is bad; or there is too much quibbling and "hot air" to interest me.

Every time you miss a meeting and leave it to the other fellow to look out for your interest, you are doing an injustice both to yourself and your organization.

Your views on especially vital subjects should be represented in discussion and by vote, and the only way for this to be done is for you to be at your union meeting.

You are responsible for the good and welfare of your organization, and non-attendance of union meetings on your part is not excuse enough for you to voice your opinion after a measure has been passed. It is then time for you to concur in what has been done and work in harmony with the officers and other members of your union.

Go to your union meetings regularly and induce others to do the same, because one important thing to remember is the meaning of the slogan:

"United we stand, Divided we fall."

D. C. COMMISSIONERS SEND WAGE DISPUTE TO COURT

Washington.—The commissioners of the District of Columbia declined to continue the adjustment of disputes over prevailing wage rates between organized workers and contractors on public work for the district, and told the building trades council it could take its complaint against A. Lloyd Goode, Inc., of Charlotte, N. C., a contractor erecting a public school building, to the courts. The council claimed a number of workmen had not been paid the prevailing rate of wage in accordance with the Bacon-Kelly law.

Previous wage complaints of this character were settled by district officials, and the contractors were forced to pay the workmen the difference between what they had received and the prevailing wage for the district.

INT'L TYPOGRAPHICAL UNION ELECTS OFFICERS ON MAY 25

Indianapolis, Ind.—The members of the International Typographical union will elect all the union's officials on May 25 by a referendum vote. The referendum method was adopted many years ago, and has worked so satisfactorily that there is little agitation for the convention method. Each candidate has the right to publish his views in the Typographical Journal, the official organ of the union, which goes to every member.

CONGRESS PAY POLICY SETS BUSINESS GOOD EXAMPLE

Disposition of House to Stand Against Pay Cuts Might Be Followed by Private Interests With Benefit to Entire Nation—High Level of Workers' Income Has Always Brought Large Measure of Prosperity.

By B. C. CLARKE

Material changes in the structure of the federal government are in prospect as the result of the inclination of congress to confer power upon President Hoover in pending bills to reorganize, merge and co-ordinate existing bureaus and commissions. The power given him would permit independent establishments and agencies to be merged or placed within the departments.

The authority delegated to the president is the most sweeping that has ever been given in a time of peace, and makes possible the most far-reaching program of reorganization that has been undertaken. Certain of the changes, however, involving the reorganization of agencies created by statutory enactment, will be subject to the approval of congress.

This action is taken as an economy measure largely in lieu of a heavy cut in the compensation of federal workers, which has been vociferously demanded from the outset of the present session.

Workers Win Victory.

Indications are that while departmental budgets and other expenses will be sharply curtailed, the level of salaries will not be materially slashed. This is a substantial victory for the organized workers of the country, who have seen in these prospective cuts an opening for a fresh epidemic of wage and salary slashing in private business and industry.

Members of the house have definitely indicated a determination not to indulge in indiscriminate slashing of the mechanism of the government, but to utilize long range vision and constructive study in the matter.

The policy of the house in dealing with this matter, and accepting the fact that what may seem to be economy today may prove tomorrow to have been indefensible waste, could well be adopted by the business and industry of the country as a rule of action in meeting the problems peculiar to the depression.

Important Fact Ignored.

Wages and salaries in many cases have been indiscriminately cut, even in advance of efforts to effect economies and retrenchments in other directions.

In many cases sight has been lost of the fact that the wage volume of men and women actually employed controls the gauge of national prosperity. In years of the past a large wage volume has invariably spelled a large measure of general prosperity.

And by the same token, the devastation of depression has been widest when wage scales have been slashed heaviest, and the standards of living and buying power have been correspondingly reduced.

Wages Key to Prosperity.

Latent wealth of the United States, in mines, forests and agricultural lands, exceeds that of any other country. But to translate it into actual wealth, human labor is necessary, and the benefits of it to the people are to be measured in the volume of wages that are derived for the labor expended.

Wages and consuming power in this as well as every other country is an endless interlocked chain, with each link dependent upon every other link.

When the wage volume of any form of labor is reduced, the measure of prosperity is proportionately cut down. Wages are merely another name for income.

Pay Cuts Hit All Activities.

When the income of a man is reduced, it follows that he must buy less of the products of other men. Plainer clothes are worn. Table foods are more simple. Fewer books are bought. The pocket change is counted more carefully. Even the contribution plates in the churches get less. Merchants and manufacturers, religious activities and social welfare, suffer with every wage reduction.

To protect the wage volume of the country is a fundamental need, for it controls the material prosperity, without which neither business, industrial, social or educational forces can grow.

N. Y. BUILDING WORKERS SHOW SOLID FRONT AGAINST WAGE SLASH

Union Council Rejects Employers' Demand for 25 Per Cent. Reduction and Despite Unemployment, Strong Spirit of Solidarity and Militancy Stirs Toilers' Ranks.

New York, May 19.—What at the outset looked like an early settlement of the building trades wage scale now looks like a real fight.

The Building Trades council has finally rejected the employers' demand for a 25 per cent reduction and there is more fight in the air than this city has seen in a building trades dispute in years.

Unemployment has decimated the ranks of those at work, but despite this heavy burden there is a loyalty and a solidarity that is astonishing even to those who have seen years of labor struggles.

The original readiness to sign at the employers' figure has been blown higher than a kite. First the elevator manufacturers broke the employers' circle by offering elevator construction a higher rate. Then one of the two organizations employing bricklayers agreed to arbitrate. Then the whole field of building trades awoke to a new fighting spirit and the issue is now uncertain.

In the arbitration proceedings between the Bricklayers' union and the Associated Mason Contractors, Inc., the arbitrators were Prof. Joseph P. Chamberlain, of Columbia, Rabbi Stephen S. Wise and Milton Mayer. Their award is expected at any time and seems destined to have a profound effect upon the settlement of the whole issue.

Meanwhile what looked like a rout for a beaten army has been turned into a battle from which, it now seems, that army will emerge with some measure of victory.

MAX ZUCKERMAN, SECRETARY HAT WORKERS' UNION, DIES

New York.—Max Zuckerman, prominent in the American labor movement for twenty-eight years as general secretary of the Cloth Hat, Cap and Millinery Workers' union, died here May 4, at the age of 64.

Mr. Zuckerman was born in Russia in 1868. His father was a merchant. He received a grammar school education and came to the United States in 1891. He learned the trade of cap making, became an active member of the Cloth Hat, Cap and Millinery Workers' union, and was elected its general secretary in 1905, holding the office until his death.

In his capacity as secretary he wrote the biennial reports of the activities of the union, which constitute a history of the workers in that trade for more than a quarter of a century. For nearly thirty years he attended all the conventions of the American Federation of Labor.

Key State Labor Warned of Peril In Dictatorship

James H. Maurer Pictures Danger of Fascism and Tells Convention Workers "Must Be Militant and Fight."

Reading, Pa., May 19.—Warning against a dictatorship in which the army and navy would take over the reins of government, while the worker would be reduced to the lowest standard of living, was sounded by James H. Maurer, veteran labor man and for sixteen years president of the Pennsylvania State Federation of Labor, at the opening session of the federation's annual convention here. More than 300 delegates were present.

Painting a picture of the nation in the grip of fascism and reaction, Maurer said:

"Labor must be militant and must fight."

Not until 1936, perhaps later, will the country get back industrially and financially to the place it occupied in 1929, he said.

John Phillips, of Philadelphia, president of the federation, indorsed every statement Maurer made.

"His speech represents everything the federation stands for," Phillips said.

"Organized labor is fighting on its Marne," President Thomas F. McMahon, of the United Textile Workers of America, told the convention. "'Back to militancy' is our slogan. We must and will revive the spirit which brought into being the old Knights of Labor, the forerunner of the present American Federation of Labor."

Secretary Frank Morrison, of the American Federation of Labor, made an emphatic declaration in favor of direct aid to the unemployed through appropriation of federal funds.

Morrison predicted that the United States supreme court would not alter or invalidate in any particular the Norris-LaGuardia anti-injunction bill.

Dr. A. N. Northup, secretary of the department of labor and industry, which the federation is trying to place on a civil service basis, described to the delegates what the department is doing.

"What we need most today," he said, "is a machine that will make consumers for our products. Your organization says we have such a machine. 'It is a well-paid laborer continuously employed.' Brains must be found to turn on the current and start this machine. Then, and only then, shall we return to normal."

Support Organized Toilers by Buying Union Label Goods

Past Success Should Give Encouragement in Battle for American Working Conditions, Says Secretary Manning.

By JOHN J. MANNING

Trade unionists have always contended that the conditions of labor established through organization is the cornerstone of progress for those who toil.

This contention can be verified in the 1929 report of the census of manufactures and of the United States bureau of labor statistics.

The former states that eight millions of workers average $4.04 a day, while the labor bureau report states that four millions of trades unionists earned $8.52 a day, or slightly more than 110 per cent daily in excess of unorganized workers.

These figures set forth only the actual difference in financial returns for service performed. Who can estimate the other advantages enjoyed by union workers, including the shorter work day and the shorter work week?

The striking contrast between organized effort and individual effort should give encouragement because of past success and should furnish incentive for continued zeal and a determination to carry on regardless of obstacles that may be encountered.

Nothing in the world has proven such a good investment as membership in a trade union. From the small amount invested, better wages, shorter work week, sick and death benefits, out-of-work and other benefits have come as regular dividends.

The objective of every real trade unionist should be to conserve and add to these dividends. This can be accomplished in great measure by the organization of purchase power.

There are thousands of trades unionists unemployed at present, who could be placed at work under union conditions, if all members of organized labor would do their full share in demanding union labeled merchandise and union services.

All money spent by trades unionists for non-union products and non-union services gives financial profit to unfair employers, weakens the labor movement, destroys the opportunity for employment of members of organized labor and discourages fair employers.

Support the friends of organized labor and defeat its enemies by spending union earned money for union labeled merchandise and union services.

Recognizing the effectiveness of using the ballot, Chattanooga Trades and Labor Council provides in its laws that:

"Delegates must patronize a minimum of seven Union Labels during their term of office.

"Delegates must present at each election to this Council a current Poll Tax receipt unless exempt from payment of such tax."

It stands to reason that if UNION MEN do not VOTE, our lawmakers will not be those who consider OUR welfare.

PROJECTIONISTS MAKE PEACE WITH LOCAL THEATER OWNERS

Complete Agreement Reached Late Thursday

CLOSED HOUSES ALL REOPEN AT ONCE

Successful Negotiations Finally Concluded After Dispute of Three Weeks' Duration.

Following a wage dispute which lasted for more than a month, and which resulted in the closing of seven local movie houses for a period of three weeks, negotiations were concluded late Thursday afternoon which insures reopening immediately of all closed theaters and employment of union operators and stage workers.

Employment of a maintenance man, over which the unfortunate disagreement arose originally, is provided for in the agreement, and members of the local unions involved declared after the meeting Thursday that each party to the "settlement" is satisfied with the terms, which were identical with the offer of the unionists as published in the morning Times of Wednesday.

Participating in a series of conferences which have lasted over a period of several days were the executive board of Chattanooga Trades and Labor council, whose members had been given full authority to act for Central Body in the interest of the entire local movement; executive boards of Locals 259 and 140, and representatives of the Independent Theaters company and the Bijou Operating company.

It was announced following the final conference that all closed theaters will open immediately—if possible, on Saturday, and if not, on Monday at the latest.

Officers of Locals 259 and 140, Projectionists and Stage Employes, respectively, asked The Labor World to convey their hearty thanks to the general public for expressions of sympathetic interest; to the members of organized labor throughout the city, and particularly to the executive board of Chattanooga Trades and Labor council.

An agreement which assures continuous employment to members of the two local unions in all local Publix theaters was reached Wednesday at a final conference of representatives of the exhibitors and the unions, held in Atlanta.

Members of the executive board of Local 259, who conducted the negotiations on behalf of that union, stated that the agreement was apparently wholly satisfactory to both sides, and that the conferences were marked by the best of feeling, each party to the contract recognizing the difficulties of present conditions and showing a disposition to assist in working out the various problems involved.

The agreement means, it was said, that all Publix houses will continue operation throughout the summer months, it having been rumored that at least one house would close temporarily. No request was made by the theater management for reduction of manpower, four men being employed to the booth in each of the houses.

ARCADE JOB NOW "100 PER CENT"; SEARS-ROEBUCK PROJECT STARTED; POSTOFFICE TO BE UNDERWAY SOON

All formalities have been complied with respecting the new Arcade job, The Labor World learns this week, and the project has for the past week been operated "100 per cent. union." Local union officials expressed pleasure at the change in policy, which will mean a large number of days' work for members of organized labor before the building is finally completed.

The John Parks company, which has the general contract for the Arcade, last week was awarded contract for the new Sears-Roebuck local store at Sixth and Market, which it is understood will involve an expenditure of from $75,000 to $100,000. Work of wrecking buildings now on the site was immediately started, and is now well under way. The Sears-Roebuck project will furnish employment, also, for a goodly number of local trades unionists.

The above facts, coupled with announcement that a contracting firm which has been "100 per cent. union" for many years is the successful bidder for the new million-dollar postoffice, and that work will begin on that job at an early date, constitute the best news which the local labor movement has had in many months, and prospects for employment of union building trades workers are brigher now than at any time in the recent past. It is pointed out that employment on the works mentioned will stimulate business for several different lines, notably building supplies, and the use of union labor on projects of such magnitude will be a splendid "argument" for prospective builders in considering the type of workers which they might use on other possible building improvements.

SHORTEN WORKING WEEK, BIG OIL COMPANY URGES

New York City, May 26.—A shorter work week to relieve unemployment and maintain American standards of living was urged by President W. C. Teagle, of the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey, largest oil company in the United States, in his annual report.

Teagle devoted considerable attention to the problem of unemployment, telling in detail what his company had done to provide work for its employes.

He said that the company had been forced to reduce its personnel somewhat, but had not reduced the hourly rate of wages, and had spread out its work in an effort to keep as many as possible employed. On Dec. 31 the corporation employed in the United States 43,453 workers, as against 51,760 a year earlier. For the entire world, the corporattion's employes at the end of last year numbered 114,656.

The unemployment situation, Teagle said, "is not a situation that is going to cure itself. Enforced idleness among millions of breadwinners, and fear of wage cuts on the part of those at work, stand in the way of returning confidence. To meet the first named difficulty industry must give serious consideration to the adoption of a shorter work week with a consequent increase in the number employed.

"If the idea of division of work should receive general acceptance it seems reasonable, giving due weight to the decline in living costs that has taken place, to look for continuance of wages at a level which will permit the workers to maintain the American standard of living."

Standard reported net earnings in 1931 of $8,704,758, the smallest on record. A better showing could have been made if the industry had controlled production, President Teagle said, criticizing the industry for overloading the market. With proper control, he added, the oil industry might be the first out of the present depression.

New York Building Still Tied Up, Though Some Unions Take Cut

New York City, May 26.—New York's building trades strike cracked this week, but did not end.

The solid line of organizations holding out against a wage reduction averaging about 25 per cent broke, with one group accepting the cut and another still holding out.

Carpenters are among those going back under the cut.

Those holding out include Bricklayers, Plasterers, Terrazzo Workers, Derrickmen, Steamfitters, Elevator Constructors, Metal Lathers, Machine Stone Workers, Stone Cutters.

The Bricklayers are awating an arbitration award with one of the two employer organizations and are "standing pat" against the other.

Until there is a further signing up no construction work can proceed.

The break in the line came after a little more than two weeks of stoppage of work.

MAHONEY ELECTED MAYOR OF ST. PAUL

St. Paul, Minn.—William Mahoney, labor-progressive candidate for mayor of St. Paul, was elected by a vote of 40,467 to 36,405.

In his campaign Mahoney declared against the false economy of salary reductions and insisted that large economies in administration could be effected without debasing the living standards of city employes by shaving their pay envelopes. He promised to use the power of his office to break the grip of the underworld influence over municipal politics and to reduce the indirect tax laid on the people by unfair and inequitable utility corporations.

Three labor-progressive candidates were elected to the city council. This insures labor control of that body.

Mr. Mahoney is the first laborite to serve as St. Paul's chief executive. He is a member of the St. Paul Printing Pressmen's union and editor of the St. Paul Union Labor Advocate.

LOS ANGELES LABOR COUNCIL APPRECIATES SENATOR NORRIS

The Central Labor council of Los Angeles, Cal., adopted a resolution expressing the "appreciation of all wage-earners in Los Angeles county to Senator George W. Norris and through him to those senators and congressmen who ably supported him in enacting legislation abolishing the 'lame duck' sessions of congress and the 'yellow dog" labor contracts."

The resolution, which was introduced by Delegate Isgrig, of the Elevator Constructors union, and signed by all the delegates, urged all central labor bodies to adopt a similar resolution expressing their gratitude to Senator Norris, "who has accomplished in reality as well as in principle the perpetuation of democratic American ideals of government to succeeding generations."

MUST CREATE BUYING POWER SAYS MILLER

Labor-Displacing Machinery Aids Depression.

SMALL CROWD HEARS SCHOLARLY TALK

Economist Reviews Present Conditions and Pleads for Sane Consideration.

"Too much of the profit of production has gone into increased productivity and too little into increased consumptive power," Spencer Miller, Jr., secretary of the Workers' Education bureau of the American Federation of Labor, told an audience of approximately 150 people at the courthouse Monday night.

Mr. Miller, a guest of Chattanooga Trades and Labor council, was introduced by Paul J. Aymon, president of the Tennessee Federation of Labor, and presented a series of facts and figures which indicated an intelligent study of present conditions, their cause and remedy.

"There are before us today three major questions which can be stated in modern language," he said:

"1. How did we get that way?

"2. Where do we go from here?

"3. How shall we travel?

"As the answers to questions 2 and 3 are dependent on our answer to the first question you will permit me to stray and lay before you in some detail how we have gotten into our present situation.

"When we come to survey our present crisis we are all apt to hunt for some person or group we can blame; it is instinctive, but it is neither intelligent nor illuminating, for we are caught in a web which no one person has spun, but for which we are all in part responsible. Or failing to place the blame on some person we are apt to assert that the present crisis is due to some single cause, such as the war, mechanization of industry or the distribution of wealth. The problem is not so simple. We all tend to simplify that which we do not understand. But oversimplification in analysis makes the remedy less than adequate, thus, for example, if the war is the cause, the remedy is, do away with war. That is not as simple as it sounds, nor would it solve our entire problem.

"Our first task, then, is to get the whole picture—a complete perspective on the present crisis. My father once used a homely illustration to indicate the need of perspective. I have used it before. I repeat it again. Taking a silver dollar from his pocket he held it close to his eye and said, 'If you will hold this dollar close enough to your eye you can blot out the sun.' We are continually doing just that—blotting the greater by focusing intently on the lesser—seeing the trees, but failing to see the forest. The causes of the present distress are not one, but many. It follows logically that the adjustment turns on meeting not one cause but a multitude; there is no royal road to recovery; there are roads that lead forward to sounder economic adjustment.

"But this fact remains upon the stage of mankind, that there is going on a great drama and we are a part of it.

"It is well to know what the play's about. The theme of this great drama," continued Mr. Miller, "can be briefly stated. It is the story of man's increase of material power which has outrun the spiritual control which is requisite to its use to avoid destruction. With that as the theme let me suggest the three major acts in the play. The first is the world war—the culmination of a system of competitive nationalism—two great groups clashing for power like boys scrambling for pennies. Yet the impact of that clash rocked the world. It has been said the world could not stand another war; it did not stand the last war.

"Ten million men killed—paraded ten abreast, sunrise to sunset, it would take them forty-six days to pass a given point—ranks moving every two seconds.

"Cost of war—338 billions of dollars; $20,000 every hour since the birth of Jesus Christ.

"Capital accumulations of three centuries shot away.

"Tragic and serious as were human losses economic losses were more serious.

"The second act in the drama is the effort to compensate for the economic vacuum in the world's economy. The slogan was, 'Back to normalcy.' The spur to industry was stupendous; new social forces were unleashed in the world which gave rise to fascism in Italy and communism in Russia. But above all in our land the phenomenon of aechnological unemployment. Since the war the per capita production has increased 54 per cent, five times our population and eighteen times the additions to our wage-earners. The results of unemployment are the distresses of the workers."

After discussing in detail the inroads made by modern inventions, Mr. Miller outlined the way in which the orgy of speculation, the unsound plan of installment selling, the short-sighted tariff policy, and the silly program of war debts and reparations, to say nothing of wealth concentration and the hoarding of the gold supply, has all tended to create a crisis—the secondary crisis following the world war.

"We are now," he continued, "in the third act of the drama, the reconstruction period, faced with the great paradox of starvation in the midst of plenty, misery arising out of abundance. Our situation is paradoxical. Our advice on how to get out of it is a simple but bewildering paradox:

"We are to save but spend more.

"We are to work harder but curb production.

"We are to cut production but pay higher wages.

"We are to reduce the budget but spend five billions on public works.

"We are to increase tariffs but pay war debts.

"We are to have less government in business but loan money to railroads, banks and farmers.

"Nobody seems to know how to get out because nobody seems to realize how we got in. Our task," concluded Mr. Miller, "is to follow the counsel of St. Paul and 'think on these things.'"

MONSTER LABOR-DAY PROGRAM MEETS WITH GENERAL APPROVAL

A. H. Hays, Charter Member of Local 74, Crosses Great Divide

Carpenters' Officials Learn of Passing of Veteran Worker While Visiting Relatives at Jacksonville, Texas.

Officers of Local 74, Carpenters, received the sad news Monday of the passing, on Sunday, of A. H. Hays, charter member and veteran official of that union, at Jacksonville, Tex., where he had gone in an effort to regain his failing health.

Some time ago Mr. Hays had removed to Calhoun, Tenn., where he resided until some three weeks ago, when he went to the Lone Star city for a stay with relatives. His condition was not thought immediately serious, and local union officials were shocked to learn of his passing. Since affiliating with Local 74 Mr. Hays had consistently taken an active part in the progress of his craft organization, and had served the membership in various capacities.

At presstime it could not be learned learned what arrangements were contemplated for the funeral services, but it was believed the remains will be returned to Chattanooga for interment.

The Labor World joins many friends of the deceased trades unionist in expressing to surviving relatives heartfelt sympathy in their bereavement.

'PHONE OPERATORS AND TEACHERS LAUNCH STRIKE

Buenos Aires.—The teachers' directorate of Argentina ordered a 12-hour walkout because overdue salaries had not been paid.

The telephone operators, who demanded a 44-hour week, no more 11-hour shifts, and the re-employment of all workers dismissed for reasons of so-called economy, declared they would strike if their demands were not met.

Louderman Brings Message of Cheer To Machinists' 56

International Union Official Addresses Large Turnout of Members at Regular Meeting Tuesday Night

Fred Louderman, general vice-president of the International Association of Machinists, was an honor guest Tuesday night at the regular meeting of Lodge 56 of that craft, and delivered an interesting address to a large turnout of members, which is said to have included facts on the present situation of vital interest to his hearers.

The Labor World was told Wednesday that Mr. Louderman's remarks were very optimistic, and considerable enthusiasm was created from the report which he brought of conditions and prospects in other localities. It was also declared that the largest attendance in months was present to hear the international official, and a new spirit of determination to "carry on" was created as a result of the address.

Tom F. Hall and D. L. Kennedy, fraternal representatives from the sister lodge, 1450, railroad branch, were present and made a few remarks of greeting to the members present. President Palmer named a new by-laws committee as follows: C. S. Hall, Ed Fisher, W. L. Wergin, Henry Ford and John Skipper.

Mr. Louderman was scheduled to address the membership of Lodge 1450 Thursday night, and will probably leave Friday for his home in Memphis. Mrs. Louderman is accompanying her husband on his trip to Chattanooga.

40 CENTS AN HOUR FOR PAINTERS ON P. O. BUILDING

Topeka, Kan.—The J. I. Barnes Construction company has ignored the federal prevailing wage rate law on the new postoffice project here, according to the Kansas Labor Weekly of the Topeka Federation of Labor and Building Trades council. It is charged that the contractor paid painters 40 cents an hour while the prevailing rate is $1.

In unskilled labor the contractor's cut has been equally drastic. The city of Topeka and local contractors pay common laborers 40 cents an hour for eight hours, but, according to the Labor Weekly, the Barnes Construction company employed a worker for eleven hours a night each night for seven nights, a total of seventy-seven hours, and handed him a check for $15, a trifle over 18 cents an hour.

It is also charged that the contractor has imported outside labor to the detriment of Topeka workers.

CALIFORNIA STATE PRINTERS SECURE WAGE INCREASE

Sacramento, Cal.—State Printer Harry Hammond made an increase of $1 a week in wages of printers employed in the state printing office. The award was made in compliance with a state law which provides that the state plant shall pay the prevailing scale in San Francisco, Oakland, Sacramento and Los Angeles.

The commercial plants are paying an average of $52 per week for day work and $55.50 for night work. The day work week is 44 hours and the night work week 40 hours.

Negotiations securing the raise were conducted under the direction of Henry P. Melnikow, executive secretary of the California conference of Typographical unions.

The state printing office is the largest of its kind west of Chicago.

State Printer Hammond was for many years a prominent member of the Typographical union.

INITIATIVE PETITION.

A proposed unemployment compensation initiative petition was filed with the secretary of state of Washington by a representative of the Unemployed Citizens' league of Seattle. The measure provides for compensation of $10 a week to single persons and $2.50 a week additional for each dependent. No person shall receive in excess of $20. The state will contribute one-third of the fund, employers one-sixth, and employes one-half.

Plans For Elaborate Celebration Taking Shape

GENERAL COMMITTEE MEETS MONDAY NIGHT

Chairman Aymon Lists Names of Members and Calls Session to Select Various Sub-Committees.

Paul J. Aymon, general chairman for the monster celebration of Labor Day which is planned by Chattanooga Trades and Labor council, announced Thursday that the tentative program is rapidly taking shape, and the committee named by President George Perry, of Central Body, is finding an enthusiastic response to the movement which is most gratifying.

"It is heartening," said Mr. Aymon, "to see the great wave of enthusiasm which has met the initial efforts of the committee in its desire to test sentiment in favor of staging a monster celebration. For the past few years Labor Day has been observed in Chattanooga very quietly, the workers contenting themselves with spending a quiet day in picnicking, or taking in the various amusements offered by commercial organizations for the public entertainment.

"But this year it is different—and when we say different, we mean different. Since announcement was first made that an unusual program would be offered the public, we have received nothing but encouragement for our efforts. The rank and file of every local union is apparently 'rarin' to go,' and we are covered up with offers of assistance in preparing for the big show. And not only are our own members interested, but workers in the unorganized groups, and even business and professional groups are lending encouragement to the project. We are receiving queries from out of town, and when the full details of our elaborate program are given out we expect to receive word that hundreds from nearby communities will spend the day with us and enjoy its features."

A special meeting of the general committee is called for Monday night at 7:30, at Central Labor Hall, and the following members are urged to attend, in order that the big committee may be divided into various groups to work out details for the many features planned:

The Social Ideals of Jesus of Nazareth

An Interpretation

Written for The Labor World
By WILLIAM L. MOSS

Chapter V

JESUS' EVALUATION OF LIFE

Part I

The deeper we insight into human destiny be, more we marvel sacred does every individual human being seem to us. —Lotze.

Jesus raised men's understanding of God and lifted human life forever to a new and higher level, thereby setting forces in motion which have revolutionized history. This being true, one is at first inclined to argue that Jesus could only have been thinking of men in the mass to have wrought so sweeping and thorough revision of men's thoughts. Yet in the preceding articles of this series I have taken the opposite viewpoint of Jesus' attitude towards the world into the midst of which He came preaching the Kingdom of God. It has been my method throughout the previous articles to direct attention to the fact that Jesus was in the habit of considering in terms only of the individual and the individual's relationship to his fellowmen and God. There simply was nothing else for me to do but this, the contents of the four gospels leaving me no alternative course to follow.

WM. L. MOSS

Now, I do not contend that the significance attached to such occasions as Jesus' preaching to the multitude on the Mount or when He addressed His hearers from a small boat have been lost sight of by Christians. Nor do I argue that whatever might have been said on these occasions when great numbers were gathered to hear Him preach has been ignored by His followers or even by the world at large. For instance, who would dare say the Sermon on the Mount has not had its full share in shaping Christian men and women's fundamental ethical principles? Certainly I would not.

Truly great and significant were Jesus' utterances when He sat or stood before the gathered multitudes discoursing on the "way of life" or dwelling on the solicitude of the Father for the least of His children. What He said on these occasions is important, I grant. Yet the tenderest, most compelling picture of the Saviour of Mankind we have retained in our mind has come to us through our envisaging Him as the sympathetic friend of individual men and women, and we have only been enabled to envisage Him thus through reading in the four gospels the accounts of His many cures and of His tender attitude toward the numerous individual outcasts and afflicted He came in contact with.

If I am correct in what I have said above how are we to know that Jesus really did [illegible] to the personality of the individual man as something sacred and having a direct relation to the Father in heaven? Simply by pursuing a course of two kinds of "case studies." We must study certain recorded episodes in the gospels where living individuals were the central actors, and by this way seek to discover what was the immediate reaction of Jesus' mind when confronted by the effects of the inequalities and sufferings of actual society. (2) We must inter-perse among the above additional "case studies" consisting of the discourses of Jesus wherein He let play the full depth and power of His thought upon the social relation which binds people together. This second group will reveal to us the convictions which were axiomatic with Him and which guided Him in the attitude He assumed towards others.

What Next!

A talking clock that automatically answers telephone inquiries for the exact time has been installed at the observatory of the bureau of longitudes in Paris, which sets the official time for France. Talking motion picture films connected with the clock give the hour, minute and second when an inquiry is made.

What Do They Mean?

What do the members of the administrative board of the American Engineering council mean when they say return to prosperity is being hindered by wage inequalities? They point to the so-called high wages of skilled trades and the tragically low wages of other groups and they talk about readjustment. They say the "relatively high" wages in the construction field must be brought "into harmony" with wages in other fields.

Have these engineers gone crazy? There isn't a wage in America that is high enough or that ever has been high enough! Don't bring down the top wages! Bring up the bottom wages! Nothing else will help.

To bring down the top wages would be like bringing all America down to the Chinese economic leval. To bring down the top wages would be to pour more profits into Wall Street.

Bring up the bottom wage! Cut down enormous, exorbitant profits! Let us get MORE justice into the economic world, not less of it. Not in years has any reputable body of engineers uttered such a ridiculous and wholly absurd pronouncement as this one.

All labor must stand aghast at such an utterance. All labor must stand as a unit and say, no! No wages can be allowed to come down. All wages must go up. America has never had a high enough wage for anybody. Not even the top has been anywhere near high enough. The bottom has been utterly savage and cruel. Up with wages! Up! Up! Up!

"Rouse, Ye Slaves!"

In strange places the cry is heard today: There must be relief for the masses or there will be revolution. Those who speak most seriously of the prospects are those who are in no danger of personal privation. Quite probably the forecasts are exaggerated. But, they say. Who knows?

This nation, however, should do justice, not as a means of preventing its people from rising in violent mobs, but because the people are entitled to justice. Justice is not something to be done out of fear of force. Justice is something to be done for its own sake. If that is not so, then we have not advanced to an acceptance of principles and of moral and ethical codes of binding force and we are still jungle animals. However, we know that justice comes to us the more readily when we demonstrate that we know what justice is and how to go about getting it. Perhaps much of the slowness of justice today is caused by the fact that too many people are looking for it in the wrong place.

A great many people expect to find all justice in the agencies of politics, which makes for the easy escape of those who impose injustice through the leverages of industry and high finance.

What Have These Roads to Say?

The railroads have been the beneficiaries of public help and special favors. The railroads have been the beneficiaries of a "deduction" of pay by railroad employes.

It was not expected that the roads would decrease employment. It was expected they would increase employment. On March 1 railroad employment stood at 1,093,215. In January it was 1,108,691, and every month back to May, 1931, had recorded a decrease. Wages paid have decreased every month since July, 1931.

The whole railroad story has never been told and it would make interesting reading, but for the moment it seems pertinent to ask why it is that railroad employment continues to drop, adding to the depression which they were helped partly in an effort to cure.

The Government in Business

Mr. Fred W. Sargent, president of the Chicago & Northwestern railway, told the delegates to the annual convention of the United States Chamber of Commerce in San Francisco that the government must be taken out of business. He stressed the railroad transportation industry as the principal business from which the government should be removed.

About the first major bill the present session of Congress passed was the measure establishing the Finance Reconstruction corporation with an initial fund of $500,000,000 furnished directly by the treasury of the United States and with authority to sell what are in effect $1,500,000,000 government bonds to bring the total funds of the corporation up to $2,000,000,000. The law authorizes the officials of the corporation to loan the entire two billion dollars to banks, railroads and other private business concerns which would face failure unless the government supplied them with money with which to meet their obligations.

From the day the corporation was established railroad executives have besieged it for millions and millions and millions of dollars of government loans to save the railroads from bankruptcy. The loans are such poor risks that the private banks refused to take the chance.

In view of this railroad executives' drive for the almighty dollar on the Reconstruction Finance corporation, it is apparent that Mr. Sargent's talk to the Chamber of Commerce about getting the government out of business must have been made at a session consecrated to wit and humor. Undoubtedly it will appear in the "comic" chapter of the convention's proceedings.

Rich Fly to Tax-Exempt Bonds

Several attempts have been made in Congress during the consideration of the revenue bill to increase the taxes on larger incomes, those running from $100,000 to $1,000,000 a year and more, beyond the rates agreed to by the ways and means committee of the House of Representatives and the finance committee of the Senate.

Special pleaders for the rich have met these attempts with the claim that increasing the taxes would be unwise from the viewpoint of the government's interest because the rich would shift their investments from taxable securities to tax-exempt bonds and thus nullify the attempts of the government to tax them.

This sort of sophistry can not be permitted to pass without challenge.

One would think from this argument that there exists somewhere a flexible collection of tax-exempt bonds to which the tax-dodgers may run when the spirit moves them. The facts are just the reverse.

All outstanding tax-exempt bonds are owned by somebody. They are tax-exempt regardless of who owns them. If the rich tax-dodger who owns taxable securities desires to shift his investment to tax-exempt bonds he can do it in one of two ways. He can sell his taxable securities and buy tax-exempt bonds from some one who now owns them or buy new tax-exempts when they are issued. In either case there is no increase in tax-exempt securities and no decrease in taxable securities.

Budget Bludgeoning the Workers

Arthur Greenwood, minister of health in the last labor government of Great Britain and recently sent back to Parliament by a pronounced majority over his conservative opponent in a by-election, described the budgeting scheme of the present tory government as placing more and not fewer burdens on the backs of the working people. "The budget," he said, "was balanced by bludgeoning the poor."

The British scheme to bludgeon the masses in budget balancing was adopted in the United States by the president and the economy committee of the House of Representatives in their proposed wage slashes for hundreds of thousands of efficient and already underpaid employes of the government.

The president suggested compulsory furloughs without pay with the abolition of annual vacations, sick leave and other improved working conditions which labor has secured through years of unremitting struggle. The president's budget balancing would take around $90,000,000 from the annual pay of federal employes.

The House economy committee proposed an 11 per cent. cut for all federal employes paid in excess of $1,000 a year. This cut would slice around $67,000,000 annually from federal employes.

Due to the persistent and unrelenting pressure of organized labor, the House of Representatives voted against the president's compulsory furlough budget balancing and the economy committee's 11 per cent. wage slash with the $1,000 minimum exemption. The House raised the minimum to $2,500, but unfortunately voted against overtime pay. The entire matter was referred to the Senate economy committee.

Bludgeoning the workers with the budget is a policy which should be avoided.

The government is the largest employer in the United States. It can not afford to establish a policy of lower living standards for any of its employes.

Such a policy would not only be a gross injustice to the federal workers. It would also be used as an excuse for wage slashing by many private employers who up to the present have not yielded to the reactionary clamor for lower living standards carried on by antilabor elements.

The Senate should not use the budget to bludgeon the workers.

International Employer Conspiracy

The refusal of those who own and operate industry to reduce hours according to the larger output of labor due to technological progress, and increase wages to whatever extent may be necessary to provide a market for the output, is evidently an international conspiracy of reactionary employers in every country.

When Mr. Chamberlain, chancellor of the exchequer, explained the British budget in the House of Commons, Mr. Lansbury, leader of the labor opposition, succinctly observed: "There can be no real peace in the world until the consumption of goods matches the production of goods. The opposition does not agree that the world is suffering from want. The world is suffering because mankind has not yet discovered how to distribute the abundance which it is possible to create."

Mr. Lansbury should have added for the sake of the clarity that both the production and distribution planlessness of our industrial system is a scheme devised by those who own and control our industrial establishments.

The workers in mill, mine and factory produce commodities for wages. The commodities are the private property of the owners and the extent of distribution depends on the purchasing power of the masses, which is arbitrarily restricted in at least two ways by those who own the industrial plants and the labor-produced commodities.

The owners reduce the distribution of goods to a nullity for over eight million workers by refusing to employ them at all, and reduce it drastically for many millions more by compelling them to accept wage cuts and part-time work.

Putting all the jobless to work and reducing the length of the work day and work week to whatever extent may be necessary to keep them at work is labor's way, and the only way, to settle the unemployment question.

Adjusting wages so that the people will have buying power sufficient to purchase all the commodities of mass production is labor's way, and the only way, to settle the distribution problem ethically.

Those who own and control industry refuse to apply either of these principles to our industrial system.

The great question is, will labor and thousands of other intelligent and forward-looking citizens permit these hidebound reactionaries to carry us all down to ruin in their endeavor to save a form of production and distribution that has neither sanity nor ethics to support it?

Jobs and Men

A Series of Contributed Editorials Discussing Industrial Conditions.

When first organized the railway brotherhoods took scrupulous care to make it understood they were not in sympathy with the "labor movement" as such and that it was not their purpose to seek economic readjustments through what is commonly termed "class action," i. e., labor as labor against capital as capital. They not only avoided all alliances with the American Federation of Labor and its local units, but even went so far as to bargain with their employers independent of each other. They would not permit their members to strike in sympathy with the disaffected of other brotherhoods, in spite of the fact that in many cases those who were striking worked side by side and shoulder to shoulder with those who refused to go out on strike with them.

Through the course of the years the ultimate futility of such a policy has been demonstrated to the brotherhoods. The first step in the breakdown of the support of the "isolation policy" of the four railway brotherhoods took place in the early 1900's. In 1903 a "Plan of System Federation" was brought forward and adopted and the complete craft independence of the railroad workers, long seen to be impractical and worthless, had lived its day. The four brotherhoods did not by any means become one great, compact organization under this plan of system federation, but it did mean that the brotherhoods were one step nearer the plan of organization long before adopted by the rest of the American labor organizations.

"THE NOBLEST ROMAN"

A "Poetical" Classic, Rededicated to Arch McDonald with Humble Apologies to the Author.

For many years there reposed in the personal files of the editor of The Labor World a classic in the form of a "poem" on baseball. Old-timers will remember the "Letters of a Japanese Schoolboy," by Wallace Irwin, which ran in the newspapers and magazines. The editor, an avid reader of Mr. Erwin's classics, and, incidentally, a "wildly" baseball fan, considered the story of "Ichy-Ban" the best thing of its character which had ever come under his observation, and prized the clipping accordingly.

Recently, however, the copy was lost, and in order to "replenish the records" as well as to indicate the baseball spirit in Chattanooga at the present time, the tragic story of the "antique root" is printed below, as well as this writer can remember it:

FAN-AT-I-KAL POEM

About Ichy-Ban
An Antique Root.

ICHY-BAN, of Old Japan,
He were a famous Base-Ball Fan.
He used to screech, he used to preach,
And set for hours upon the bleach,
With howels and growels,
And when the Home Team missed a play
Them swaring words he used to say
Was very noted in his day
From Fujiyama to Cathay.

He knowed the score, and something more,
Of every team what pennants bore.
He knowed the batting records, too,
Of Hokasai and Tinkapoo.
O San, O San, a wildly fan
Was Ichy-Ban of Old Japan.

Now Ichy-Ban, them famous root,
He stay at Base-Ball Ground so long
His wife she fear there something wrong.

Because her husband been away
For 60-night and 60-day
She very cross. And so, of course,
She go and buy a nice divorce
And runny way from Ichy-Ban
With Kokomo, a Railroad Man.

So K. Batsu, a neighbor true,
To Base-Ball Ground he straightly go,
For tell poor Ichy-Ban what-so.
But Ichy-Ban, who still was there,
He gaze ahead with fixy stare,
Sometime a snort, sometime a sware,
But otherwise what do he care?

"Your wife," say Batsu, "run away"—
But Ichy-Ban just snuff and say,
"The Pitcher very punk today."
Say Batsu, "Worser news I got,
Your wife has stole your house and lot.
It are a very wrong disgrace."
Say Ichy-Ban, with fixy face,
"That nothing; man just stole third base."

* * *

"I sorry, friend, what grief have came."
"Cut out," say Itch, "you spoil the game."

So Batsu, for them heartless speech,
Leave Ichy-Ban upon the Bleach,
To howly, growly, sporty croak,
To hooty, tooty, rooty squawk,
In latest style of baseball talk.

Until one day the home team won,
He got such banzais in his tongue
He die shouting up a lung.

* * *

And so today for sight to see
Some tourists find his repartee:
"Ichy-Ban, of Old Japan,
Were just a average Base-Ball Fan."

Q.—When was the first barbers' union formed in this country?

A.—A union of barbers was formed in 1878, known as the Barbers' Protective Union, with headquarters in Philadelphia. It was short-lived, but was succeeded by a number of local unions, some belonging to the Knights of Labor. These local unions came together in 1887 and organized the present Journeymen Barbers' International Union of America.

PRIVATE AGENCIES VICTIMIZE THE JOBLESS

San Francisco, Cal.—Walter C. Mathewson, state director of the U. S. employment service here, urged legislation to curtail private employment agencies and widen the scope of the public employment service in a statement before the California unemployment commission. Although he did not make direct charges, Mathewson claimed that many men are given employment through private agencies on construction jobs and are discharged after working seven days or slightly more. He said private agencies do not collect fees unless employment lasts seven days.

 7.5 Minutes to 2.4  is an ACHIEVEMENT...

THE five years from 1925 to 1930 saw the average time required to complete a long distance telephone connection reduced from 7.5 minutes to 2.4 minutes. Today, practically all calls are completed while you hold the receiver to your ear.

High speed is only one of the advantages of long distance telephone service. Improved operating methods and modern equipment have made the service as clear and convenient as local calls. Incidentally these improvements have not been accompanied by an increase in cost.

Such an achievement in bettering the service without increasing the cost has prompted many customers to comment to the operators or write to the Company expressing appreciation of the service and surprise at the low cost.

For example, you can talk a distance of 100 miles for as little as sixty cents by using day Station-to-Station service, while the rate is even lower at night.

Look in the front pages of your telephone directory or call the "Long Distance" operator for further information about the service.

Go to your Union Meetings

Don't say you are too tired; the weather is bad; or there is too much quibbling and "hot air" to interest me.

Every time you miss a meeting and leave it to the other fellow to look out for your interest, you are doing an injustice both to yourself and your organization.

Your views on especially vital subjects should be represented in discussion and by vote, and the only way for this to be done is for you to be at your union meeting.

You are responsible for the good and welfare of your organization, and non-attendance of union meetings on your part is not excuse enough for you to voice your opinion after a measure has been passed. It is then time for you to concur in what has been done and work in harmony with the officers and other members of your union.

Go to your union meetings regularly and induce others to do the same, because one important thing to remember is the meaning of the slogan:

"United we stand, Divided we fall."

Frey Places Blame for Depression On Machinery and Inadequate Pay

Secretary of A. F. of L. Metal Trades Department Says Wages Too Low to Buy Mass Production Output Threw Millions Out of Work.

Washington, May 26.—The principle of rugged individualism applied to the introduction of labor-displacing machinery and methods coupled with wages utterly inadequate to provide a market for the commodities produced by American labor under mass production were set forth as the major forces responsible for the business depression by John P. Frey, secretary-treasurer of the Metal Trades Department of the American Federation of Labor, in a radio address on "How Modern Industry Came to America."

The address was the third of a series on the general subject "American Labor and the Nation" broadcast over the Columbia network under the auspices of the national advisory council on radio in education with the co-operation of the American Federation of Labor and the Workers' education bureau of America.

Depression Problems.

"From what seemed to be the most prosperous condition our country has ever experienced, we have plunged into its greatest depression. The raw material, the transportation systems, the factories with their mechanical equipment, the executives, the engineers and the workmen, all are here. None of our natural resources has been destroyed. None of our acquired knowledge—mechanical, scientific or otherwise—has been lost. Yet we are face to face with the greatest industrial problems Americans have ever been forced to study."

Industrial Engineers' Responsibility.

Mr. Frey placed considerable blame for the depression on the "industrial engineers who developed our present industrial methods and processes." He said "they were either better engineers han they were economists, or that they believed their responsibility ended with the engineering problems, and that the economic forces and human problems their methods created were subjects which others in financial and administrative positions should solve."

Increased Output, Low Wages.

"One of the best examples of this lack of economic wisdom in the operation of our mass production methods," he pointed out, "is in the payment of wages in the highly mechanized industries. With a vast increase in productive power, the American workman actually received less per volume and value of his product than many European workmen."

No Market for Mass Production.

"So far our more scientifically directed methods of production have not proved an unmixed blessing. The ability to operate fifty cotton looms with one workman is of no practical value unless the people can buy the product.

"The ability of machinery to extract coal from the vein is of little service unless there are purchasers for the coal.

"The product of our mechanically marvelous automobile factories is regulated by the ability of the American people to buy the finished product.

Machinery Displaces Workers.

"Scientific studies, though sometimes lacking in soundly scientific conclusions, set in motion an industrial policy which definitely and systematically aimed to eliminate the number of workmen required to produce the same volume of manufactured goods, and at the same time eliminate the use of skilled labor.

Shortsighted Engineers.

"It should have been apparent to those who were introducing these revolutionary methods in industry, that unless industry found work for those who were being eliminated, that there would be a growing volume of unemployment. Apparently the responsibility was left to others, and little by little, but definitely and progressively, men were eliminated from the industries in which they had made their livelihood.

Machinery Destroys Millions of Jobs.

"The skilled mechanics found the craft knowledge it had taken them years to acquire of no further value.

"The synchronizing of sound with the motion pictures eliminated thousands of musicians. The production of plate glass became practically an automatic process. The automatic glass-blowing machine eliminated the highly skilled glass bottle blower. Automatic machinery has been installed which takes the bottles or other containers made of tin or fiber, fills, seals, labels and packs them in cartons ready for shipment, eliminating human labor except so far as seeing that the automatic machine is supplied with material and the product removed.

Per Capita Production Increased.

"While complete statistical evidence has not been collected which would indicate the extent to which labor has been eliminated, it is held that the workman's per capita production has been increased approximately 50 per cent within a few years, but in many industries the per capita increased production amounts to several hundred, and in some instances more than a thousand per cent.

New Industries Do Not Absorb Jobless.

"It is true that new industries have been developed, new occupations have evolved, which have given employment to numbers of those who had been eliminated from the industries in which they had formerly earned their livelihood, but these opportunities have utterly failed to absorb the number of workmen who had been displaced.

Unemployment Nullifies Prosperity.

"For some time this problem popularly called technological unemployment has been studied; first, so that the facts could be ascertained and industrial and economic policies established which would make modern industrial methods a blessing instead of a burden upon hundreds of thousands of workmen.

"This country can no more be prosperous with part of its wage-earners employed and the other vainly seeking for work, than it can be a land of liberty if its citizenship is part free and part slave.

Who Shall Direct Forces of Production?

"One manifest problem is in the directing responsibility, the authority, which shall sit in the driver's seat and control the steering wheel. Is it to be the bankers who supply credit; management which directs plant policy; the engineer whose skill and knowledge develop and guide industrial processes; labor which depends for its existence on employment, or a combination of them, a co-operative relationship?

"The public is vitally affected by the answer.

Individual Initiative or State Control?

"Are we to abandon American conceptions of local autonomy and initiative, based on free institutions, or are we to look to the state to solve problems which those immediately affected are more competent and experienced to deal with than any one else?

Equitable Distribution Unsolved.

"In a large measure we have solved the basic problems of production," Mr. Frey concluded. "It is evident that we have lamentably failed to solve the problem of distribution, to balance production with consumption and provide stable employment for our workmen.

Co-operative Control Necessary.

"What are the essential policies required to make our wonderful mechanism for production beneficial to the nation as a whole?

"The American Federation of Labor is convinced that the problems which exist, and those which must arise in the future, can only be adjusted or regulated through a closer and more thorough-going degree of co-operation between all of the factors who play a part in the development and the operation of our industries."

Short Report on the Near Fatal Accident to Big Business!

Big business acted the darned hog. She loaded her old bus too heavily and went too fast, without being sure her brakes were working. They weren't! and she couldn't make the short corner and went into the ditch, with great damage to the car, load and driver. They haven't got the old bus out of the ditch yet, and if they do, it will never be the same old bus again! The neighbors are still picking up high-class damaged goods scattered by the accident, but it won't be long before somebody must get busy and supply the "Dear Peepul" with some goods they need. It reminded me so much of what happened in Florida in 1925! In that sudden collapse of the sublimated optimism down there, you remember?

P. S. It's going to take a long time to repair the old bus, if they ever get it out of the ditch! It's in a heluva fix!

We want to hear from our readers, and we will acknowledge your letters or cards, whether we print 'em or not. We want to find out the temper and reactions of our readers to present conditions, and to hear any and all suggestions for the proper future course to be taken. Criticisms are to be confined strictly to constructive criticism, and partisan political opinions are barred. It doesn't do any good to stand around and cuss! Some of our readers must have some valuable ideas that might help to get the old bus out of the ditch and going again! Let us hear from you, and, until further notice, your suggestions and comments will be carefully examined to find any ideas you may have. There will be some communications that we will publish, with comment, others we may quote from. Give your name and address, if you ever want it read. If you prefer, we will suppress the name and address and call you "Vox Pop," or something. We think this is a good idea, if we did advance it ourself, and ought to produce some sort of results!

Address your cards or letters to "H. F. B.," care Labor World, 310 West Eighth street, this city. Telephone calls cannot be considered, as we won't be there and our chief editor is entirely too busy to answer the phone, and his secretary is out of the city till further notice.

Now, go to it, and let's see if the laboring man seems to be as dumb as congress, and Big Business, in finding a way out of this wilderness! Something has got to be did before winter comes again. We can live on berries and nuts till cold weather, if we economize a little and get a little charity now and then. But—next winter isn't going to be so tempered to the shorn lamb as last winter was, I feel sure! So, we'd better get busy while we may. So tell us your ideas of what could or should be done.

P. S. This is not a humorous proposition! H. F. B.

$11,000,000 FOR RELIEF OF JOBLESS IN AUSTRALIA

The government of Australia and the various states with the exception of New South Wales reached an agreement whereby 2,400,000 pounds sterling, about $9,600,000, are available for unemployment relief. The states raise $4,800,000 and the commonwealth supplies an equal amount interest free. The funds will be raised by bond issues. The commonwealth government also arranged to provide 600,000 pounds to relieve unemployment in New South Wales, with the statement that this amount could be provided if the state would fulfill its debt obligations and adhere to the financial plan agreed to by the premiers of the other states.

PAINS QUIT COMING

"When I was a girl, I suffered periodically with terrible pains in my back and sides. Often I would bend almost double with the intense pain. This would last for hours and I could get no relief.

"I tried almost everything that was recommended to me, but found nothing that would help until I began taking Cardui. My mother thought it would be good for me, so she got a bottle of Cardui and started me taking it. I soon improved. The bad spells quit coming. I was soon in normal health."

Green Says Wage-Cutting Employers Menace Welfare of the Entire Nation

A. F. of L. Chief Asserts Jobless Millions Endanger Our Government—Work for Idle Demanded—Cost-of-Living Wages Theory Riddled by Facts

Washington, March 26.—With a scathing denunciation of "the primitive policy of wage-cutting as a remedy for industrial ills," William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor, in an address before the Washington Chamber of Commerce, charged wage-cutting employers with making war on the welfare of the nation, with the helpless masses as their outstanding victims.

He said it made no difference whether the wage-cutters are private employers or the government, they menace equally the public interest and the safety of our democratic institutions.

In positive terms he challenged the cost-of-living wages theory of pay-cutting economists and their employers and flatly contradicted the claim that lower living costs compensate for present reduced earnings.

All Have Suffered.

"In the existing national emergency all groups have suffered and all classes of people have been forced to face grave, difficult problems," Mr. Green said. "Values have been destroyed, many fortunes have vanished, a large number of people who were considered wealthy have been made comparatively poor, while millions of working people have been forced into idleness which necessitated the depletion of their meager savings.

Unemployed Suffer Most.

"There is a distinguishing difference in the tragic effect of the long-continued depression upon those who have suffered because of impairment in financial values and those who have been forced, because of unemployment, to exist upon a mere subsistence level. It is bad enough to sustain financial losses, but it is infinitely worse to be deprived of food and to suffer from the experiences of hunger and want. Dwindling bank accounts may arouse feelings of disappointment and regret, but the sight of his children starving will drive a man to desperation.

Form of Government Threatened.

"The structure of our government, built as it is upon the ideals of democracy, will not permanently withstand the assaults made upon it by an unsound economic system. The perpetuation of our form of government and the preservation of our governmental institutions depend very largely upon the social contentment and well-being of the masses of the people.

Put Idle Millions to Work.

"The immediate problem is to place men and women now idle at work in the industrial establishments and business enterprises of the nation, thus restoring to them their buying power and reviving markets which have been dormant for the past three years. Any avoidable increase in unemployment, at this time, would be most deplorable.

"This policy should be supplemented by a fixed and determined effort to maintain the existing diminished purchasing power of those who are employed, using that as a basis upon which to rebuild our shattered economic structure. There can be no resumption of industrial activity in any section of the country until a demand has been created for manufactured goods. This demand must be predicated upon human needs and buying power. There must be a market before goods can be manufactured or sold.

"We know that the basis of our economic distress is found in the fact that buying and consuming power has been very largely destroyed. The mechanical equipment of industry, approximating the point of perfection, means nothing if there is no market for manufactured goods. The wheels of industry will remain silent and invested capital will have no earning power so long as the men and women who labor are idle and unable to buy.

Wage-Cutting Is Like Blood-Letting.

"Labor has long understood that if the buying power of the masses of the people were constantly reduced through the imposition of wage reductions unemployment would increase, social distress would prevail and industry would suffer.

"Labor firmly believes that wage-cutting means the underwriting of the depression. Wage-cutting is like blood-letting. It leaves the patient weakened and exhausted. It is amazing that many industrial leaders adhere to the primitive policy of wage-cutting as a remedy for industrial ills. They persist in the application of this policy notwithstanding the facts and the records show that each succeeding wage reduction places the living standards and the consuming power of the masses of the people upon a lower level.

Cost-of-Living Wages.

"The excuse offered by some economists who support industrial leaders in the pursuit of a wage-cutting policy is that a reduction in commodity prices, with a corresponding increase in the purchasing power of the dollar, justifies such action. They advance the theory that cheap prices, cheap labor, with lowered standards of living, make for prosperity. Furthermore, they indicate their belief that the American standard of living, which must be commensurate with the requirements of American citizenship, should be based upon the shifting and changing values of the purchasing power of the dollar.

"Labor refuses to accept this principle of economic philosophy. It knows from experience that it is unsound and, in application, most demoralizing.

"The sale of manufactured goods and the volume of business has always followed the declining value of the contents of the pay envelope.

Pay Cuts Exceed Living-Cost Decrease.

"During the two and one-half year period following the stock market collapse of 1929 the incomes of the workers have been reduced 50 per cent. In February, 1932, wage payments to workers in factories and on railroads were just one-half of the 1929 average.

"The cost of living has decreased to some extent, but not sufficient to compensate for this loss. While workers have suffered a loss amounting to 50 cents out of each dollar the decline in prices has saved them only 18 cents. Workers need 82 cents today to buy one dollar's worth of living costs, but they only have 50 cents with which to buy it.

"Accounting for both the decline in prices and wage losses, workers' income now, in the terms of the goods bought, are 39 per cent below the 1929 level. During February, 1932, sales to consumers were 30 per cent below the 1929 average.

"These facts are the best answer that can be given to the theory advanced by some economists that the increasing purchasing power of the dollar offsets the forced reductions imposed upon wage-earners."

Labor Criticises House Proposal For Setting Pay

Union Representatives Oppose Metcalf Bill for Predetermining Wages on Government Construction and Repair Work.

Washington, May 19.—Appearing before the house committee on labor, representatives of organized labor expressed strong opposition to the Metcalf bill providing that the advertised specifications of government construction or repair work for every contract over $5,000 shall state the prevailing rate of wages as determined by the secretary of labor.

Andrew Furuseth, president of the International Seamen's Union of America, said the bill would rob the workers of the right to work for the wages they want. He warned against disregard of the fundamental rights of labor.

John P. Frey, secretary-treasurer of the Metal Trades Department, American Federation of Labor, said the metal trades unions are in favor of amending the bill so as to except shipbuilding.

Frey Is Questioned.

"You are opposed to including shipbuilding in this bill?" suggested Representative Connery, chairman of the committee. "You know, do you not, that the shipbuilders are also opposed to the bill?"

Mr. Frey replied that this is true, but there are times when both workers and employers favor the same thing, as in the case of the amendment of the Volstead act, which labor has favored for a long time and which associations of employers are now also supporting.

Mr. Frey said he understood that if the bill passes without the amendment he advocated it would apply predetermined wages on contract work or naval vessels and that the secretary of labor, who would determine these wages, has no data or machinery to guide any such action. Such data as the department of labor may have that would be applicable to wages of metal workers are of no value, he said. He added that while the private yards might apply the predetermined wages to mechanics, there is always an army of helpers, handy men, etc., who would continue to be put on mechanics' work at only helpers' pay.

Electrical Workers Opposed.

Joseph S. McDonagh, legislative representative of the Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, said labor is opposed to predetermined wages and that the pending bill is not asked for by labor, but is a contractors' bill. He said enactment of the measure would leave labor up in the air and that it is physically impossible for the department of labor to predetermine wages in every locality in the country.

M. J. McDonough, president of the Building Trades Department, and other representatives of the building trades criticized the bill and told why labor is opposed to it.

BIG PROGRAM FOR LABOR DAY NOW ASSURED

Plans for Great Celebration Off to Good Start.

"MOST EVERYBODY" ANXIOUS TO HELP

Idea of Labor's Biggest Day Meets Favor of All Local Trades Unionists.

SECOND MEETING TUESDAY NIGHT

Second meeting of the general Labor Day committee is set for Tuesday night at Central Labor hall, and all members, together with volunteers, are urged to be present, at 8 o'clock sharp. "It is a big task we are attempting," said Chairman Aymon, "and we will need the whole-hearted co-operation of every individual member to put it over. We intend to make the celebration of Labor Day this year exceed anything ever presented in the south, and the enthusiasm already shown makes our task easier and more certain of full accomplishment."

General services over the remains of Old Man Depression will be held at Warner park on Monday, Sept. 5 —Labor Day—and the Chattanooga workers will sponsor a celebration which is calculated to bring thousands of visitors into this city from the surrounding communities to spend a day of general enjoyment.

The railroads will be asked to run special trains into the city, and to give reduced rates from all nearby cities. The most elaborate program ever attempted by local labor is in the making. All the features of the Labor Day celebrations of past years will be included, together with new and up-to-date attractions.

From early morning until late in the evening there will be entertainment for old and young—beginning with the time-honored athletic contests in which every member of the family is eligible in competition for worthwhile prizes, and ending with a night program which will offer varied attractions in different sections of the big park.

A monster barbecue, under the direction of W. A. Witt, will be one feature of the day, and Mr. Witt promises to be ready along about 10 o'clock in the morning to begin serving all comers with a meal which they will long remember. Mr. Witt, B. M. (barbecue master) states to the world that he will be prepared to feed 25,000 people, if necessary, and that the pit will be operated with a competent corps almost throughout the day.

In short, Chattanooga Trades and Labor council plans to "shoot the works," and preliminary plans discussed at a general meeting Monday night at Central Labor hall provide for dozens of major attractions for the day.

The call for the meeting Monday night was issued by the general executive committee, under the direction of Paul Aymon, chairman, and the response was gratifying, particularly the enthusiasm shown by every member in attendance. More than half of those invited were present, and many more sent "regrets" with the information that they desired to be counted in on the big project and would attend future sessions of the committee.

After a general discussion which lasted for some two hours, Chairman Aymon announced the following chairmen of sub-committees, most of whom will select their own assistants and ask for volunteers to aid them in the particular work designated:

Executive Committee—Paul J. Aymon, George W. Perry and T. R. Cuthbert.
Refreshments—W. E. Eckenrod, W. Brown and Dick Burkes.

Barbecue—W. A. Witt.

Building Strike In New York May Spread Over U. S.

If Contractors Use Non-Union Workers, Battle Is Likely to Become Nation-Wide—Twenty-one Unions Standing Pat.

New York City, June 2.—With twenty-one trades standing pat in refusal to accept the 25 per cent wage slash ordered by the New York Building Trades Employers' association May 1, the stoppage of work this week entered siege stage, with the future unpredictable.

Only one thing is clear. If the employers decide to open their jobs, which up to now have stood idle, with nonunion men, the stoppage now confined to New York will at once become almost nation-wide.

If the battle spreads out over the work of the big interstate contractors whose homes are in New York, then it may be that the nation will have to witness a long and bitter national battle with wages as the immediate issue, but with much bigger issues behind the wage issue.

At this hour the ranks of the workers stand unbroken after more than three weeks of stoppage of work, officially termed a lockout.

TACOMA CENTRAL LABOR UNION INDORSES JOBLESS INSURANCE

The Central Labor council of Tacoma, Wash., indorsed the unemployment insurance initiative measures drawn up at the instigation of the Unemployed Citizens league of Seattle and approved by a committee of the Seattle Central Labor council. The executive board of the Tacoma Labor council reported favorably on the recommendation. In order to get the matter before the voters, a certain number of them must sign the initiative petitions.

"HARD-BOILED" BANKERS KEEP MANY IN WANT

Refusal to Lend Increases Ranks of Jobless.

DRASTIC ACTION BY GOVERNMENT LOOMS

Administration May Soon Jump on Money Hoarders With Both Feet.

By B. C. CLARKE

Washington, June 2.—One of the keenest disappointments of the year to administration leaders in Washington is in the failure of the business and industry of the country to show an upturn for the better during May.

Since early last winter the administration has confidently believed that May would see the country well on the way to good times, employment on the increase, and depression diminishing and gradually fading away.

Present reports from almost every line of business and industry are serving to dash these expectations to the ground. There are fluctuations—ups and downs—improvements or changes for the moment, but it is only too evident that permanent relief is not at hand, and no man can tell whether the next two months will be better or worse.

It was in the confident expectation that an improvement in business and industry, and in employment, would be realized before the coming of summer that the president so urgently besought congress last winter to enact the enabling legislation which created the Reconstruction Finance corporation.

Banks Unload Frozen Paper.

This hazardous experiment—sailing an uncharted sea—was given two billions of dollars through offices of the government to relieve depressed credit conditions and assist banks to get into a stronger position and able to extend credit to their customers and communities by which those customers and communities could start work again, could put people to work, and thus crack and break up the ice-jams in the flow of credit and in the circulation of money.

The banks of the country, big and little, availed themselves of the life belts and life savers to be had through the Reconstruction Finance corporation. They unloaded for good money their slow paper, their frozen paper and a lot of paper which in the long run may prove to be thoroughly bad. They got the money into their vaults and put themselves into a liquid condition—the strongest and best condition in which they have probably been since the end of the World war. They made themselves shock-proof and depression-proof.

Turn Backs on Business.

Having reached the dry land of safety themselves, they turned their backs upon business and industry still struggling in the heavy seas and stormy waves of depression, stagnation, unemployment and reduced buying and consuming power.

The unemployment problem was left a burden on their communities. They refused to lend one cent, even on the best security, which would enable business and industry to undertake recuperative processes, to start the wheels of business to turning, and to begin making and buying and selling things.

Secure in their own dry land position, they left business and industry to swim or sink, as might be its fate.

An outstanding business man in Washington remarked this week: "The banks all over the country have plenty of money—more than they have had in years, but just try to borrow some of it!"

Banks Block Recovery.

This attitude of the banks explains primarily why the depression hangs on and why the country is still in the desperate straits of the winter. The cause does not lie in the slowness of congress to enact tax legislation, because everybody already knows they are going to have to pay higher taxes. It is not in the failure of congress to effect more drastic economies in governmental operations.

It is due simply to tight-fisted and iron-handed grips of banks upon credit and their refusal to loosen that credit through loans of their funds—some of it hoarded money brought out of hiding through patriotic appeal—for the legitimate functions and needs of business aid industry. These banks are proving to be the worst hoarders that the country has known in this generation.

Prolongation of depression beyond the present stage, or for that matter, even to the present stage, rests squarely upon banks big and little in communities both big and little. In the present state of things, they have it within their power to break up the depression within thirty days and get people back to work.

Must Government Act?

The question is: Will they do it, or must iron-fisted action on the part of the government be brought into play to compel them to relinquish their tight-fisted grip upon credit resources? One or the other is going to happen. The administration gives little indication that after the patriotic action of the people in bringing out their hoarded cash, it is going to swallow its pride and disappointment much longer.

There is no sane or logical business reason for banks hoarding money at this time. In doing so, they are simply continuing a depression which should have begun weeks ago to break up and disappear.

Garnier's Death Shock to Friends

Chattanoogan, Killed in Florida, Was Loyal Friend to Organized Labor.

Tragic death of Albert H. Garnier, local master plumber, news of which was carried in Thursday's news dispatches, proved a shock to local trades union friends. Details of the automobile accident, which resulted in the death of Mr. Garnier and the serious injury of Mrs. Garnier and their 13-year-old daughter, Mary Jo, were not given in the early dispatches.

Mr. Garnier was a former member of Local 43, Plumbers and Steamfitters, and as manager of the firm of Joe Garnier & Son had consistently demonstrated his loyalty to organized labor.

An indication of the respect and esteem in which he was held by members of Local 43 is seen in the following personal tribute, furnished The Labor World Thursday morning by H. F. Brown:

AN APPRECIATION.

Albert Garnier is dead! Cut off in the flower of his manhood in one of our numerous automobile accidents, his wife critically injured, and his beautiful young daughter seriously hurt! It is with the deepest shock and sorrow over the loss of a very personal friend and former local brother that I read this dire announcement in our morning paper. Albert Garnier was a just and fair man, as was his father, "Joe," before him. He treated every one fairly, and his customers knew it so well that he never had to sign a contract on the work he did for them. He was a former member of Local 43, Plumbers and Steamfitters, and a good member till he entered business with his father and honorably withdrew. While still a minor and marked for draft in the World war, he was married, yet claimed no exemption, but served with honor in his country's navy, during which time his daughter, Mary Jo, was born, and he did not see her until she was nearly a year old. It is sad to have to recall the series of tragedies this family has suffered since the end of that war. They are too well known to our readers to be recalled in this hour of grief and trouble to those who are left. We only hope that his wife may be spared, to recover from this critical injury, and that the lovely little Mary Jo may escape any permanent personal marr to her beauty!

NEW YORK EMPLOYERS ASSERT TYPOS' WAGES MUST BE CUT

New York City.—Until Typographical Union No. 6 agrees to discuss the proposal of a wage reduction the Printers' league (closed shop section) of the New York Employing Printers' association will refuse to take up the matter of a new agreement to replace the one expiring on Oct. 1, the employers have announced. Joint discussions were broken off in April when the union representatives refused to talk about a wage reduction. Typographical Union No. 6 is the only printing trades union that has refused to accept a wage cut.

HANLY QUOTES STATES' LAWS ON EXEMPTIONS

Compiles List for Readers of The Labor World.

LEGISLATURE WILL BE ASKED TO AMEND

Tennessee Law Regarded as Too Stringent, and May Be Modified.

Exemption laws of Tennessee have been and will be a live issue when the state legislature meets. Efforts to amend the Tennessee statutes at the last session were successfully combatted by various interests, but it is believed that with a proper educational campaign sentiment may be molded strong enough to demand of the incoming general assembly such changes in the present laws as will offer reasonable protection to the income of workers finding themselves in unfortunate circumstances, and that will allow such workers the right to eat while struggling to "catch up."

With the above in mind, The Labor World asked David Hanly, legislative chairman of the Tennessee Federation of Labor, to furnish such data as was possible on comparative exemption laws, and Mr. Hanly obligingly compiled the following for our readers.

It is hoped that trades unionists will study carefully the list, in order that they may be informed when the issue arises:

The following are the exemption laws of the various states as compiled from a bulletin of the United States department of labor:

Alabama—$25 monthly exempt.

Arizona—One-half of debtor's earnings for personal services for thirty days are exempt on affidavit that such earnings are necessary to support family.

Arkansas—All wages for sixty days shall be exempt from garnishment or other seizure unless, taken with other personal property, the total would exceed the limit of the constitutional exemption ($200 if single, or $500 if married).

California—Wages, for thirty days prior to the levy of execution, are exempt, if it appears that they are necessary to the support of a family; if not, or if the debt is for necessaries, the exemption is reduced one-half.

Colorado—Sixty per cent of a judgment debtor's wages or earnings are exempt from levy under execution, etc., if the debtor is the head of a family or the wife of the head of a family residing in the state and the earnings are necessary to the support of such family. If the earnings

Delong Reported as Slightly Improved

Condition of M. T. DeLong, veteran member and official of the Brotherhood of Railroad Firemen, was declared Thursday morning to be slightly improved, and hopes were held out for a complete return to normalcy by the old-timer at an early date. When the roll was called at the first meeting of the Labor Day committee Monday night "Marshal" was missed, and many of the delegates wondered just what had happened, as Mr. DeLong has a habit of sorter being around when anything of interest to labor generally is occurring.

Investigation of his absence, which followed the meeting, developed the fact that his condition prevented his attendance. It was learned, however, that the trouble was entirely mental, and would probably not prove to be permanent.

And, oh yes, what upset the equilibrium of the unionist was the birth of a boy to his daughter, Mrs. William Parker, formerly Miss Dorothy DeLong, at Children's hospital Sunday night, May 29. The youngster was immediately christened William DeLong Parker—and "grandpap" lost his head.

Mother and babe and doing well, and The Labor World has it from "grandma" that the youngster is one of the finest specimens which has come under the observation of hospital attendants in many moons.

Pay Cut Revoked, Southern Textile Strike Is Ended

Settlement in Horse Creek Valley Dispute Restores Weavers' Wage Scale and Bars Discrimination Against Strikers.

Bath, S. C., June 2.—Thousands of union textile workers of the Horse Creek Valley gathered in mass meeting here cheered word that the eight-weeks' strike precipitated by arbitrary wage cuts of weavers in the Langley plant of the Aiken Mills, Inc., had been ended. The strike later spread to other mills of the company at Bath and Clearwater. Announcement of the settlement was made to the meeting by Paul W. Fuller, educational director of the American Federation of Labor, who was the principal speaker.

Terms of the settlement had previously been agreed upon at a joint executive meeting of the two textile unions, indicating a virtually unanimous vote in favor of ending the controversy. These terms included the restoration of the wage scale of the Langley weavers prior to the walkout on March 28, the assurance that no discrimination would be shown to workers in returning to their former places and the right of the employes to petition for the amicable adjustment of grievances with a final appeal to General Manager George A. Franklin. These terms were tendered to the management through Howard T. Colvin, federal conciliator.

It is expected the mills will reopen within two weeks on the receipt of orders for goods. In the meantime relief will be continued by the Central Labor union of Augusta, Ga., and the Georgia and South Carolina State Federations of Labor, which have given strong support to the strikers.

The end of the strike finds the workers more firmly united and determined to carry on than at the outset. The extended educational campaign which has been carried on by Mr. Fuller for nearly eighteen months has borne splendid fruit and will serve to strengthen the organization in the future. No loss in membership was experienced throughout the entire controversy; in fact hundreds of new members were added to the union rolls and the two unions have a practically 100 per cent organization.

Offer Sympathy to Family of A. H. Hays

Local 74, Carpenters, at the regular weekly meeting last Thursday night, adopted resolutions of sympathy for the surviving relatives of A. H. Hays, charter member of that organization, who passed away last week at Jacksonville, Tex., while visiting relatives.

Mr. Hays was 75 years of age, and had been in failing health for some months. Remains were returned to Calhoun, Tenn., where funeral services were held last Friday.

The carpenters' resolution was as follows:

Whereas, a Divine Providence has called to his reward our friend and brother, A. H. Hays; and,

Whereas, Brother Hays was a loyal member, faithful to his trust this local brotherhood placed placed in him, and an untiring worker for the past thirty years; therefore, be it

Resolved, That Local 74, United Brotherhood of Carpenters and Joiners of America, in regular session assembled, deplores the taking away of this good brother, and extends to his relatives its heartfelt sympathy; and, be it further

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be placed upon our minutes and published in The Labor World.

FAILED-BANK DEPOSITORS PENNILESS IN BREADLINE

Binghamton, N. Y.—Many of the depositors subpoenaed as witnesses in the trial of the directors of the State Bank of Binghamton were in the breadline and lacked funds for car fare to Cooperstown, where the trial was being held, Sheriff Charles W. Kress informed the attorney-general's office. The bank crashed Dec. 15, 1930. Three of the directors are on trial for making false statements of the condition of the bank to the state banking department.

HUGE PROFITS OF WALL STREET ARE LAID BARE

Speculators Clean Up While Jobless Starve.

STORY OF BIG POOL MAKES SOUR READING

Families Existing on $2.68 Per Week Face Stoppage of "Dole."

By CHESTER M. WRIGHT.

New York City, June 2.—Families of New York's unemployed, living on $2.68 per family per week, read in the newspapers this week that a group of Wall Street speculators cleaned up more than five million dollars in a radio stock pool in about eight days in the gala days of 1929.

Charles M. Schwab was one of the insiders in that clean-up, his pickings having been listed in the senate investigation testimony at $58,342.

At the same hour building trades employers were fighting a last ditch fight to cut wages, while the same Charles M. Schwab was telling the Steel Institute that "lop-sided deflation" is the cause of all the trouble.

Families getting $2.68 per week are the lucky ones. Plenty are getting nothing.

Relief Near End of Rope.

It is a known fact that the whole relief movement, public and private, is about at the end of its rope.

Men not given to fear or foolishness are wondering what will happen in this metropolis next winter.

The five million radio pool profit is but an item in the grand total of cleaning up and legalized extortion witnessed in this seat of financial power.

And nothing yet done or threatened by congress has caused the financial magnates to lose even a wink of sleep, which perhaps goes at least a little ways toward illustrating the futility of the whole game of trying to cure a fundamentally industrial and economic problem by monkeying with political palliatives.

Nickname Stopped Tax Plan.

One good sock in the jaw against the so-called "wage deflation" movement causes these gentlemen to lose more sleep than any bill that stands a remote chance of being enacted into law. Incidentally there is a good deal of ill-concealed amusements hereabouts over the ease with which the "soak-the-rich" nickname stopped a tax plan which otherwise might have made more headway.

The second wage-cut of U. S. Steel is being watched closely, but not with any expectation that it will cause Steel to increase its business. That stuff is for outside consumption. How true that is was made clear on the day of the radio pool expose. On that day President William A. Irvin, of U. S. Steel, spoke of the two steel wage cuts, but he didn't say he expected the wage cuts to cure anything. His idea of cure is something else. He said: "I am sure that when proper credit relations have been established things will work out to our entire satisfaction." Possibly so. "Our" means the top handful.

Leadership Still Blind.

Industrial leadership continues blind. Financial magnates are equally blind, perhaps more so.

The unemployed look ahead to next winter. Social workers do likewise. Trade union officials look to next winter and beyond. Everyone who has real information and who discusses the situation says: "Unless something definitely changes the situation before next winter anything can happen."

$200,000,000 IDLE-RELIEF PUBLIC WORKS IN ITALY

Rome, Italy.—Official figures show that Premier Mussolini is spending $200,000,000 annually on public improvements to develop Italy and provide employment. In the last nine years the government has spent $825,000,000 on public works. The following projects are underway at present: 861 jobs of road building, 594 hydroelectric plants, 153 irrigation and waterway projects, 403 reclamation jobs, 241 port works, and 24,050 separate jobs of reconstruction in earthquake districts.

The Social Ideals of Jesus of Nazareth

An Interpretation

Written for The Labor World
By WILLIAM L. MOSS

Chapter V
JESUS' EVALUATION OF LIFE
Part II

Whosoever shall not receive the kingdom of God as a little child, he shall in no wise enter therein.
Mark 10:15.

The season is the early spring of the year. Jesus had but a short time before He left His headquarters town, Capernaum, and entered "the borders of Judea and beyond the Jordan." This particular journey being made by the Master and His disciples is, as the course of later events prove, a part of those fateful "last days" he was to spend on earth: the turbulent, swift-moving period filled with the activities of the triumphal entry, the cleansing of the Temple, the betrayal by Judas, the arrest in the Garden and the crucifixion.

WM. L. MOSS

No sooner has Jesus crossed the political boundary of Judea after leaving Capernaum than the Pharisees launch another of their attacks on Him, this time endeavoring to trap Him into a religious indiscretion, using as their means a question having to do with His attitude toward the Torah, or the Law of Moses (Mark 10:2). As had generally been the case whenever Jesus paused for any length of time during His preaching tours, the multitude gathered about Him. Having disposed of the question on divorce propounded by the Pharisees, once more defeating them (Mark 10:3-12), some of the more enthusiastic among the listeners push forward that Jesus might bless their little ones.

Their act was a perfectly natural one. Well, yes, thought Jesus' disciples, that may be true, but the Master is tired. To the weariness of His body there has just now been added the mental strain brought on by a secretly evil attack by the Pharisees! "Here! here!" cry the well-meaning disciples, rushing forward so as to come between Jesus and the ones who are bringing forward the children, "you people go back! Get these little ones away from here! This is no place for children! Go back! go back!"

Suddenly, even in the excitement of the moment, all eyes are arrested by a displeased look that comes over the face of the silent, white-robed figure in the center of the crowd. With an impulsive upward motion of His right hand to command silence and attention Jesus sternly faces His disciples. Not a soul moves, only the rustling of the leaves that clothe the branches of the low sycamores and olive trees is heard. Moved with indignation, Jesus says to His disciples:

"Suffer the little children to come unto me; forbid them not; for to such belongeth the kingdom of God."

The disciples give way. With expressions of joy the parents rush in from every side with their children.

On that particular day in the early spring of 33 A. D. childhood came into existence! Hitherto childhood had never in the history of the world received formal, public recognition—it had never been openly allotted its true place in the general scheme of man's life. All this was changed on the day when some parents brought their children to be blessed by Jesus. God created man as the crown of His glory but it was His beloved Son who, taking some little children into His arms and blessing them, set childhood in the midst of that crown as its most beautiful and precious jewel!

A.—The Pennsylvania Federation of Labor.

More Democracy

It has been said that the cure for the ills of democracy is more democracy. In political life we have the machinery of democracy. It becomes paralyzed at times, but it exists. In industrial life we have only the limited degree of democratic practice forced into it by the labor movement.

The notion that the financier and the employer are of right the masters and the autocrats still prevails. Even the present tragic break-down of their rule has shaken that idea but little. Inevitably there must be more of democracy in industry. Democracy means the expression and enforcement of the will of the people.

Just why that great section of our national operations that most concerns the maintenance of life should be fenced away as the private domain of autocrats is a mystery. The extension of democratic practice is no socialistic adventure. It is the only workable, sound American antidote for socialistic adventuring which would be worse than the autocracy of the past.

Why do not a people whose faith is rooted in the idealism of democracy turn in their agony to the vehicle of their faith? In that direction lies final salvation and there we must go, if we are to save any part of the democracy we now have.

A Great Weariness Is Upon Us

It is one of the notable things of the day that every denunciation of crookedness and selfishness in public life is greeted with loud acclaim. The people are tired of crookedness, selfishness and over-fat exploiters.

Contemplating exposures of greed, graft and pillage, a great weariness is upon us. The American people were never so united in demand for what once was known simply and directly as a square deal.

Forthright utterances are welcomed today as never before. Forthright action is still more welcomed. Whether in political life or in industrial life, the people are tired of robbery, deception and duplicity.

Will this anger of a people at their betrayers be dissipated so that the old game can go on, or will leaders arise who will give life to the ardent hopes of a people? Such leadership requires rare courage and much keen insight and understanding. Above all it needs to understand what it is that the people condemn and what it is that they want. What an opportunity!

Readjust Upward!

A lot of banker propaganda is going around to the effect that wages must be adjusted downward. They say the "spread" between top wages and bottom wages is too wide. It's true that the "spread" is too wide. The highest wages are not high enough. The lowest wages are abominable! No wages in America are high enough. Our low wages among the unorganized are shameful, disgraceful, tragic.

We need readjustment upward! Big jumps upward for the lower wage rates. Enormous leaps upward. And for the present top rates a gradual increase, proceeding as rapidly as possible.

To pull any wages down now is calamitous, no matter what bankers say. What right have bankers in Wall Street got today to expect respect for their opinions?

Up, wages, readjust upward! Stop the bank propaganda. Get big purchasing power into the hands of workers. Readjust upward!

Government Pay Reductions

The government of the United States is our largest employer. It is its solemn duty in the present economic crisis to do nothing to lower the living standards of its hundreds of thousands of employes either by direct wage cuts, compulsory dismissals by arbitrary reductions of funds provided in appropriation bills or by the abolition of advanced working conditions secured during many years.

The government also has an equally solemn duty not to increase the already menacing army of the unemployed, now numbering over eight millions.

A pay slash imposed on federal employes would at once lower their purchasing power, decrease the demand for commodities of all sorts, decrease the manufacture of commodities, and thus give private employers an excuse for dismissing more employes.

This deplorable result of adding to the unemployed would also automatically follow from arbitrary reductions in the amounts appropriated by congress to carry on government services.

The imperative duty of the government in connection with wages was emphatically described by William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor, in an address at a joint meeting of patriotic, labor, business and religious interests held at the headquarters of the A. F. of L. in Washington to protest against various federal pay cut schemes under consideration by the United States congress.

He told the meeting that it is the patriotic duty of the American Federation of Labor to resist all efforts to reduce the living standards of the workers. Wages, he asserted, had only been advanced to the present level after a long struggle, and insisted that to lower them now would constitute an attack on home, business, social and spiritual life.

"To reduce government wages," President Green said, "would be economically wrong and fundamentally unsound. Our whole economic system would be dislocated. The government represents human values. If it fails to maintain its own standards, it will help industry to lower the standards of millions.

"There's a terrible feeling abroad. I don't know how long labor can maintain industrial peace, and I'm apprehensive of the coming winter. If one thing will save the situation, it will be for congress to say, 'Regardless of what private industry does, we won't cut federal wages.' This would go a long way to allay the spirit of unrest."

Labor expects congress will measure up to the high degree of statesmanship demanded by economic conditions and absolutely refuse to make any assault on the living standards of over half a million faithful and efficient government employes.

Repression vs. Food and Work

The use of government force to repress demonstrations of the jobless instead of providing them with work or decent subsistence is cropping out with menacing frequency in the industrial centers of the United States.

The same reactionary method has now appeared in New Zealand after certain militant protests against the inadequacy of government relief.

The New Zealand tory government presented a bill to Parliament conferring authority on the government to proclaim a state of emergency if public order or safety are imperiled or if the community is threatened with deprivation of the essentials of life by interference with the supplies of food, fuel, light, or means of locomotion. To give the measure a semblance of justification, the bill includes the occurrence of an earthquake or other catastrophe in the list of events coming under the term "emergency."

Representatives of organized labor in the Parliament declared that instead of getting ready to use violence against the jobless, the government should remove the source of trouble by paying the unemployed sustenance benefits rather than the paltry amounts that cause the manifestations of unrest among the out-of-works.

Government violence against unemployment demonstrations will neither stop them nor settle the jobless problem.

It is within the power of industrial and political statesmanship in every country, including the United States, to prevent demonstrations of the unemployed by the practical method of putting all of them to work at reasonable wages. Unless this is done unemployment demonstrations will increase and with growing vigor.

"Dad" Outdone by Thrifty Heir

Lord of "Camel" Millions Compels Crew of His Pleasure Craft to Work Without Pay; Factories "Sweat Shops"

Although he has an income of $100,000 a year and will receive $20,000,000 from his father's estate two years from now, Richard Reynolds, son of the late R. J. Reynolds—the tobacco magnate who piled up a huge fortune by exploiting girl employes in his "Camel" cigarette factory—is following in "dad's footsteps," as far as penny-pinching at the expense of workers is concerned.

The editor of "Labor" found in a recent issue of the magazine, "Fortune," an astounding story of the lengths to which young Reynolds is going in an effort to add to his already immense wealth.

According to this magazine, says "Labor," Reynolds is operating a combination freighter and pleasure yacht on which the crew receives no pay, except meals and a place to sleep.

Reynolds bought the craft in Italy for almost nothing. It was appropriately named the "Gates of Hell." He changed that name, however, to "Harpoon"—a title almost as fitting.

After having luxurious quarters built aboard for himself and decorated in mosaic effects and varicolored woods by the same designer who did the "Bremen," young Reynolds "hired" his crew—all unemployed sailors who were starved to a point where they were willing to accept his harsh terms of no wages except "food and bunk." He even found a British sea captain desperate enough to "sign on" under those conditions.

Most countries have laws affording seamen some measure of protection of wages and working hours. Reynolds, however, knew that the tiny republic of Panama had no legislation of that character, so he registered his ship under that country's flag—regardless of the fact that the Reynolds millions were made in the United States. When there was a chance to save a few dollars, he had no compunction about kicking the Stars and Stripes overboard!

In addition to providing a floating pleasure-palace for Reynolds and his friends, the ship is used to haul commercial cargoes. Every pound of revenue freight he can pack in the hold means money in Reynolds' pocket. Under the terms of his father's will, he is to be given $2 for every $1 he "earns."

The R. J. Reynolds Tobacco company is one of the most notorious anti-union and low-wage-paying concerns in America. During the boom period of 1929, girls engaged in making "Camels" were paid as low as 10 cents an hour and kept "speeded up" to a breaking point.

And during this same year, the head of the company was building himself a $5,000,000 home with 374 rooms and solid gold plumbing fixtures at Winston-Salem, N. C.!

THE STRUGGLE OF LIFE.

Emma Belle Tucker.

As thru life's struggles we swave,
We seem to be riding a wave;
So unexpectedly we often go down
And tho for help, would probably drown.

It's so easy to give the battle up,
When of the filthy water we gulp;
So easy to say "Oh, I don't care,"
And drop everything in despair.

But how foolish a thing it is to do,
When a life-saver is sure to come to you
If you'll just keep on treading the best you can
And hold steadfast your faith in God and man.

For tho many a man may ride heedless to your cry,
You may make sure everyone will not rush by;
Yes there are still some who have God in heart
Even if they do seem so few and far apart.

So take a new breath, real fresh and deep,
And try upward over the wave to creep,
Close your eyes to the splashes so wet and hard,
Let not disheartening fears keep you barred.

Meet your difficulties with a smile,
Mind not your criticisms of the while,
For it is for God we must do our best,
Before we lay down our souls to rest.

7-HOUR DAY IN SOVIET UNION.

New York.—The Economic Review of the Soviet Union said that at the end of 1931 about 83 per cent of all workers in state large-scale industry in the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics were working on the seven-hour day. By the end of 1932, the paper stated, the seven-hour day is scheduled to include all industrial workers.

Self-Liquidating Relief Enterprises

The provision in some of the new unemployment relief measures in congress that the Reconstruction Finance corporation make loans to the states for profit-making and thus self-liquidating enterprises is not new. It is one of the favorite methods pursued in Europe.

The Second International Motor Road congress at its recent meeting in Milan, Italy, considered a comprehensive self-liquidating European road building plan presented by the late Albert Thomas, director of the international labor organization of the League of Nations.

For the specific purpose of affording employment for the jobless Mr. Thomas urged the construction of an international network of motor roads through Europe totaling 9,000 miles.

Mr. Thomas said the plan would cost around 4,200,000,000 gold francs (168,000,000 pounds sterling) and on the basis of 200 days a year would give employment to 180,000 workmen in the first year, 468,000 in the second, 560,000 in the third, 655,000 in the fourth, and 655,000 in the final.

To pay for the immense road plan, Mr. Thomas urged a tax of three or four centimes a litre a year on the 10,000,000,000 litres of gasoline consumed yearly in Europe. This would liquidate the cost of the highways in fifteen or twenty years provided the states concerned gave the necessary land free of charge.

Suicides of Jobless Workers

The newspapers print more and more frequent accounts of unemployed workers committing suicide rather than endure the burden of misery accompanying their lamentable condition. The following item from the New York Times is a typical illustration of these tragedies:

"FAILS TO GET JOB, LEAPS TO DEATH

"After a vain attempt to obtain work at the Terminal Employment agency, on the tenth floor at 154 Nassau street, Morris Kerman, address unknown, jumped ten stories to his death about 7 o'clock last night through a rear window of the building to the bottom of an airshaft, according to police. Vincent J. Naroldi, director of the agency, told the police Kerman had just left the agency when he heard a crash, and, running out, saw the broken window through which the man had jumped."

There are nearly 8,000,000 totally unemployed workers in the United States today. Many of them are reaching the stage of desperation which led Morris Kerman to end his life.

Those who own and control our business institutions are responsible for this condition. They control work opportunities. All of the 8,000,000 jobless are without work because employers have dismissed them and refuse to re-employ them.

The owners and controllers of industry could bring this unemployment crisis to an end at once by inaugurating a work week and work day short enough to absorb all the jobless and then adjust the work time to correspond with reduced labor possible from new machinery and methods.

Our business men refuse to make this shorter hour adjustment. They prefer to degrade 8,000,000 workers to the garbage-can standard of unemployment relief rather than give up the policy of the six-day week which developed before the revolutionary application of labor-displacing machinery.

By hanging on to this reactionary policy, by refusing to readjust their labor policies so as to provide jobs for every person willing and able to work, our business men become morally responsible for the Morris Kerman tragedies.

It is time for plain language. Morris Kerman was brought to his death by employers who will not adopt the civilized policy of shorter hours.

Jobs and Men

A Series of Contributed Editorials Discussing Industrial Conditions.

FOR years it has been the hope of most federation unionists and some railway brotherhood members that the four great railway brotherhoods, which stand apart and are independent of the American Federation of Labor, would join the movement for the federation of all railroad workers. This hope has not been realized. The major organizations of railway employes are as distinct as they have ever been from alliance with national or international labor organizations, although it is true the officials as well as the membership of both the railroad and federation organizations have in many ways come closer to each other with the passing of the years. Within the last five years it has seemed on more than one occasion that the national officers of the brotherhoods and the federation would be able to affect some plan whereby at least at certain times the brotherhood and federation members would act in concert in order to preserve the economic status of their members.

After all, alliance of the railway brotherhoods with the American Federation of Labor would accomplish little else than bringing the moral support of the great railway brotherhoods to the whole of the American labor movement, since the likelihood of any nation-wide strike involving organized workers is out of the question. But the moral support of the railroad workers in the labor movement in the United States as a whole is needed and should be given and until the brotherhoods join with the federation workers it cannot be truly said that there is any kind of real unity among the organized workers of this country.

Rail Labor Backs Six-Hour Day as Unemployment Aid

Shortening of Work Periods Would Make More Jobs, Workers' Representative Says in Reply to Carriers.

Washington, June 2.—"This nation, like the rest of the world, is floundering in the depths of an unparalleled depression, of which an underlying and persistent cause is the failure of our great industries to fulfill their primary obligation to provide a livelihood for the masses of the workers who have invested their lives in these industries," Donald R. Richberg, attorney for the standard railroad labor organizations, told the interstate commerce commission during the opening of labor testimony favoring the six-hour working day for railroad employes.

At the direction of congress, the commission is investigating the effects of applying the principle of a six-hour day to the railroad industry.

The railroads, in testimony before the commission, have contended that the cost of the six-hour day would be prohibitive, because of the alleged necessity of paying overtime to workers on a six-hour basis.

More Jobs Labor's Objective.

Replying to the railroads, Richberg declared that increased employment, not increased earnings, is the chief gain seen by the railroad workers for the six-hour day. He took exception to the railroads' interpretation of the "principle of the six-hour day," asserting that the "employes do not contend that more men can be employed without reduction of their earnings and without increased expense. They do contend," he said, "that many more men can be employed with a smaller expense than is indicated by the carriers' witnesses and exhibits.

"In our opening statement," he continued, "we advanced an interpretation of the purpose of this investigation which we believe is sound but which has not been followed in the carriers' evidence. We said: 'It is the purpose of the application of the principle of the six-hour day to relieve unemployment and not to provide a means of increasing the earnings of the employe.' When the carriers apply the six-hour day primarily as a basic pay day, persistently maintaining a longer work-day and paying for additional overtime, they ignore and do not promote the object of the investigation. By this process no more men are put to work, but the earnings of those who are employed are increased.

"We will demonstrate that in every class of service more men can be put to work and increase of individual earnings can be avoided, contrary to the testimony of the carriers.

Unemployment Relief Urged.

"The dominating purpose of this investigation is to find a means to relieve unemployment, to retard the forces that create unemployment. Unquestionably the principle of the six-hour day can be applied so as to counteract influences that produce unemployment. It would be mocking at human misery, jesting at a national calamity, to interpret this principle merely as a means of increasing individual earnings and encouraging the substitution of machine-power for man-power.

"If this inquiry is to accomplish its aim we submit there must be an understanding of its purpose—a recognition of the nature of the problem, in the solution of which this investigation has a national and international significance."

Following Richberg's opening statement, witnesses of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen presented testimony to show that the six-hour day would increase employment.

STRIKE AGAINST LAYOFF WON.

Cartagena, Spain.—Three thousand employes of the naval shipyards here struck in protest against the proposed layoff of 300 men because of lack of work. Upon receiving news of the strike the naval ministry in Lisbon revoked the layoff order. The strikers called off the walkout and returned to their jobs.

What Next!

An automatic radio, greatly simplifying the process of sending messages, was recently demonstrated in Paris. The apparatus can be operated by any one knowing how to read, obviating the necessity of a trained wireless operator. It works by means of knobs, which are turned like the knobs on a radio receiving set. The letters of the alphabet and various signals are printed on a dial turned by a knob, messages thus being spelled out.

The association is composed of independent grocers whose members operate around 200 stores. The association will favor local manufacturers' products wherever possible and give union-made merchandise preference over products of unfair manufacturers.

Connecticut Girls Found Toiling Long Week for Less Than $2 Pay

New Haven, Conn., June 2.—Appalling exploitation of girl workers in Connecticut industries was revealed by Joseph M. Tone, state commissioner of labor, in citing examples of bad conditions that have come to his attention. In one case, he said, a girl worked 55 hours a week in a Shelton shirt factory for $1.97. The girl is the sole wage-earner in a family of eight.

A frail Italian girl, supporting a widowed mother and five younger brothers and sisters, runs a machine in a Willimantic shop for 10 cents a 55-hour week for three weeks as a learner. At the end of the probation she may be dismissed and another dime-a-week learner hired, or she may be hired as a regular employe capable of earning $3 to $5 a week—if she works all day at top speed and turns out first-grade work.

A New Haven girl slaves in a needle-work loft ten hours a day for five days and five on Saturday. She is ordered to work through her lunch hour and complains. She is discharged and her place is filled from the long line of girls waiting at the employment office.

These are among other instances of "sweatshop" evils described by Commissioner Tone. He said he was powerless to correct the situation under present state laws.

"New York's rigid labor laws and Connecticut's lax statutes have brought a swarm of fly-by-night manufacturers into the state during the last five years," said Tone.

Tone and his deputy commissioner, Prof. Wesley J. Couper, are preparing a comprehensive program of progressive labor legislation for presentation to the next general assembly.

BUILDING TRADES REFUSE WAGE REDUCTION PROPOSAL

The Building Trades council of San Francisco refused to recognize the reduced wage scales proclaimed by the Builders' Exchange and declared that the union scales in effect on Jan. 1, 1932, are the recognized scales of the Building Trades council and will continue throughout the year.

AMERICAN FEDERATION OF LABOR BLOCKED FEDERAL PAY SLASHES

Brayman Declares Federation Was Major Influence That Caused Congressmen to Raise Salary Exemption and Defeat Abolition of Saturday Half-Holiday in House Economy Bill.

Washington, June 2.—The American Federation of Labor was the influential factor that protected federal employes against the wholesale pay cuts and abolition of the Saturday half holiday which the economy committee urged the house of representatives to enact, according to Harold Brayman, staff correspondent in Washington of the New York Evening Post.

Mr. Brayman wrote a series of articles on the activities of lobbyists in the national capital against measures for "economy" emanating from various sources.

Here is what he said about the work performed by the American Federation of Labor:

A. F. of L. Leads.

"But the heaviest lobby of all against economy was that against the proposal to cut government salaries, to abandon the Saturday half-holiday, and to put into effect the president's furlough plan.

"The American Federation of Labor was the leader of the fight against this form of economy. Not only did it have a sympathetic interest with the federal government employes' associations in Washington—the Federal Employes' association, the Federal Employes' union and others—but it felt that government salary cuts would encourage industry to make further reductions of the wage scale.

McGrady Canvasses Members.

"It poured its full force into the fight. Edward F. McGrady, of its legislative committee, conducted a canvass of every member of the house, demanding of each that he state his position in definite terms.

"The effect of this was devastating. Members had visions of the reports that would go out next fall to be acted upon by the 'consciences' of the labor unions in their districts, if they did not support the federation. They also feared that primary opponents would spring up. Mr. McGrady pledged 183 of them to vote against salary cuts.

No Threats.

"Without making a threat to any one, the mere fact that the federation was so thoroughly interested as to canvass the house, operated to scare numerous members out of their previous intentions to vote for the furlough plan or the $1,000 exemption on salary cuts, instead of the $2,500 exemption which was adopted. It drove others to a discreet absence. The victory may not be permanent, but there was no doubt that it was a victory for the lobby.

Labor's Influence Strong.

"One prominent republican leader said to me: 'There is no doubt that it was the labor lobby that beat the low exception where the major savings lay in the salary cut plan, and that beat the furlough plan. Members can's stand up against it, particularly in an election year. It is the most powerful lobby in Washington. The veterans' lobby is nothing compared to it.'"

THREE-YEAR JAIL TERM FOR $139,000 SHORTAGE

Newark, N. J.—Vice-Chancellor John H. Backes sentenced Harry G. Hendriks to three years in the state prison for contempt of court for a shortage of $139,000 in his accounts as receiver for the Earl Radio corporation. Hendriks was a court appointee.

BUSINESS MEN REFUSE TO SELL UNFAIR COCA-COLA

Portland, Ore.—Thomas L. Turner, president of the Portland Baseball club, refused to permit the sale of bottled Coca-Cola on the grounds of the club. The manager of Piggly-Wiggly stores in Oregon also advised all store operators to discontinue the sale of the beverage. The action was taken because Coca-Cola is on the unfair list of organized labor.

Labor Day Plans Declared Well in Hand.

TO ENTERTAIN LADIES, ORPHANS

Stellar Features Considered By Program Makers Tuesday Night.

PERRY CALLS FOR MEETING OF OFFICERS

Members of the executive board of Chattanooga Trades and Labor council, together with the trustees, are asked to be present at Central Labor hall Monday night promptly at 7:30, for a brief session before the regular meeting of the council.

President Perry, who asked The Labor World to publish the call, states that a matter of importance must be considered at that time, and urges upon the officials the importance of their attendance.

Residents of the Old Ladies' Home and of the Vine Street Orphanage will be guests of Chattanooga Trades and Labor council at the monster Labor Day celebration being planned for Warner park in September, the proposal contemplating transportation of each and every one to the park, to be served with an old-time barbecue dinner.

Such was the decision of the general Labor Day committee in session Monday night. A rainstorm which struck the city in the early hours of the evening cut attendance somewhat, but approximately thirty-five members were present with reports of progress and with several new suggestions which were thoroughly discussed. One feature of the great program which was proposed at the meeting, but which for the present must be kept secret, is calculated to bring people from several of the larger cities throughout the territory. This particular feature involves a large amount of time and trouble on the part of many, and it was decided to withhold announcement until every angle has been worked out and the attraction assured.

Reports of chairmen indicated splendid progress, without exception, and the interest shown generally in the big project is very gratifying to Central Body officials.

It is hoped that by the date of the next meeting of the general committee detailed announcements may be made as to the main features.

MEDICAL SERVICE AT COST WITHOUT STING OF CHARITY

Bakersfield, Cal.—A movement to give medical charges commensurate with the income of the wage-earner's family was announced by the Kern County, California, Medical association, which will also finance both doctor and hospital bills over a period of one year. Hospitals, drug stores, clinical laboratories and X-ray laboratories joined in the action.

The association points out that service is already provided for the wealthy and the poor, but that the intervening class has difficulty in securing proper medical care during the depression. The association contends its plan will benefit the needy and intermediate class in offering at cost a medical service which is not charity.

EX-LABOR MINISTER RETURNS TO PARLIAMENT

Arthur Greenwood, who was minister of health in the labor government of Great Britain, was returned to the house of commons in a special election, winning a majority over his national conservative opponent. Mr. Greenwood is the first of the defeated ministers to regain a seat in parliament. His election was attributed to general discontent among the industrial workers in the district.

Labor Suggests Advisory Council In Relief Crisis

President Will Need Help of Many Groups in Carrying Out Unemployment Aid Program, A. F. of L. Says.

Washington, June 9.—Declaring that the present emergency is so acute that the president needs the counsel of representatives of various groups, the American Federation of Labor, in the leading editorial in the June issue of the American Federationist, official organ of the federation, suggests the creation of a national advisory council.

The editorial reiterates the federation's view that only action by the federal government can prevent economic collapse and places responsibility for the prevention of national disaster upon congress, with the burden of responsibility shifting to the president after congress has done its part.

"When congress has done its part," the editorial says, "upon the executive will fall responsibility for wise administration. The emergency is so acute that the chief executive will need the counsel of representatives from various groups. Labor suggests an advisory council through which the president could have regular and dependable information so that developing problems could be met quickly. Such a council should be bipartisan, small, but representative of the important groups."

Federal Credit Urged.

The situation of the country today contains the threat of collapse of our economic structure, a calamity which only the federal government can prevent, it is stated. Much of the country's difficulty is laid by the federation to "a real conflict between business and finance as financial institutions are now conducted."

"The obvious way around this deadlock," it is suggested, "is to make federal credit available directly to industries and to provide work through national construction undertakings or by loans to states or cities.

"Wage earners have shown their capacity to keep their heads in a difficult situation and patience in waiting upon adjustments, but they cannot and should not permit starvation to overtake them.

Legislation Now Imperative.

"Congress is preparing to adjourn shortly. Thus far it has refused to make any provision for the relief of those denied opportunity to earn their living. Responsibility for averting disaster rests squarely upon the members of the senate and house of representatives. Legislation must be enacted now in order to become effective in time."

In closing, the editorial declares that "if we would maintain our social and national progress we must plan to control developments in the next few months and direct our progress toward recovery."

OPEN-SHOPPERS TRY TO WRECK ELECTRICIANS

Industrial Spies Placed in Local Unions.

JOURNAL BARES WIDE CONSPIRACY

Documentary Evidence Shows Unscrupulous Tactics of Bosses.

Letters containing instructions to "industrial detectives" and showing the existance of a nation-wide plot against the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers have fallen into the hands of the union's officials, "Labor" reports in its current issue.

According to these documents—photostatic copies of which appear in the current issue of the Electrical Workers' "Journal"—the undercover attack on the union is being waged at New York City, Pittsburgh, Baltimore, Buffalo, Cincinnati, St. Louis and Dayton.

Operations are directed by "The American Financiers' Investigation and Protective Bureau." All letters are signed by G. Edgar Applegate and George E. Anderson. The handwriting of both signatures is identical.

While many of the letters contain secret messages and cryptic references, considerable of the contents are understandable and clearly reveal the lengths to which "open shoppers" will go in their efforts to disrupt trade unions.

One of the first orders issued to the spies was to stir up religious prejudice in the New York local union. Jews were to be pitted against Gentiles, Protestants against Catholics.

The same letter contained instructions for discrediting a local union official.

"It is possible for him to fix all insurance matters—Show that he does," the spies were told.

An order to operatives at Buffalo went into details as to the best methods of causing dissension among the unionists there.

"Stress the money-making possibilities the officers (especially the ones at Washington) have," Mr. Applegate-Anderson ordered. "Use all the imagination at your hands. That is what you are paid for. Remember, one-half facts and a vivid imagination has made many a good book. In forecasting events, real or imagined, be more vague."

Emphatic instructions were given to try to break the union financially.

"Use every means available to keep them (the union) in court litigation—this is the best way of reducing their treasury," the order explained.

St. Louis spies were told to go the limit.

"Use any means or tactics that you think best, so long as they bring the desired results to our clients," they were told. "In your attacks, contest the legality of the present crowd holding office. Try to have an immediate election. Also a receiver being appointed would help our clients immensely. This has all been outlined to you on your instruction sheets."

One of the most revealing letters is from Mr. Applegate-Anderson to a New York association of employers who evidently had objected to the expense of the spy activities.

"We have, as you probably know, eight of our informers in the electricians' organization," the chief of the spy bureau said. "Most of these men have been in our employ for upwards of eight years. Their cards range a number of years.

"The same conditions practically apply to the steam fitters, elevator workers, bricklayers, plasterers and carpenters. While it is true we need fewer men in these latter trades, you must take into consideration that the electrician is of higher intelligence, does not as a rule believe the first rumor he hears. For that reason our stories must be repeated to him oftener to get him to the point where he is receptive.

"We pay these informers a small weekly wage, but a liberal bonus for successful endeavors, such as circulars (we dictate), law suits, story spreading, making motions and speaking at meetings.

"I am straining every available source at my disposal to get them into the important positions and thereby lessen the expenses that you now have, such as legal and press expenditures.

"I have had thorough investigations made of the present officers of the electricians, but I cannot get anything that can be used that would be favorable to our side.

"In closing, I will again remind you that the tactics that I am using were successful in the McNulty-Reid affair. I believe by using the above tactics, and, in addition, to fighting all forms of insurance and centering strong opposition on their leader in Washington, we shall be successful in the near future."

("The McNulty-Reid affair" was an internal fight which split the organization into two national factions in 1908.)

Operative "Bartley" (an assumed name) was assigned to lead the "thought suggesters" at Baltimore. According to his instructions, he was to see that his men were "well scattered throughout the hall to suggest thoughts to other members and to start and participate in any demonstrations favorable to our side."

Letters to all operatives frequently stress the importance of getting "more contact men." These are apparently individuals who can be used to further the spy's purposes.

And the spies are cautioned to keep their "deportment above reproach, so that your contact men will place confidence in your very word."

But in another letter, Mr. Applegate-Anderson tells his operatives to be "vague" in their promises to these "contact men," so that there will not be any great difficulty in eliminating them "in the new organization we have for the members when the present one is no more."

Carpenters Lose Veteran Member

Local Carpenters lost another veteran and valued member last Friday, when Arthur Price Conley, 47, passed away at his home. Mr. Conley had been ill for many months. He had been a member and officer of Local 74 for many years, and his advice and counsel was always valued by his fellow-members. Funeral services were held Saturday from the Clifton Hills Baptist church, Rev. A. G. Frost officiating. Pallbearers were as follows: C. C. Ferry, A. V. Cordell, Lon Ault, Ed Bozeman, L. H. Haynes, C. W. Smith, J. A. Bowman, F. H. May and Ed Tucker.

The Labor World joins with relatives and friends in mourning the passing of this good trades unionist.

Cuthbert Returns From Sad Mission

T. R. Cuthbert, secretary of Chattanooga Trades and Labor council, with Mrs. Cuthbert, returned Wednesday from his old home, Nashville, where they were called by the death of Mr. Cuthbert's maternal grandmother, Mrs. S. M. Robertson. Mrs. Robertson was 74 years of age, and had been in failing health for years.

The Labor World speaks for the entire local movement in extending to Brother Cuthbert and other surviving relatives heartfelt sympathy in their bereavement.

Violet Studio In New Home July 1

Lester D. Cohn, manager of the Violet studio, announces that business will occupy its new quarters at 11 East Seventh street on or about July 1.

Mr. Cohn said the storeroom on East Seventh street is being completely remodeled and renovated, and the studio will have one of the most modern homes in the city when finished. T. S. Rose, of the Carpenters, is in charge of the work, which, of course, will be strictly union, Mr. Cohn said.

The Violet studios, featuring kodak finishing and supplies, is an old Chattanooga institution, being located at present at 923 Market street.

DENVER INAUGURATES UNION LABEL DRIVE

Denver, Colo.—The Denver labor movement decided to make May union label month and launched the most vigorous drive ever seen here to emphasize the necessity of spending union-earned money for union-made products. To add to the enthusiasm the label league announced an essay contest with prizes on the subject "Why I Should Patronize the Union Label, House Card and Working Button."

JOBLESS LOOK TO CONGRESS FOR PERMANENT AID

Nearly Eleven Million Are Now Idle.

ESTIMATE HELD AS CONSERVATIVE

Unemployed Will Pass Judgment on Opponents at Election, Says Green.

Washington, June 9.—America's millions of unemployed are now looking to congress for help and they will pass judgment at the November election on those who fail to help, President William Green, of the American Federation of Labor, declared in a statement on unemployment based on government figures.

Estimating that 10,634,000 persons were out of work in March, Mr. Green showed that the number is now close to 11,000,000, as at least 200,000 lost their jobs from March to May. He said that the total is probably now "higher than ever before in history." As a result of this condition, he declared, "deep-seated unrest is everywhere apparent" and "men and women are near desperation."

"There were more than ten and a half millions persons out of work in the United States in March, 1932, according to our new estimate of unemployment. This is more than one-fifth of those normally at work for pay," Mr. Green said.

"They Want Work."

"These more than ten millions of unemployed are looking to congress for help. They want work. They are impatiently looking for plans that will provide them opportunity to earn a living. They will vote in the November election. The measuring rod labor will apply to legislative records, its influence in creating jobs.

"One-fifth of those normally earning incomes by work are prevented from producing the wealth that would pay their incomes. They are living on the proceeds of past work or on charity. Poverty is starving these millions physically and spiritually. Vital questions are dominating discussion in homes and meeting places all over the country. Deep-seated unrest is everywhere apparent. Men and women are near desperation. They ask for the opportunity to earn their daily bread. The increase in credit and increase in bank failures mean nothing to them if jobs are not forthcoming as a consequence. Financial institutions are for service."

Estimate Held Conservative.

Asserting that careful study shows that unemployment has been increasing faster among unorganized workers than among trade unionists, Mr. Green shows how the American Federation of Labor has arrived at the conclusion that 10,634,000 were idle in March. He emphasizes that the figure is a conservative estimate.

WAGE REDUCTION REJECTED.

Dallas, Tex.—The Bakers' union of Dallas offered to write a voluntary 10 per cent reduction in wages in its new contract for the coming year. Some of the bakery owners demanded a 20 per cent reduction. The union refused to take this added reduction, and union consumers promptly withdrew their patronage from the reactionary employers who sought to impose an utterly unwarranted lowering of living conditions on the men who make the bread.

HAMILTON TYPOS PROVIDE FOR OWN UNEMPLOYED

Hamilton, Ont., Can.—Although the business depression struck Hamilton with great severity, not one member of the Typographical union has gone on city relief. The union has assessed its working members two and one-half per cent of their weekly salaries as an unemployment relief measure, the secretary said, and has collected over $5,000 from this source and time given out by members.

The union pays single unemployed members $5 a week, but if they receive one day's work a week this relief is canceled. Unemployed married men are paid $10 a week, but this relief is cut off if they get two days work.

Division of Work Urged to Restore Purchasing Power

Michigan Representative Declares Congress Can Set Example to Industry by Placing U. S. Employes on Short Week.

Washington, June 9.—Only one way is open to restore purchasing power lost by unemployment, and that is to put the unemployed back to work by dividing up the available jobs, Representative Roy O. Woodruff, of Michigan, told the house in advocating a five-day week with a six-hour day.

"Considering the reduction in pay rolls, in employment, etc.," he said, "it is safe to say that roughly one-third of our population, or 40,000,000 people, have in effect lost their entire purchasing power and nine-tenths of their consuming power. Figuring 8,000,000 workers to be entirely unemployed, at two and one-half persons to the family, would give a total of 20,000,000 without income.

"Added to that, we have a farm population, according to the 1930 census, of 30,477,550. This population has lost at least half of its purchasing power, which in actual results would equal another 15,000,000 people totally without purchasing power. This would bring the total of those without income up to 35,000,000. Then other gainfully employed persons who are on part-time or reduced wages or salaries would make up the balance.

Quarter of Workers Idle.

"This figure of 40,000,000 persons without income or purchasing power agrees with the fall in business, in rail loadings, etc., closely enough to make it a good working figure. It may be fairly assumed that we have a condition in this country which equals one worker in every four without income or purchasing power, which would mean roughly that 25 per cent of our normally gainfully employed are out of employment now.

"It must be evident that since at least 93 per cent of our market is within our own country (more than that now) and since more than 80 per cent of our entire population—consumers—is made up of the gainfully employed and their dependents, that our avenue of recovery must be not abroad in foreign markets, but at home in our domestic market. Our first concern should be the restoration of that 25 or 30 per cent depleted purchasing power which means at least that much consuming power at home. How may that be done?

Division of Work Urged.

"But one possible way is open. That is to get the unemployed back to work. And there is but one economically sound way of restoring these unemployed sufferers to employment and that is by dividing up the available amount of work. That means fewer days a week, or fewer hours a day, or both. The fact is that to completely take up the slack that has accumulated and to stop the depression immediately it will be necessary to go to a five-day week with a six-hour day.

"Congress cannot put the shorter week day plan into execution throughout the industry of the United States without a constitutional amendment. And a constitutional amendment could not be achieved in time to arrest our downward plunge in this depression. But congress can, insofar as the government is concerned, adopt the plan because in that case the government is the employer."

Plan Could Be Made Effective.

Woodruff said if congress would adopt this plan, and if that could be followed immediately by a conference between a coalition of leaders of both parties in the house and senate with representatives of finance, industry, labor and commercial organizations like the Chamber of Commerce of the United States, "there is no question that the plan could be put into execution to be effective in every line of industry in this country within a short time."

Former Local Plumber Passes

News has been received in this city of the death, in Vicksburg, Miss., of James A. McPhillimy, former Chattanoogan and member of Local 43, Plumbers and Steamfitters. Funeral services were held in Meridian, Miss.

Mr. McPhillimy was a Spanish war veteran, and had gone to Vicksburg for treatment of a long-standing illness. He is survived by two sisters, Mrs. W. E. Downey, of Vicksburg, and Mrs. H. A. Connor, of Hattiesburg, and one brother, Edward, of Meridian.

NEW TAX BILL "SOAKS" URBAN WAGE-EARNERS

Act Puts Burden on City Workers.

REVENUE MEASURE CALLED "INIQUITOUS"

Clarke Analyzes Budget-Balancing Product of Nation's Lawmakers.

By B. C. CLARKE

Washington, June 9.—The federal tax bill as it has been passed by congress and signed by President Hoover, represents one of the most iniquitous pieces of class legislation that the country has known since the days of the Civil war.

This measure has been heralded far and wide as one that "soaks the rich." What it really does is to "soak" the wage-earner and the salaried man in the towns and cities and industrial communities, and that for the benefit of the rural and farm population of the country.

Both the house and senate balked at passing a manufacturers' sales tax, and instead, loaded an iniquitous and indefensible system of excise and commodity taxes that will hit every wage-earner and salaried man and will let the farm population go almost scot-free.

City Workers Hit.

Objectionable as were many of the features of the manufacturers' sales tax, it would have taken a sum of from $5 to $10 a year from the average wage-earner and salaried man. But the taxes that are to be collected instead will take from $25 to $40 from each town or city resident, and will be scarcely felt in any rural community.

The house and senate have given virtual tax exemption to almost one-half the population of the country, and that at the expense of those people who have suffered most severely from unemployment, from wage cuts and slashes, and have felt the most devastating effects of the depression.

At the top of these iniquitous taxes is that of 3 cents on the dollar on bills of consumers for electric current. This proposal originated in the senate, with the assertion that it would apply to the power companies.

Tax Shifted to Consumers.

But in the joint conference of senate and house conferees, it was shifted to the consumers and will apply directly each month to every person who uses electricity in their homes.

Three-cent first-class postage is another inexcusable levy which this congress puts into effect with the knowledge that more than 80 per cent of first-class mail originates in and is delivered in urban communities.

Two-cent postage and first-class mail has been more than paying its way all the time in the postal service. The huge losses have been in the $106,000,000 which the government pays to rural free delivery carriers to drive their automobiles over routes of 25 or 30 miles, and further, to the exemptions from postage that are granted to small town newspapers in circulating to the rural population of their counties, and in ridiculously low charges that are in effect on parcels post mail to prevent some of this business going to express companies.

Auto Owners Burdened.

Another item of complete loss are the constantly mounting costs of carrying congressional and government mail free of all charge.

The automobile is as much a necessity today to the carpenter, the brick mason, the plasterer and the plumber as it is to the rich man. They travel in it to and from their daily work, and it extends the area in which they can and do work. On Sundays they use it as a means of recreation for their families.

The federal tax bill invades the gasoline tax field, which has been used exclusively by the states for road building purposes, and levies 1 cent a gallon on gasoline and 1 cent a quart on oil. It likewise taxes all tires, inner tubes and accesories.

This measure puts a tax of 2 cents on personal bank checks, which are used only in a small degree in rural communities.

The Social Ideals of Jesus of Nazareth

An Interpretation

Written for The Labor World
By WILLIAM L. MOSS

Chapter V
JESUS' EVALUATION OF LIFE
Part III

"Is a little child ..."
Mark 10:15

WM. L. MOSS

When we look through and beyond the incident itself during which Jesus said "Whosoever shall not receive the kingdom of God as a little child, he shall in no wise enter therein" (Mark 10:15) and study the facts that prompted him to utter the words there is at once opened up before us one of the most instructive and at the same time beautiful vistas possible to meet with in the analysis of the Master's teaching. True as this may be, still there exists an almost harsh misunderstanding about these words, for it is a fact that their paradoxical nature at first baffles us and their real meaning comes out only after a close analysis of the passage.

In these words the prayer, "as a little child," stings us, for apparently Jesus tells us that the grown man must descend to the level of a little child before he can avail himself of the fulness of life conferred on him by entrance into the Kingdom of God.

On the surface, these words also tell us the child becomes the teacher of the man. We instinctively put aside this interpretation of the words, for we know this fact does not hold good in real life.

A second look at the passage and we try to convince ourselves that Jesus means that the child, solely because of its guilelessness, is nearer the Kingdom of God than a ripened and disciplined character; in other words, that the childish spirit of its freshness and godly purity is inherently better than the changed spirit of the grown man. Again we instinctively recoil from any such interpretation of His words for if this were true Jesus's preaching that he could shall possess or enter the Kingdom of God, We [illegible] the Kingdom is [illegible] by only the pure in heart and of the child-spirit is [illegible] to the man-spirit [illegible] would thus be, in the Kingdom scale, the rulers of men! Like a perpetual rose and beyond our acceptance, since we do not need divine intuition to inform us that this does not hold good in actual life; we have only to look about us to see the true state of things.

It is obvious that if Jesus at the same occasion, instead of saying "Whosoever shall not receive the kingdom of God as a little child ..." asked one of His disciples [illegible] firm-stepping, clear-eyed young man or some learned, wise and experienced man to step forward, put his hand on the disciple's shoulder and "Whosoever shall not receive the kingdom of God as this [illegible] of mine, he shall in no wise enter therein" all our confusion, generated by our subconscious total resentment of the passage as it stands would have never occurred. If Jesus had only done this! But He didn't, and so we have the passage as it is.

Was Jesus, then, a rank sentimentalist by nature or, at least on this particular occasion, was He making a bold bid for popular favor by fondling and idolizing the children of a few parents gathered about Him? We know that the opposite is true about Him. Therefore if we would get the real sense and meaning out of His words we must answer one question. The question is not why did Jesus choose a little child as the symbol of the gateway for men's entrance into the Kingdom, but what is there about a little child that moved Jesus to say that we must become as a little child before we can ever hope to possess the Kingdom and be numbered among God's blessed ones.

That "Taxpayers" Meeting

After several weeks of ballyhoo through the local newspapers and otherwise, a "taxpayers" meeting was staged at the Memorial auditorium Wednesday night, the number attending being stated as some 1,400.

Just what was expected to be accomplished was not exactly clear to us labor folks, although we admit that the personnel of the promoters prevented an unbiased study of the possible purpose. In other words, with John Edgerton and Gus Dyer advocating anything, we prefer to reserve judgment on the ultimate aim.

Careful perusal of the newspaper account of the meeting in Thursday morning's Times fails to throw any light on the situation. Our impression is that Dyer delivered a bombastic and rather inane tirade against public office holders, declaring that the voters must rise and demand major reductions in taxes. Edgerton's discourse was apparently along similar lines. Neither, so far as could be learned, offered any constructive program for reduction of governmental expense.

Having thus arrived at this point, where do we go from here?

Mr. Engel Scores Again

Mr. Joseph Engel came into Chattanooga a few years ago when our citizenship was made up of quiet, peace-loving folks, and almost overnight transformed about half the population into a raving, fanatical mass of humanity which has thrown all restraint to the winds, laid aside business cares and made the official greeting "What's the score?" As every true Chattanoogan knows, this was done by the simple act of buying a baseball team to represent this city in the Southern association, after some two decades of sand-lot representatives for the Dynamo of Dixie.

Showmanship, about which much has been said and written, and business acumen, which has been mentioned occasionally, have been major factors in the remarkable power exerted over the people. Which leads to the thought in mind.

Southern association cities are feeling the depression in their baseball parks, and attendance, even in the largest, is said to have fallen off considerably. So, possibly taking their cue from certain industrialists and so-called "economists," the club owners are said to have suddenly decided to disregard signed contracts and "ask" their players to take "voluntary" reductions in their salaries. Yeh, we have heard somewhat of these "voluntary" reductions. They took 'em.

In conference with a committee of players—Mr. Boss, Mr. Hulvey and Mr. Barfoot—President Engel is reported to have said:

"We are doing fairly well. There will be no salary cuts so long as I am president of the Chattanooga club. Go out there and win a pennant for me." Incidentally, two players were notified of good increases in salary over the amounts their signed contracts called for.

And thus the Chattanooga club owner scores again. He probably figured, and rightfully so, that fair dealing makes satisfied employes—whether they be artists or artisans—and a satisfied baseball club will be found higher in the standings as the season progresses than that club whose members feel they have been done an injustice. And again, every game in the "won" column means more customers at the gate.

The spirit which has undoubtedly been created in the players by the sensible action of the clubowner will of itself bring through the turnstiles many times the number of paid admissions necessary to justify his decision.

And thus President Engel scores again. More's the pity some of our industrial leaders and office-holders cannot look over the ends of their noses and see what the local baseball mogul has seen.

Organize—Stop Wage Cuts

Bad as conditions are, it would take a blacker brush than has yet been used to paint a picture of conditions as they would be if there were no trade union movement.

Though commodity prices have gone slithering downward, the storekeepers of the land would be selling much less if there were no trade unions.

The trade unions have held back the down sweep of wages. As a matter of fact it is hard to say how low wages now would be if it were not for the steady, effective opposition of trade unions.

Probably few storekeepers recognize the value of trade unions. But there is and for a half century has been more money for working people to spend in stores because of unions.

Some day merchants will understand the value to them of unions. But they are in no hurry to understand.

When employers come demanding a 20 per cent. reduction and the union succeeds in making it perhaps a 10 per cent. cut instead the stores are 10 per cent. better off, as far as the buying power of those particular workers is concerned.

In St. Louis the other day the union street car men succeeded in squeezing a wage cut down to a little 3 per cent.

Many an attempted 20 per cent. cut has been stopped by the unions.

Also many a man is working and earning money who would not be working if it were not for the unions. The unions have brought about shorter work-days and in many cases they have brought about staggering of work. The workers benefit, and so do the merchants.

Now and then merchants stand with labor, as many of them did a year ago in Danville, Va.

Some day they will all see where they belong. Meanwhile the unions go right on making things better for everyone, including merchants and excepting only the robbers who wouldn't trust a friend if they had one.

There is no question about the intentions, past and present, of the so-called and properly called Wall Street ring. They had intended to cut labor down to the last possible notch. They had intended to do a lot of things that they haven't done, though what they have done is too much for labor.

The point is, the onslaught hasn't gone as far as it was intended to go.

Now what's the lesson?

The lesson is that if with our present strength we have prevented a lot of devastation, we could, with the strength we ought to have, prevent a lot more devastation—and with strength enough we could prevent it all.

There's the point. There's the arrow pointing to the thing to do!

If the specimens of the human race now on the job won't do the thing required, then the big boys will keep on almost having their way and there will be plenty more of unemployment, hunger and who knows what besides.

We have to shoulder some of the blame ourselves if we permit our strength to go unorganized and unused.

Is America at the Cross Roads?

The President has just told Congress its conduct will determine whether democracy has the power to act swiftly enough to save itself from grave consequences. Congress was told, in substance, that Europe is raiding our currency.

Three years ago—and even now also—Wall Street is doing likewise. Meanwhile Europe is plugging headlong into deep troubles of its own and the Orient has for some time been doing likewise.

If America is at this cross roads—and quite likely it is—then there is need of more than has been proposed. And let all and sundry know and remember this: A nation that is morally strong within her own borders, just to her own people, is morally strong abroad. A nation bitten at the heel by scoundrels in her midst, is weakened at the outset.

The Passing Show

Note and Comment on Things Doing in the March of Events

Owen D. Young, who has been boomed as a presidential possibility, says:

"We can hardly overthrow the whole capitalistic system merely because it isn't at the present time functioning to the greatest advantage of all concerned."

Naturally, Mr. Young is correct in what he probably means, but he is not correct in what he actually says.

We "can" overthrow the captalistic system, if that is a proper designation, for any reason or for no reason. Whether we should do that is another matter.

Sensible men and women will say we should not. There are plenty who say we should.

Those who say we may have revolutionary trouble on our hands by next winter are found among all kinds of people. The number of prophets of trouble grows.

In New York City there are about 100,000 families living on $2.68 per week per family. Picture that! And yet the prophets of disaster are less numerous among these poor people than among professional men.

One New York school child refused food a few days ago, saying, "it isn't my turn to eat today."

A mechanic who has had no work for eight months and in whose family there are ten children refused to take scab work.

"Why is there so little grumbling?" a charity officer asked, really puzzled.

Who knows? And who knows when there will be grumbling, and worse?

America has never seen such days, such puzzles and such uncertainty for the future.

It is reported that the cost of living is some 20.1 per cent below 1928 levels, but that doesn't mean a thing to the thousands of families in which no wages are earned.

Some learned engineers—the board of the American Engineering council, to be exact—say there is too wide a spread between the wages of skilled trades and the wages of the multitudes of unorganized workers.

True enough, but the remedy, and the only remedy, is to raise the miserable pittances called wages earned by the unorganized.

We must have fundamental readjustments before things can be all right.

"Five-and-ten" girls must get more wages and the Woolworth heirs less in dividends. Bank clerks must get more and bank stockholders less.

Superstructures of financial paper must give way to decent wages.

Corporate greed must give way to human well-being.

Owen D. Young is right enough in what he means and he would doubtless agree that we must have far-reaching readjustments. To have a revolution would be a sad exhibition of human ignorance.

The trouble is that in this vast complexity which we call a system, few have any idea of how the thing works. Few know where to start making readjustments.

It is easier for the mass to say, "smash it all" than to fix it even a little.

Those who have a good view of what is going on will do well to use their brains now. High finance will do well to come off its high horse. Congress will do well to think less of elections and more of social welfare and economic justice.

Why not strongly emphasize that organization of workers is for the nation? That's what the Pennsylvania State Federation of Labor is doing, in a leaflet outlining the organization's 1932 program of action:

"We are for the organization of all Pennsylvania workers as a patriotic duty to the country," the federation says. "Unions alone can keep up wages and purchasing power, and stop depressions before they start. This depression came because of insufficient purchasing power by coal miners, farmers, textile workers and other workers. It came because there weren't a large enough number of union men to hold up the purchasing power of the nation. The only way another depression can be stopped is by the organization of all workers. It is nothing less than a patriotic duty for the unions to perform."

The movement for gardening by the unemployed is growing and may duplicate the war gardens of 1917 and 1918. States, communities, relief organizations and corporations are helping jobless workers to start gardens on vacant land. Food raised in these gardens helps the unemployed and aids morale by keeping at work in the sunshine men who otherwise might be brooding indoors.

But there is another side to the picture. The gardens reduce the market of the farmer and truck grower. While benefiting one group, they injure another. This is inevitable under a system which produces things only for profit. Some day there will be evolved a saner system of society under which production will be for use and not solely for profit. Then what benefits the living standards of one group will benefit all.

Labor and the Courts

By GEORGE F. SAMUELS

Written for The Labor World

INTRODUCTION

"It is with the judiciary itself that rests the burden of obtaining and holding the respect of the people, by deserving it."
—Gen. Geo. A. Bingham

IT has been an expressed desire of the editor of The Labor World that such a series of articles as the writer plans to make these be available for publication in his columns and it has been because of this determination of the editor to give his readers, in addition to the usual amount of strictly labor news, reading matter of an educational character that has moved the writer to hesitatingly accept the oft-repeated offer for space in which to outline the past and present relations between labor and the courts of the land.

The writer says he "hesitatingly" accepted The Labor World editor's offer. This is more than just literally true, for the writer does not feel he is in all respects equipped to undertake the task before him. But having been given the assignment, coupled with the fact that no one else seems to care to shoulder the work accompanying such an arduous amount of research, the writer feels he cannot, with justice to the readers of this weekly newspaper, any longer refuse Mr. Cooke the pleasure of seeing his wish realized!

That there is a great deal of disrespect for the courts of our country, that our courts have not at all times been entitled to respect from the people whom they were constituted by the laws of the land to interpret the law for, that the personnel of our courts—lawyers and judges—have not always been morally and from a judicial standpoint all that they should have been, and above all else, that the courts as a whole are prejudicial against labor as such are facts about which there is no argument. Without becoming contentious and argumentative merely for the sake of being ill-natured and class-conscious, the writer will endeavor to slowly unfold from week to week for the information of the readers of The Labor World what has been for years past and what is today the attitude of our courts toward labor.

Beyond this for the present the writer does not care to say anything further but shall submit his articles to his readers (and to the tender mercies of Mr. Cooke's editorial pencil) on their merits alone.

"Removing my telephone was just like barring the door to my friends," remarked a former customer who came to have his telephone re-connected.

"And most instructive to me," he continued, "was the fact that I really learned how much my telephone was worth when I attempted to save the small cost by doing without it. I'll know better than to try that again."

One of the unusual characteristics of the telephone is that day after day it serves the family, running errands, saving time and money, while its efficiency is so casually accepted that the telephone is not missed until it is gone.

Probably that is why many folks who have asked to have their telephones put back in tell us they realize that the cost of telephone service is so low that it really doesn't pay to try to do without it.

CY KOLOGY, EDITOR

It takes so little to make us sad;
Just a slighting word or a doubting sneer,
Just a scornful smile on some lips held dear;
And our footsteps lag, though the goal seemed near,
And we lose the courage and hope we had—
So little it takes to make us sad.

It takes so little to make us glad;
Just a cheering clasp of a friendly hand,
Just a word from one who can understand;
And we finish the task we long had planned
And we lose the doubt and the fear we had—
So little it takes to make us glad.

Organized Labor Plans Relief for Illinois Miners

Butcher Workmen Give Financial Aid and Other Unions Pledge Action—Strong Appeal for Help Is Issued.

Springfield, Ill., June 9.—The first union to respond to the appeal of the Illinois miners for financial help in their fight against a drastic wage cut was the Amalgamated Meat Cutters and Butcher Workmen of North America, with headquarters in Chicago. Despite the difficult financial circumstances of the organization, it donated $200 to help the strikers and their families.

The Chicago and Illinois Federation of Labor have pledged support along with other organizations and plans are being made to organize committees and conferences to carry on a systematic campaign for the collection of funds, food and clothing.

In a burning appeal to the labor movement and its friends, the Illinois miners' relief committee of District No. 12, United Mine Workers of America, called for aid in their fight that began April 1. The termination of the three-year contract between the Illinois Coal Operators' association and the Illinois miners' union brought forth the demands of operators that the Illinois miners accept a wage cut of 36 per cent. Diametrically opposed to the proposals of the operators, the Illinois miners demanded that the lives of the hundreds of thousands of miners and their families be taken as the basis. As a result of the proposals and counter-proposals the negotiations are at a deadlock, with 55,000 miners and some 300,000 dependents facing great odds.

All funds and supplies should be sent to the Illinois Miners' Relief committee, Illinois Mine Workers' building, Springfield, Ill.

Addressing 5,000 members of the United Mine Workers of America at Du Quoin, John H. Walker, president of the Illinois miners' union, hurled the challenge that "the miners of Illinois have won before and they will win again, in spite of all the forces that are against us! For many years I have participated actively in the struggles of the Illinois miners. I remember vividly 1897 and 1910. I saw women and little children go hungry. I have seen the baby die due to the fact that it never got proper food."

"The whole struggle simmers down to one basic question at the present time," said Walker. "Don't let us kid ourselves about it, either. If we are to win we have to stay out longer than the other fellow."

The veteran labor leader continued in the course of his speech to give an analysis of the problems of the Illinois miners, laying special emphasis of the need of preserving the Illinois miners' union.

THE CRY FOR JOBS

Editor The Labor World:

"I need a job," "I want a job," "I must have a job," "Do you know where I can find a job?" These are the great questions now being constantly asked by men and women throughout our country. All conversations have as their main topic the finding of employment. The demand for jobs exceeds the supply. Conditions are becoming more acute each day. Here in our own good city of Chattanooga, we daily hear of the constant plea for work—work of any description to help keep families together, to help keep helpless children from the threats of hunger, to keep children in school and prevent them from being underfed, undernourished and without clothnig.

Where are all of these jobs? We all know that new machinery, new inventions, business mergers, the after-war effects, bank failures, and political corruptions, together with Wall street stock market crashes have caused the general depression—and the scarcity of jobs. But children can't starve and there must be jobs.

Now that congress is again in session, what will it do to really help employment conditions in this country?

A man loves his children. He loves to work for them. No child has a right to be cruelly neglected. A man without a job is forced to neglect the proper care of his child. Neglected children means poverty, disease and crime. Men don't want charity—they want jobs. There must be some basic remedy.

What will our congress do? Shall children starve? Where can men find jobs? What shall our congress answer?

Go to your Union Meetings

Don't say you are too tired; the weather is bad; or there is too much quibbling and "hot air" to interest me.

Every time you miss a meeting and leave it to the other fellow to look out for your interest, you are doing an injustice both to yourself and your organization.

Your views on especially vital subjects should be represented in discussion and by vote, and the only way for this to be done is for you to be at your union meeting.

You are responsible for the good and welfare of your organization, and non-attendance of union meetings on your part is not excuse enough for you to voice your opinion after a measure has been passed. It is then time for you to concur in what has been done and work in harmony with the officers and other members of your union.

Go to your union meetings regularly and induce others to do the same, because one important thing to remember is the meaning of the slogan:

"United we stand, Divided we fall."

LACK OF FUNDS MENACE RELIEF JOBS FOR 8,000

New York.—Unparalleled distress for thousands of New York City's unemployed and their dependents was visioned by William R. Matthews, director of the emergency work and relief bureau, as a result of depleted funds. He said 8,000 of the 20,000 on the emergency-job pay rolls of the bureau were in danger of being dropped with no work for any of them in sight, and that very soon 36,000 men receiving two days of work a week from the city commission work bureau would be dismissed and deprived of their pittance from this source.

Mr. Matthews declared that out of 34,769 homes of the unemployed investigated by the work bureau, 69 per cent or 25,016 cases were without resources and unable to subsist unless support was provided. In all of the 34,769 homes at least one person had sought emergency work for which no funds were available.

Homes Without Food.

He said that investigators often observed that a home had no food in its kitchen for the next meal. Children were found playing without adequate clothing. Other symptoms of unemployment distress were pawn tickets, rooms scantily furnished, candles, kerosene lamps and extreme despondency.

Mr. Andrews stressed the fact that private charity funds have failed to meet the situation and make imperative larger and larger appropriations from public sources.

Remember the Scotchman who saved his Red Cross pin from one year to the next?

Restless, could not sleep

"THERE were days when I felt like I could not get my work done. I would get so nervous and 'trembly' I would lie down. I was very restless, and could not sleep at night.

My mother advised me to take Cardui, and I certainly am glad she did. It is the first thing that seemed to give me any strength. I felt better after the first bottle. I kept it up and am now feeling fine."—Mrs. T. R. Gibson, Fort Payne, Ala.

Jack Frost got a free haircut last week. It happened this way: Jack went into the Sanitary barber shop, and, rushing into Mr. Mitchell's chair, demanded to be made presentable. "Mitch," of course, always willing to oblige, gave him the works, and turned out a "finished product." When he got the bill Jack loudly protested that he hadn't ordered a haircut and didn't know he was getting one. So Mr. Mitchell, to save further argument, charged the haircut to "profit and loss" and let it go at that.

Milwaukee Creates Jobs for Idle By Short Week for City Employes

By D. W. HOAN

Mayor of Milwaukee, Wis.

Universal cutting of wages is frequently advocated and resorted to as a remedy for this depression. This leads to a reduction of actual consuming power.

It lessens the demand for manufactured goods. It results in the closing of more factories. Then follows the demand for further cuts in wages.

A material slash in the wages and salaries of city employes would be used as an excuse and pretext for further cuts in wages by private employers. In any event, if private industry continues to drive wages down to the point where a city is forced likewise to cut its pay schedules, city officials must do so at the expense of digging their own graves by sinking deeper into the mire of economic depression.

For example, thousands of small shopkeepers are hanging on by a mere thread; to cut their trade more by further cuts in wages means to close them up and drive them to the poor relief, which again raises taxes.

One remedy that could and should be applied at once throughout the entire nation is the introduction of a universal six-hour work day. This at least would give immediate employment to most, if not all, of those out of work. It would very materially minimize the demand for poor relief and stave off the increasing menace of innumerable municipal bankruptcies.

At the outset this would mean a reduction in each worker's earning power. But with a gradual increase in wages we would create an expanding market for manufactured products and be on the road, at least, to a marked alleviation of the present depression.

The Milwaukee sewerage commission has already adopted a 40-hour-a-week schedule. I have recommended that during this crisis all 10-day shift work be placed on a six-hour basis and that the commissioner of public works immediately be instructed to alter his specifications to provide for a six-hour work day on all contract work, with no overtime except in emergency, and a double shift when necessary to expedite the work.

I have also advised a careful study by all departments and the common council with a view of cutting hours even of clerical and other workers, wherever practicable. This will mean a temporary reduction in the earnings of employes, but will spread employment and thus reduce the burden of outdoor relief.

I believe that during the depression a city is justified in resorting to hand labor wherever the abandonment of machinery is not too costly. It is deplorable to think that to the cost of machine production must be added the cost of county poor relief to arrive at an honest comparison with hand labor.

Such, however, is the case. It is, therefore, not only more human, but less costly than would appear at first glance, to turn backward for the present and employ as much hand labor as possible.

I have recommended that the commissioner of public works revise his policies and specifications wherever practicable to employ hand instead of machine labor.

HAND LABOR USED IN JAPAN'S JOBLESS RELIEF

Tokyo, Japan.—The home department of Japan set aside $8,800,000 for the use of the bureau of public works in road construction and improvement for the relief of unemployment during the fiscal year 1931-32, according to a report by W. S. Dowd, assistant commercial attache of the U. S. government here. It is estimated that the allotment will build about 167 miles.

Mr. Dowd warns American manufacturers that the road program will not increase the market for road-making machinery, because "by far the greater part of the work is being done by hand with the sole object of providing unemployment relief." He points out that "in the course of construction or improvement on the majority of projects observed, manual labor and hand tools are being used almost exclusively, and of equipment being used all new items are manufactured in Japan."

GERMANY PLANS 16,000 HOMES FOR UNEMPLOYED

Berlin, Germany.—The German federal commissioner for suburban settlements announced plans for the construction of 16,000 houses for unemployed factory workers in the suburbs of German industrial cities, declares C. W. Grey, U. S. vice-consul here, in a report on the unemployment situation in Germany.

It is estimated the houses will cost about $11,425,000. They will be constructed on quarter-acre lots to enable the medium-sized family to furnish its own vegetables, fruit and eggs. Where the soil is suitable, animals may be kept to provide meat, milk and butter.

"The tenants," Mr. Grey says, "will be selected from the unemployed, even though they may be receiving regular or extended unemployment insurance or welfare unemployment benefits."

Partial Self-Support Ultimate Aim.

These benefits will be continued after the jobless tenant takes possession of the property, though it is the intention of the authorities to decrease maintenance gradually as the tenant is able to provide for the upkeep of himself and his dependents.

"The authorities do not expect any reduction of the cost of unemployment through this scheme, but they anticipate an improvement of the physical, mental and moral condition of the settlers."

The housing scheme will be financed from the rent tax, which is based on federal law, but collected and expended by the various states for housing.

"The scheme contemplates," Mr. Grey concludes, "the granting by the government of a maximum loan of $596 to each settler (about $429 for the house and $167 for furniture, plumbing, seeds and livestock). In addition, the settler is required to contribute gratis his own labor toward the development of the property; the estimated value of this work is $119."

SENATOR KUSER URGES BLOCK RELIEF FOR NEW JERSEY IDLE

Trenton, N. J.—Senator Dryden Kuser introduced a bill in the senate providing for a block-aid campaign throughout New Jersey to raise funds for relief of the jobless. The campaign would be managed by Chester I. Barnard, state director of emergency relief organization. The funds would be turned over to the directors of emergency relief in the municipalities where the funds are collected.

A delegation of silk workers from Paterson opposed the sales tax for unemployment relief and urged the substitution of inheritance and income taxes.

DELAFIELD VISIONS SOVIET INVASION OF UNITED STATES

White Plains, N. Y.—Brig.-Gen. John Ross Delafield, commander-in-chief of the military order of the world war, in a memorial day address here, visioned the danger of the Union of Soviet Republics invading the United States and slaughtering American citizens.

"Ivan," he said, speaking of the soviet union, "laughs up his sleeve, urging all the rest of us to disarm while he builds up one of the greatest armies and best equipment and munitions the world has ever known. He says plainly, 'If you don't come to my ideas yourselves, I am going to force them on you, and in order to do that I am going to kill everybody in your country who opposes until we get you to do it.'"

Pinchot Outlines Program to Give Rights to People

List of Measures Proposed Headed by Direct Federal Relief for Idle and Public Works on Vast Scale.

Evanston, Ill., June 9.—In an address here, Gov. Gifford Pinchot, of Pennsylvania, outlined a comprehensive program designed, he said, "to secure for the plain people the rights and benefits which should belong to them." He declared that these rights had been taken away from them by a few selfish men of wealth and power:

The program included the following measures:

Direct federal relief—to feed and clothe the unemployed and their families.

Federal work-relief on a vast scale, nation-wide—to develop, improve, and preserve our resources, and to make jobs for those who are eager for work and can find none.

Government planning for industry—to get out of this depression, to keep out of other depressions, and to balance production and consumption.

Short Day and Week.

A six-hour day and a five-day week—to make enough jobs to go round.

Old age pensions and prohibition of child labor—so that those who are too old or too young will not keep others out of work.

A fair and effective tariff—to protect farmers and workers no less than capital.

Much higher rates on great incomes and inheritances—to discourage the accumulation of inordinate wealth, and distribute the burden of taxation in proportion to ability to pay.

A vote of the people before the nation can go to war—to prevent the sacrifice of human lives in protecting rich men's money invested abroad.

Real Control of Banking.

Real control of our banking system with heavy penalties for bank speculation—to prevent the bank failures which rob the people of their savings.

Regulation that regulates for public utilities—to reduce heat, light, power, water, and transportation charges to a reasonable return on the money actually put into the business.

National conservation of the coal and oil industries—so that these natural resources may be protected for the good of the people who produce and use them.

The abolition of slums—so that city workers and their children may live in health and decency.

6,000 NEW YORK JOBLESS FAMILIES NEAR STARVATION

New York.—The 6,000 destitute families of the unemployed dependent on the Salvation Army for their existence face starvation unless the public responds liberally to the Army's appeal for $1,090,000 to enable the organization to continue its emergency relief, according to Brigadier Thomas Seaver, head of the welfare department.

"We already have been forced to reduce the amount given to the 6,000 families now in our care until many of them are living in a state of semi-starvation," Seaver said.

Harvey D. Gibson, chairman of the Emergency Unemployment ... committee, stated that the 13,2... now on the payrolls of the emer... work and relief bureau would ... on the work schedule of five ... week every other week.

CONVENTION FINDS THEATER UNIONS INTACT

Local Delegates Enthused Over Reports.

DECLARE ALLIANCE IN SPLENDID SHAPE

Lowry, Belcher and Mills Encouraged by Information Secured at Biennial Meet.

Encouraging reports were brought back to Chattanooga this week by local delegates to the thirty-fourth annual convention of the International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employes and Moving Picture Projectionists, which met at Columbus, Ohio, last week, the sessions lasting from Monday morning through Friday.

J. Burson Lowry, president of Local 259, Projectionists, represented that local, while Hundley Mills was the accredited delegate from the sister local, 140, Stage Employes. W. C. Belcher, official of Local 259, accompanied the delegates as a visitor to the international's pow-wow.

Eight hundred and twenty-four delegates were present, representing locals throughout the United States and Canada, Mr. Lowry told The Labor World, and contrary to a somewhat general impression reports indicated conditions of the crafts were never better. No major trouble of any character was reported, said Mr. Lowry, and the membership and finances were never in better condition than at the present time.

Officers elected at the concluding sessions included William C. Elliott, of Cincinnati, who was named president after serving some five months in that office, having succeeded former President Canavan, resigned. R. E. Morris, of Mobile, Ala., secretary of District 7, which includes Chattanooga, was named trustee, which Mr. Lowry explained is a very important post in the Alliance.

The Alliance meets bi-ennially, and the selection of the meeting place is made by the executive council five months prior to the succeeding convention, Mr. Lowry said.

One of the outstanding features of the early sessions, according to the Chattanoogans, was an address delivered by Rabbi Jacob Tarshish, described as having attracted considerable notice in various sections recently because of his pronounced and progressive views on economics, with particular reference to the present situation. So well were the delegates impressed with the address, it was ordered printed in pamphlet form and distributed among the unionists.

The Labor World was furnished with a copy of the rabbi's speech, with a request that it be passed on to our readers. In part, it follows:

As I see it, every man and every woman in human society is entitled to three things. In the first place, he must have enough so that he can feed himself and his family; so that he can clothe himself and his family; so that he can provide a proper home for himself and his family. In the second place, human society has a distinct obligation upon its shoulders to provide a process of education so that the powers in the mind and in the heart of all individuals shall be given an opportunity for self-expression. In the third place, I believe that it is equally obligatory upon human society, wherever it happens to be, to provide recreational facilities to build up the energies that are lost in the process of making a living. Therefore, when anyone says derogatorily that the stage and the motion picture merely supply entertainment to the people, I say that there is no derogation in this viewpoint, because if the people of the United States were deprived of the opportunity of amusement and relaxation for one week, we would in our present condition be immediately confronted with a bloody revolution. It is the opportunity that people have to get away from their worries and their anxieties and their problems, and to forget for an hour or two in the theater those things that press upon them so continuously and threaten to destroy their mental and physical stability. It is the opportunity that you men who represent the labor in the theater and in

HERE'S SAMPLE LIVING-COST BUDGET FOR FAMILY OF FOUR

Proposal of Senator Huey Long to Limit Income to Mere Million a Year Causes Oklahoman to Attempt to Figure How Household May Be Operated on That Trifling Sum

An interesting bit of information is contained in a recent issue of the Congressional Record, which contains an article showing how a family of four may live on an income of slightly more than $1,000,000 a year. The sample budget was compiled by an Oklahoma newspaper, and was occasioned by the fact that Hon. Huey P. Long has proposed to the United States senate that individual incomes be limited by law to a paltry million a year. The article was inserted in the Record at the request of Senator Long, and is here passed along to readers of The Labor World, so if any are forced to exist on a million a year their budget may be balanced, if possible.

It follows:

Mr. Long. Mr. President, I send to the desk and ask to have read a clipping from an Oklahoma city newspaper. I am sure none of my colleagues would like to offer it, because it is in the nature of a criticism, but I think it ought to be inserted in the Record so that the opposite side may be properly presented.

The president pro tempore. Without objection, the clerk will read as requested.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

Down to the Last Million.

So when I saw the outbreak of red rash that followed Huey's proposal to limit incomes to a million bucks per year I said to myself: That's hooey. Think of limiting people—the best people—to a lousy million a year.

Dear reader, do you know what that means? Did you ever try to skimp along on a measly million dollars a year? Did you ever even sit down and try to figure out how far a million will go when stretched over 365 days?

Of course you haven't. You don't give a tinker's rap how the other half lives. But I'm not that kind of a brute. It ain't in me to see folks suffering. So I did figure it out, and here is the gruesome result:

There, what did I tell you—every dollar of that million gone, eight thousand bucks in the hole, and no telling where the next meal's gonna come from.

So if you see that Huey Long, just tell him for me that if he thinks a family can get along on less than a million a year, that's all hooey. Besides, I know a thousand cotton pickers' families in his state that spent almost that much last year between them.

Soft Drink Workers Sign New Agreement

Following conferences and negotiations covering a period of several weeks, officials of Local 79, Soft Drink Workers, have reached agreement with all local bottling concerns and a year's contract has been signed with each of the Chattanooga employers.

The contract, it was announced, calls for a slight reduction in rates of pay over that paid for the past year, the unionists having agreed to the "readjustment" in the interest of harmony and good feeling.

SUNDAY SHOWS BANNED BY NEW YORK CITY ACTORS

New York.—The nineteenth annual meeting of the Actors' Equity association adopted the proposal of President Frank Gillmore for a rotary stock production plan to provide more employment for actors. The scheme provides for the installation of companies which would play successively in three or more fairly equidistant cities. It was stated the plan promises more jobs because of the run of three weeks or more guaranteed to each production.

A majority of the 600 members sustained President Gillmore in his refusal to bring before the membership the request of the League of New York Theatres for a referendum by Equity on the question of Sunday night performances in Broadway's legitimate playhouses. The actors have rejected the Sunday show proposal three times in the last three years.

State Nonpartisan Committee Meets at Nashville Saturday

Nonpartisan political committee of the Tennessee Federation of Labor and the Railroad Brotherhoods will meet Saturday morning at Nashville. Discussion of the state political situation, together with the legislative program of the joint bodies, will be the main business to come before the committee.

The committee has power to make indorsements and recommend candidates to the favor of organized labor and its friends, but this action is seldom taken. Unless there are unusual grounds for commendation or condemnation of a particular candidate for public office, the committee prepares a resume of the records, if any, of various aspirants, and if the candidate has no public record, personal interviews or questionnaires are used to develop information for the rank and file of workers throughout the state.

The committee is composed of three executive officers of the Tennessee Federation of Labor and the state legislative chairman for each of the four rail brotherhoods, as follows:

H. V. Reid, Memphis, Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen.

Perry E. Daly, Knoxville, Brotherhood of Railway Trainmen.

W. E. Jacobs, Order Railroad Conductors, Nashville.

W. A. Chrisman, Memphis, Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers.

Paul J. Aymon, Chattanooga; David Hanly and W. E. Cheek, Nashville, Tennessee Federation of Labor.

Mr. Reid is chairman of the joint committee.

Mr. Aymon went to Nashville Wednesday to confer with members of the committee prior to the meeting.

'Charlie' Terry Now In New Location

C. L. (Charlie) Terry, former delegate to Chattanooga Trades and Labor council and active in the official family of Local 415, Barbers, has left the Hamilton Barber shop, where he was located for several years, and, with J. S. Boyd, another former official of Local 415, is presiding over a brand-new and sanitary tonsorial emporium at 1437 Market street. When a representative of The Labor World visited the new shop this week, Mr. Terry was busy as a bee, with the same old smile and shiny pate, trying to sell a customer on the idea that failure to use a plentiful supply of hair tonic in his early days was responsible for his (Charlie's) baldheadedness. Mr. Boyd was out.

Cofer Electric Co. Open for Business

C. E. Cofer, former business agent and financial secretary of Local 175, Electrical Workers, has braved the business world "on his own hook," and is now presiding over the destinies of the Cofer Electric company, at 9 West Thirteenth street.

Mr. Cofer was with the Chattanooga Electric company for eight years. He has many friends among local trades unionists who will wish him well in his new venture.

OIL DEALERS RUSH TO DODGE FEDERAL TAXES

Monopoly Quickly Finds Loophole in Law.

WILL PUT CONSUMER'S PENNY IN OWN TILL

Budget-Balancing Statute to Add Millions to Profits of Giant Companies.

By CHESTER M. WRIGHT
(An Exclusive International Labor News Service Story.)

Washington, June 16.—Oil has put one over again.

Oil is escaping the new tax through a joker in the tax law that went through congress under such tremendous pressure.

Within twenty-four hours after the president had signed the bill making it law big oil men were in Washington to nail down what they at once saw as a plan of escape from hundreds of thousands of dollars in taxes.

The oil men guessed right and they are packing away the profits of their perspicacity.

It isn't the first time oil has benefited by the beneficence of government.

This time, however, government probably was entirely innocent of the loophole "made and provided" for the gentlemen of the kingdom of oil. As far as can be learned it is one of those cases where nobody can be blamed for intentional favoritism.

The tax law provides that after June 21 the "producers" and the "manufacturers" of oil and gasoline must pay a tax.

There is no tax levied against distributors. Any gasoline they buy before June 21 will be without tax and their profit after June 21 will be just 1 cent a gallon higher than it will be on gasoline purchased after June 21.

Having got their construction of the new law, the producers began on June 9 what is probably the biggest gasoline buying campaign in the history of the country.

The gasoline isn't being moved. It doesn't have to be moved. Only change of title of ownership is involved.

It is estimated by one expert that by June 21 distributors will have on hand enough gasoline to run them through the next nine months—all tax free.

Many of the gigantic oil companies, if not most of them, have what are called underlying companies which act as distributors, so when it's all boiled down the benefits of this campaign are going to stay where they generally stay—In the pockets of a few big outfits.

Meanwhile these big outfits, rich enough to buy gasoline supplies for the next nine months, are doing nothing toward alleviation of unemployment. Intended as helpers in economic deliverance, they grab for their profits and deliberately avoid their share of the intended tax burden.

Bill Smith, who drives his flivver up to a tank after June 21 and asks for a gallon of gas, will not escape. He will be taxed.

FEDERAL EMPLOYES' UNION COMMENDS A. F. OF L.

Washington.—The civil service branch of Local Union No. 2, National Federation of Federal Employes, adopted a resolution thanking President Green and the American Federation of Labor for their untiring efforts in defense of the pay and living standards of government employes.

The resolution said "it is highly desirable that the federal employes retain the goodwill and the effective support of the American Federation of Labor in the future," and declared it to be "the sense of the civil service branch of Local No. 2, Federation of Federal Employes, that necessary steps should be taken to re-establish harmonious relations and affiliation with the American Federation of Labor." The resolution was adopted by unanimous vote.

FINDING JOBS NO EASY TASK SAYS L. B. LOWE

U. S. Employment Manager Addresses Central Body.

BELIEVES LABORER WORTHY OF HIS HIRE

Pledges Untiring Efforts to Relieve Conditions—Offers Co-operation to Labor.

L. BERT LOWE

Finding a job for everyone now unemployed is no easy task, L. Bert Lowe, manager U. S. Employment Service, told Central Body delegates Monday night, and despite the fact that his office has conscientiously endeavored to place as many jobless as possible, some unfair criticism has been directed against its operations.

Mr. Lowe declared he had heard the charge that the local office of the U. S. Employment Service had connived with certain contractors to keep wages down.

"This I most emphatically deny," he said, "and I challenge any man, be he union or non-union, to prove that I have ever attempted to do anything to lower the rates of wages in this or any other town."

Since coming to Chattanooga, the speaker said, he has been figuratively "on the spot," some people apparently expecting him to place any and all who made application for employment. "Since I have been here," he said, "it has been my purpose to relieve conditions to the best of my ability, and that I have honestly endeavored to do."

Mr. Lowe was a guest of Central Body in regular session, and his remarks were well received by the delegates.

His address follows, in part:

I am very happy to have been accorded the pleasure of coming here this evening and be with you in your meeting, and to express publicly my appreciation for the co-operation and advice that has been given me so freely my three good friends, Bob Cooke, Paul Aymon and George Forbes, without which I would often have found myself floundering in the depth of ignorance and despair without knowing the way out. I thank them for what they have done for me and express the hope that the time will come when I may be able to in my small way reciprocate for their kindness. I am grateful to you all for your uniform courtesy and am here to pledge my allegiance in every way possible, both in the matter of securing jobs and seeing that you receive for your work a wage in keeping with the American standard of living.

Since coming to Chattanooga I have been figuratively on the spot. I came to find jobs and there were no jobs to find. As a result of a lack of jobs to give I have been on the spot by some who have taken the attitude that I was withholding from them something I had which rightfully belonged to them, that my pockets were bulging with jobs and that I was only keeping them in order to torment and further prolong the suffering of men and their families. How people can take that attitude I do not know, how one can could calmly stand by and see his neighbor suffer when he had it in his power to relieve that suffering I am unable to determine. My job is a

JESUS' EVALUATION OF LIFE
Part IV

I want to ... and ... of the soul.
—Frederick Robertson

What is there about a little child that moved Jesus to say that we must become as one of them before we can enter the Kingdom of God? In seeking to understand what Jesus found in a little child to interest Him we will begin by studying His attack on men's self-developed incapacity for mental and spiritual growth.

WM. L. MOSS

The average adult, with an air of all-wise seriousness and little thinking, he is in reality, befogging his mental processes, [illegible] has reached a stage of [illegible] that is not to be questioned. The apology the adult offers for his self-efficiency is that through a short experience developed by a vast amount of experience he has reached moral and ethical perfection. This position the adult believes entitles him beyond all peradventure of doubt to everything here and in the hereafter that Almighty God has promised man.

Summed up from a critical viewpoint, this is really a man's lack of an appreciation of how much he really does lack. It is the absence of the sense of need, the disavowal that man is a dependent creature. A trainer of athletes would describe it as staleness, the moralist would define it as a loss of moral freshness, the sociologist would say it is a disease due to the high plane on which adults move, the religious expert would declare it to be the incapacity to respond to spiritual values. It has been variously called closed-mindedness, self-sufficiency, unteachableness, unsusceptibility, impenetrability, [illegible] of the heart, ethical atrophy, etc. Now Jesus said it was the extreme of the disease existing in men, who put up the bars between them and the Kingdom of God, thereby permitting publicans and harlots to enter first.

It was the mental condition of men that led Jesus to say "Thy sins are forgiven thee" to a sinning woman, but on another occasion turned on the highly religious adherents of orthodox belief and with all the fire of His righteous indignation said "Woe unto you, hypocrites!" The woman with all her social sin, let could be helped because she was willing to be helped—there was hope for her. The Pharisees, the hypocrites to whom He directed His scathing denunciation, were self-necked, self-sufficient and could not learn because their minds were a barrier to the message of Jesus—there was no hope for them. When Jesus said sensible men did not put old wine into new bottles (Mat. 10:17) He was referring specifically to the Pharisees' minds and His own gospel of love. He knew it was hopeless to believe His religion of love and service could be poured into the old and out-worn form of Judaism. "Either accept My teaching and abandon Judaism," He is telling His hearers, "or stick to Judaism and abandon My teaching—the two will never mix!"

But to return now to the forgiven sinning woman and the condemned religious Pharisees. The two cases are plain reversals of judgment, it seems to us. What can Jesus mean by these seeming unreasonable standards of respectability and sin? Simply this: Jesus knew that character can never be an attainment but that it is a growth.

What Next!

The first successful sowing of what from an airplane is reported to have been carried out on a Russian soviet-owned farm in Central Asia. Planes sowed an area of seven and a half acres per flight, covering 300 acres per day. In 15 days, 8,000 acres were sown by four planes, flying at an average height of 85 feet at a speed of about 62 miles an hour.

A Dangerous State of Mind

Regardless of what one may think of the bonus marchers, their demonstration reveals a dangerous state of mind, which demands the most serious consideration by political and industrial leadership.

Observers agree that the war veterans demanding immediate payment of the bonus in Washington represent a feeling now prevalent throughout the nation—a feeling of blind desperation out of which almost anything may come. The millions of unemployed and their dependents do not know which way to turn and in their bitterness they are all too likely to pursue any course of action, no matter how mad, that seems to promise relief.

Now, if ever, is the time for a supreme effort of leadership to cope with the economic situation by enlisting the entire nation and all its resources in action that will bring immediate relief and speedy recovery. Labor repeatedly has shown the way. Will the ruling industrial, financial and political powers be wise enough to follow it?

The March of the Doomed

A public health authority said last week that, because of unemployment, there will be more of tuberculosis and more of diseases that follow malnutrition. It is laid out that way. The program is fixed. The ghastly show will go on. Certain number of men, women and children will become ill and diseased and certain of them must die, because we have unemployment. Look ahead into the months of the coming fall and winter and you can see the stricken procession of sad and tragic figures.

It is the march of the doomed among us.

Try This Jig Saw Puzzle

We are told men are unemployed because there is no work.
We are told wages must come down before there can be work.
We are also told there will have to be a dole unless there is work.

If we have a dole it must come out of wealth already created.
If there has been enough wealth created and stored so that a dole can be paid out of it and if a dole is easier to get than work, then what was the matter with wages when we were creating the wealth out of which a dole will now be paid, if we have to come to a dole?

You tell the cockeyed world!

Employer Responsibility for Blindness

The terrific loss of eyesight and lesser injuries to the eyes imposed on the workers by employers is emphasized in the annual report of the National Society for the Prevention of Blindness.

"It is esimated," the report says, "that in American industry more than 2,000 workmen lose one or both eyes, 300,000 minor eye injuries are received, and approximately $50,000,000 wasted in time lost, compensation and medical bills each year."

Lewis H. Carris, managing director of the association, asserted that most of the accidents are preventable.

It is a notorious fact that millions of workers are compelled to labor in poorly illuminated workshops which are a constant strain on the eyes. It is an equally notorious fact that the workers are not adequately safeguarded against machinery that is dangerous to the eyes.

State factory laws enacted by legislatures dominated directly or indirectly by employers are often too loosely phrased to give the workers adequate protection, and even when carefully worded they are frequently administered with such laxity as to be of relatively little worth.

It is for these reasons that 2,000 workers lose one or both eyes every year and thousands of others suffer accidents that materially injure their eyesight.

The major purpose of industry under its present organization is to realize the largest possible profits for the owners regardless of the welfare of the employes.

Labor insists that this policy shall be reversed. Industry should be operated with the safety of the bodies of the workers as its first responsibility.

Our industrial autocrats and their political representatives should stop imposing blindness and other bodily injuries on the working men, women, and children.

Providing for Unfortunates

School Life describes how the school system of Rochester, N. Y., provides for its handicapped children in many different ways which might well be studied by other cities. There are special and ungraded classes and pre-vocational training for children who are seriously retarded mentally, a class for adolescent boys who are behavior problems, and instruction for delinquent children temporarily detained in the city shelter conducted by the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children. An orthopedic school is well equipped for giving the crippled pupils corrective treatment. A camp on the lake in charge of a physiotherapist and two teachers gives crippled children a combined home and school for nine summer weeks, and an open-air school is conducted during eight summer weeks. At the children's hospital and the sanitarium for the tuberculosis teachers are furnished for children who are in condition to receive instruction. Sight-saving and hard-of-hearing classes, individual instruction for stutterers by a speech teacher, and special work with non-English-speaking children are among the other special school activities.

Labor and the Courts

Written for The Labor World

CHAPTER I

A federal system of government, if it is to be successful, must have provision for a strong judiciary able to command the respect and acquiescence of the people.
William B. Munro, Ph.D., LL.B.

AT the very beginning of this series of articles I wish to state that labor agrees with Dr. Munro, of Harvard, in his statement given above in italics, which is taken from the revised edition of his admirable work, "The Government of the United States" (Macmillan, 1930). Labor can do nothing less than advocate "a strong judiciary" for this republic. It does believe in a judiciary that is "able to command the respect and acquiescence of the people." In fact, labor knows full well that if its own rank and file is to be regarded as good citizens they must, and they surely do, desire a "strong judiciary." On this point labor is in wholehearted agreement with the best thinking minds who are loyal to our American institutions.

But it is not concerning this matter of our republic possessing a judiciary fully capable in all its departments of administering the law that has given rise to labor's dissatisfaction with our courts. Labor recognizes it has rights to be protected before the courts of the land; it is equally sensible of the fact that the forces opposing it have also undeniable rights that need guarding by the courts, and it is above all else conscious of the fact that when the rights of either itself or its opponents are not fully protected by the courts then the judiciary is no longer strong but manifestly weak. In other words, labor says that absolute fairness toward all parties before the bar is the sole assurance that the judiciary has strength. When the judiciary becomes prejudicial in its consideration of cases then its prejudice is, per se, a system of weakness.

The strength of our judiciary, labor asserts, is not to be judged by the "masterful minds" of the men called in to fill its judgeships, nor in the high social position they might occupy in private life, nor in the wealth they might possess as private citizens, nor in the size of their following in the political field. Labor says that the strength of our judiciary lies solely in the courts being presided over by judges who can and will render unequivocally fair decisions, who are able to maintain impartiality by checking their personal impulses and emotions, and who display clear and evident ability to render justice to every individual or group of individuals regardless of who the individual or group of individuals may be, what they may represent or to what class they may belong.

Arno Ben Freddy, may his tribe decrease,
Awoke one night on his bed of ease,
And saw within the moonlight in his room,
Making it rich and like a lily in bloom,
A Tax-Man, writing in a Book of Doom.

Exceeding wealth had made Ben Freddy bold,
And to the Presence in the room he said,
What writest thou?"
The Taxer raised his head
And answered in a voice of stern demand,
"I write the names of those we tax on land."

"And is mine one?" Ben Freddy asked,
"Nay, not so," the Taxer replied.
Cheerily still, but low, Ben spake and said,
"I charge thee, then,
Write me as one who likes to lead the van."

The Taxer wrote and vanished.
Next night, he came again with a great awakening light,
And listed those who dodge their tax with zest—
And lo, Ben Freddy's name led all the rest.

ONE OVERSHADOWING ISSUE IN PRESIDENTIAL CAMPAIGN

By WILLIAM GREEN
(In the American Federationist)

There is one overshadowing issue in the coming presidential campaign. The candidate who sets forth the most convincing program will win the votes. The issue is how to put the people back to work. This is the issue that is of paramount concern to the 39,000,000 of salaried workers and wage earners in the United States.

Our incomes stop when the job is lost. It is the fundamental issue to the salaried workers, for their work is contingent upon prosperity in production. It is fundamental to investors because work is necessary to the creation of wealth and the maintenance of values.

Since putting people back to work is the primary step in the restoration of prosperity, it is the test rod [illegible] apply to every legislative and business proposal. We are facing a breakdown in relief in the next few weeks. Ju[illegible] in the immediate future are necessary to prevent widespread hunger and starvation.

TELEPHONE EMPLOYES STRIKE

Buenos Aires.—The Argentine government began efforts to end the strike of telephone employes which was said to have resulted in $1,000,000 damage by "sabotage." It was stated that telephone cables serving 30,000 homes and business establishments had been cut.

NEW YORK BUILDING WORK TIED UP FOR SIX WEEKS

Refusal of Group of Twenty-one Unions to Accept Drastic Wage Cuts Keeps Virtually All Construction in Metropolis at Standstill—Two Ultimatums Threaten to Bring Climax.

New York City, June 15.—For nearly six weeks now all construction work in this metropolis has been at a standstill, save for some public work started this week.

Not a steam shovel has dug its pugnacious nose into the dirt toward the bedrock of this island. Not a clamorous riveter has drummed his rat-a-tat. Not a hammer has sung against a nailhead. Not a trowel full of mortar has plastered itself against a brick and not a plumber has gone abroad with his tools.

It has been and is an amazing spectacle.

Only a fraction of the 150,000 building trades workers had work when the old contracts expired on May 1. On that date work ceased in what is technically called a lockout. The employers posted new rates of pay, ranging to 30 per cent below the old rates. The workers refused those rates.

Shortly the Building Trades council signed up at the proffered rate, but still no work has begun. The reason is that a group of twenty-one trades refused to accept those rates.

Two Ultimatums Issued.

There have been some conferences since—one this week—but to no definite purpose. Meanwhile there are ultimatums—two of them—running toward a climax.

The employers have said they will open their jobs, but they have not set a date. Perhaps that was bluff. But the announcement was something of an ultimatum. The Elevator Constructors' International has sent a very definite ultimatum to their employers, declaring that there will be arbitration or a strike. If the Elevator Constructors strike something new in this big burg may happen. It may come to pass that all maintenance men will be taken from the skyscrapers and for the first time Wall Street will be just about paralyzed.

Finance Backs Pay Cuts.

That the employers have been toying with the "open shop" idea seems certain, not that they want it, but that back of them are financial powers that issue orders. Union leaders say that financial powers were back of the whole wage reduction movement and their statement seems to be sound.

The outcome is beyond prediction. But what is definite is that, in the midst of history's worst unemployment, here is a stoppage of work that has gone on for six weeks without a grumble and that seems set to go on forever unless the employers recede from their demands for a wage reduction that some of the leaders have called "murderous."

The trades for which the building council signed are as jobless as the others. They cannot work until there is a return to work on the part of those trades that have refused the reduction.

Caution Is Advised.

President M. J. McDonough, of the A. F. of L. Building Trades Department, at a council meeting here this week, advised cool-headedness and careful procedure. Everyone is desirous of holding the movement to its customary unity, regardless of the division over acceptance of the employers' wage reduction.

SENATE ADOPTS FURLOUGH PLAN IN PLACE OF FEDERAL PAY CUT

Washington, June 15.—Following an appeal by President William Green, of the American Federation of Labor, in favor of the five-day week furlough plan for government employes, the senate reversed its stand for a ten per cent cut in pay of federal workers and substituted a plan for compulsory furloughs without pay.

The furlough plan as adopted eliminates the economy committee's proposal of 10 per cent pay cuts on salaries over $1,000. In its stead, every federal worker is made subject to a 30-day annual furlough without pay on the "five-day week principle." Workers earning less than $1,200 are exempted from its provisions.

District of Columbia police and firemen also are excluded from the furlough, along with enlisted personnel of the army, navy, coast guard and marine corps. In services, such as the legislative, where the plan could not operate successfully, an 8.3 per cent pay cut is substituted. Salaries of the vice-president, speaker of the house, senators and representatives are reduced 10 per cent.

Provision that no federal employe be furloughed more than five days in any one month without his consent was inserted on recommendation of Senator La Follette.

The house has voted to cut the wages of federal employes 11 per cent, with salaries of $1,200 or below exempted. Before adopting the furlough proposal, the senate had approved a 10 per cent cut in federal salaries, with a $1,000 exemption.

fully this past winter by the United States Chamber of Commerce as being one of the most vicious, unfair undertakings over known in American public life."

Takes Up Bankers' Fight.

There is reason to believe that the United States Chamber of Commerce, in the campaign led by Merle Thorpe, is taking up the cudgels where the big bankers dropped them when they got too hot for the bankers. Whether the chamber will be called upon to face a senatorial inquiry for the campaign revealed by Senator Nye is not yet certain, but it appears to be a possibility.

MEXICO DIVIDES 22,000 ACRES AMONG THE UNEMPLOYED

Mexico City.—An impressive ceremony took place at Zacatecas when Gov. Leonardo Ruiz parceled out among over 300 jobless laborers more than 22,000 acres of the Malpaso hacienda.

Many of the laborers had been repatriated from the United States, where they were discharged and left penniless by corporations whose agents had persuaded them to go to that country to enjoy the alleged high wages and living standards which it was claimed were universal there. A number of the workers emphasized in speeches the hardships and misery they had suffered across the border. All promised to work their holdings continuously.

POLICE EJECT 400 JOBLESS FROM DETROIT CITY HALL

Detroit, Mich.—Police were required to clear the council chambers of the city hall after fighting broke out between council guards and 400 residents of the Fisher lodge for homeless unemployed men, who were protesting the reported closing of the lodge.

Police and detectives battled for several minutes with the men, forcing them out of the council chamber, down the stairs to the first floor and outside the building. No arrests were made and no one was seriously injured.

U. S. COMMERCE CHAMBER LEADS PAY CUT DRIVE, SENATE TOLD

Merle Thorpe, Editor of Nation's Business, Is Directing Genius of Movement to Slash Government Wages as Cue to Private Enterprise, North Dakota Senator Charges.

Washington, June 15.—That the United States Chamber of Commerce had led the drive for reduction of government salaries in order that private business might be able to point to the government example in its nation-wide war on wages, was charged in the senate by Senator Gerald P. Nye, of North Dakota.

Nye loaded his speech with references and figures and charged that Merle Thorpe, editor of Nation's Business, the chamber of commerce magazine, was the directing genius of the chamber's war on government pay.

Thorpe was taken down the line mercilessly by Nye, who pointed to Thorpe's own $75,000 a year salary. His editorial, radio and platform campaign was scored in one of Nye's best speeches.

At the outset the North Dakotan pointed out that some 276,000 government employes earn $1,500 a year or less and he dwelt upon the suffering entailed among them by a 10 per cent reduction.

Thorpe's Figures Erroneous.

He then quoted at length from one of Thorpe's addresses in which the chamber of commerce editor gave what purported to be figures showing the increased cost of government departments. Error in these figures was shown at one point by Nye by citing that whereas Thorpe gave the costs of the department of commerce for 1924 and the current year, but did not say that most of the increased cost of that department has been caused by adding to it bureaus taken from other departments and without adding to the total cost of government.

"Then," said Nye, "he comes down to those features of federal expenditures upon which he harps most freely, the federal power commission, the interstate commerce commission, the federal trade commission and the tariff commission, all of which Mr. Thorpe and the United States Chamber of Commerce would be delighted to see dumped bag and baggage into the Potomac river. . . . He attacks, too, the bureau of public health, the child welfare bureau and other units of government which have been set up to perform service to the people."

Then Nye sailed into the chamber for its own record, making plain the inconsistency of that oligarchy of Big Business. He showed that the chamber's expenditures have outstripped government costs in percentages and that the chamber has not made the salary cuts it urges upon government.

In 1925, Nye said, total expenditures of the chamber were $2,096,000. In 1930 they were $4,061,000. As for retrenchment, Nye said the chamber had discharged only four men and ten girls. On March 1, this year, those earnings from $1,200 to $5,000 were cut 5 per cent. Those from $5,000 to $10,000 were cut 7½ per cent. All over that were cut 10 per cent.

"I look upon this entire (chamber of commerce) program," said Nye, "which has been engineered so skill-

Go to your Union Meetings

Don't say you are too tired; the weather is bad; or there is too much quibbling and "hot air" to interest me.

Every time you miss a meeting and leave it to the other fellow to look out for your interest, you are doing an injustice both to yourself and your organization.

Your views on especially vital subjects should be represented in discussion and by vote, and the only way for this to be done is for you to be at your union meeting.

You are responsible for the good and welfare of your organization, and non-attendance of union meetings on your part is not excuse enough for you to voice your opinion after a measure has been passed. It is then time for you to concur in what has been done and work in harmony with the officers and other members of your union.

Go to your union meetings regularly and induce others to do the same, because one important thing to remember is the meaning of the slogan:

"United we stand, Divided we fall."

the motion picture houses, it is the opportunity that you give to the people of the United States that in a great measure is staving off for these two and a half years, and will stave off in the years yet to come, any possibilities of a revolution such as took place in Russia some years ago. * * *

When we go back to the Old Testament, we will find that irrespective of what else may be found therein, and irrespective of how much we might disagree with some of its statements, nevertheless there runs through the Old Testament from the beginning to the end the story of God's sympathy for those that suffer. For those that are poor, for the laborer who has to make a living by the work of his hands, for those people who live in the humbler and more obscure places of human life. Never do we find in the Old Testament any exaltation of the rich. Always do we find God speaking through His leaders and through His prophets that it is the duty of religion to take care of the poor, that it is the duty of religion to take care of those who are unable to take care of themselves, that it is the duty of religion to watch over the great masses of people.

When the Jews long ago concentrated upon their sacrificial cult, that is to say when they used to believe that the only thing that was necessary to do was to come into the temple and offer up a goat or a cow or a bullock or oil, when they lost their way, the prophets of Israel came a long time ago and said to them "that is not what God wants, God wants that you should take care of the idle,

Modern love song by Frank Krug:

Believe me, if all those adhering young charms,
Which I view with admiring dismay
Are going to rub off on the shoulders and arms
Of this suit which was just cleaned today,
Thou wilt be adored with my usual zeal, my sweetheart, my loved one, my own,
But I'll sternly repress the emotions I feel—
I'll love you, but leave you alone.

Bald-headed Vance Tallent came down to breakfast and was greeted by his small nephew.

"What is it?" asked Vance.

"A comb," answered the nephew.

Boys, it sure is a puzzle to me the amount of trouble a fellow like Jack Frost can cause someone. I looked in our section in The Labor World to see if E. E. C. had cause to express himself, and in reading along I noticed that Jack had been down to our good friend G. A. Mitchell and got himself barbered up some. The very idea of that, and then trying to get out of paying. To see what there was to it, I went down to ask Mitch about it and before I could open up on the subject I was pushed into a chair and the clippers started up on me. Next I was asked how many there were in our local, and told Mitch about how many, and he told me that most of the boys had been in since Jack had tipped them off how it was done, and they were not like Jack, they paid, and that he hoped the rest of the bunch would come around and it seemed that others had heard about it and business was good with him. Said he reckoned he did not lose any money on Jack. But, fellows, Crosby and I had to pay for our hair cuts and we think we got a good job. If you like the haircuts we three got, tell us, and if you don't like them, tell Mitch.

Boys, I have had some bad times for the last several weeks, having got a bad fall on the city streets, but am in very good shape now. You know, the streets down town are pretty rough to drive on, and pretty rough to walk on, and a darn sight rougher to fall on, I'll tell you.

Baseball? Sure, baseball! And we have got the eyes of the entire league upon us. Some of the sport writers from other towns say some mighty nice things about our club, and others some mighty nasty things.

Now, you take Zipp Newman, writing for the Birmingham News. His say was the best of all. I hope you read it in our June 5 Times.

Chick Roos, business manager Atlanta club, said some mighty nasty things about us and our boys. While sitting in my office talking to a member of our local about what Chick had said about us, an old negro that works in my yard offered this: "Dat's alright whut he say. Ole Bearfeet can make dat chicken fly on his roost any time he want to."

that you should pay the laborer when his pay is due, that you should be honest and full of integrity, He cares not about your bullocks and your oil, He wants you to live a right kind of life and do the right thing by your fellowmen." That strain ran throughout the Old Testament, and it continued into the chapters of the New Testament. It should not be necessary for me to quote to an audience like this, international in its nature, that the greatest teacher in Christianity, Jesus, did not come to minister among the rich and among the capitalists, that Jesus felt it was His duty to come and minister among those who were struggling for an existence day after day, insecure in their positions, hopeless and helpless in the face of adversity that might come along. Was it not He that said "there is no more chance for a rich man to buy his way into heaven, than for a camel to pass through the eye of a needle." What did He mean? He did not mean that rich men were bad, He knew there were plenty that were good, what He tried to impress upon the people was that after all, maybe heaven will be constituted of those like yourself that stick to their daily task and do a useful job and take care of themselves and their family in a decent way and contribute their portion to the welfare of human society.

The Old Testament, the basis of the synagogue, the New Testament, the basis of the church, the great religious leaders of all times for the past three thousand years and maybe four thousand years, emphasized continuously that it is the destiny of religion to protect the helpless and to take care of the interest of the masses and to see to it that the man who labors and does his job gets a full compensation, a sufficient compensation for that which he does. And if in some years the church and the synagogue have not been alive to the issues of our day, and to the problems of our time, I am sure that as we look around for the statements of the ministry and for the statements of the church, we are beginning to realize that at least in these two and a half years religious leaders are coming definitely to a conclusion that something might be radically wrong with the way we have been doing things for the last seventy-five years, and they are preaching a new gospel—a new redistribution of economic forces. Letters that come from the captains of industry all over the country to those people who are interested, indicate that something will need to be done in the future. While nothing drastic can be done now, while we cannot change the conditions under which we have been raised, today it would need something like a miracle to accomplish it, nevertheless we have to prepare the way a little bit additional for the future so that the people of the United States, and the people of the world shall not be confronted in the future with this insecurity, poverty, unemployment, misery, tragedy and suffering which the people of the world have experienced in the last two and a half years. * * *

A dozen years ago every man who lived in the communities and the villages of Europe used to make his own clothes, and he used to build his own home and he used to grow his own food. In those days, as far as we know, there was no such thing as real poverty and unemployment except as God would send it through some unforeseen circumstance. Today, when we have created the machine that is supposed to give us luxury and happiness and contentment and leisure, that machine threatens to destroy humanity. I am always reminded of what Jesus said a long time ago when He was speaking of the Sabbath. He said, "Remember, the Sabbath was created for man, not man for the Sabbath," and I feel like saying on this platform as I have said before, "Remember, gentlemen, the machine was made for man, and man was not made for the machine." * * *

The problem with us in this country now is that there is a lack of purchasing, not a lack of purchasing power, but a lack of purchasing. That means the men, the great masses of men, the forty million men and women in this country, the workers of our land, do not have the means with which to buy, simply because somewhere along the line nobody made any provisions to correlate production and distribution, and we will never get away from depression until we correlate this production and distribution.

How can we do it? It was suggested a little while ago that industry in the United States and industry all over the world will have to come to this definite conclusion that because of the tremendous advances that the machines have made, because we can turn out so many productive commodities, because we can flood the markets of the United States and the markets of the world with a million and one different things that man can use in order to create purchasing power and purchasing desire, we have to give the workers of this country and the workers of the world higher wages and shorter hours. I don't mean that we can do that today. I don't mean that we can do that tomorrow, I mean that we have to develop an economic system of higher wages so that these men can buy more, so that they can feel secure, so that they can take care of those dependent upon them. Human society must provide for every man that is willing to work that kind of a job that will take care of the needs of his family and himself, that will provide himself against disability and sickness, that will also take care of his family in case he dies and will also provide for him in his old age. And society that doesn't do that hasn't done its fundamental duty.

GENERAL ELECTRIC INCREASES ASSESSMENT FOR IDLE RELIEF

Schenectady, N. Y.—The company union of the General Electric company approved a plan whereby the company will increase the assessment to as much as 2 per cent on the earnings of each worker for unemployment relief. The increase applies to all employes receiving 50 per cent or more of normal wages. The contribution of 1 per cent was adopted on Dec. 1, 1930. The company adds an amount equal to the assessment levied on the workers.

Editor Labor World:

I notice one peculiar effect of this great depression. I don't know if it may be beneficial to the collective welfare of the people or not, but it seems to work well, individually at least, in the circumstances. This is the development of a most remarkable "sales realstance" of the dear "common people." Personally, it seems to be rather outrageously well developed! You'd be surprised at how hard it is at present to sell me anything worth more than a nickel! Why, actually, I don't believe a college grad would be able to sell me a guaranteed six per cent hundred dollar bond for fifty dollars at a dollar down and a dollar a week! In fact, I seem to be impossible to sell on any sort of a deferred payment plan these days, and it seems to me that there are a great many others who have developed this same obstinate "sales resistance," as it is called. I dare say this really is economically bad for business, and therefore also bad for the individual. According to whether or not it is one who has something to sell, who is expressing the opinion right at present, I believe it is much better for the individual not to mortgage what little income he may be able to borrow from his friends merely to make the money circulate around to the banker, where it seems to stop abruptly and go no further. And right here comes in another little economic fact that few, if any, business men seem to consider. That is, the old axiom that "it's a poor rule that doesn't work both ways!" How can the business man expect me to spend my hard borrowed money with him and buy what HE has for sale when he does not buy what I have for sale? And when he is compelled to have what I sell, he insists upon paying me the lowest possible price for it? I have "labor" for sale, and for over a year now business has ceased to buy labor except at a price we cannot afford to sell. Is it any wonder we have developed such a stiff sales resistance? This is a straight case of "if you expect me to tickle you, you must tickle me (considerably) first!" We labor people are about half out of tickles, I believe! At least, I know I am.

Hoping you are not the same, I remain, thankless one, it is a hard one, it is one where much is expected and little can be done; but I would much rather listen to tales of suffering and then go out and try to find a job for the man or woman to help them to keep their self-respect than to listen to them pleading with me not to foreclose their mortgage that would deprive them of a home that was almost paid for and for which I had been bleeding them for years.

Lovingly,

Since I have been here I have tried to be fair and aboveboard in all that I have said and done. It has been my purpose to relieve conditions to the best of my ability, that I have honestly endeavored to do, and if I have failed any of you gentlemen I want you to attribute my failure to prevailing conditions and not to a lack of interest in your welfare. EXPLOITERS SCORED BY MAJ. CAMPBELL, STATE MANAGER

Workers Find Able Champion of Rights.

CONTRACTORS SEEK TO EVADE THE LAW

Jobless Painters, Carpenters See Truck Drivers, Laborers Performing Craftsmen's Work on Government Project.

"Contractors and subcontractors in the construction of government buildings either based their bids on fair wages or depended, in spite of Senate 5904 and the executive order of Jan. 19, 1932, upon evading the payment of fair wages. In the first case they can pay fair wages and still make a fair profit. In the second case they deserve to lose, since they went into the business with their eyes open."

Such is the opsition of Maj. Robert N. Campbell, state director of employment for the United States employment service, with respect to the protest filed Wednesday by Chattanooga Trades and Labor council against payment of a low wage scale and employment of common labor and truck drivers in doing the work of skilled craftsmen on the new postoffice building here.

With respect to the latter feature of the complaint, Maj. Campbell, in a letter written the supervising director and the secretary of labor, says:

"In this connection I wish to say that from tactics I am having to combat * * * I do not question that the Chattanooga Trades and Labor council will be able to support its complaint."

"In spite of the provisions of Senate 5904 and of the executive order of Jan. 19, 1932," Maj. Campbell further states, "of which all contractors and subcontractors were apprised prior to the submission of their bids for the construction of government buildings, I find that every means is being resorted to in the effort to obtain labor at the lowest possible wages. In view of the distressed condition of so many workers, which makes them so easy to exploit in the matter of wages, I feel that their rights need the strongest championship such championship as they can depend upon from the supervising director, U. S. Employment Service, and the secretary of Labor."

Copy of Maj. Campbell's letter containing the above observations was received Friday morning by T. R. Cuthbert, secretary of Chattanooga Trades and Labor council, and was the result of protest forwarded by Robert Lowe, local manager of the U. S. Employment Service.

Strong, recommendation is made that a wage scale for common labor of not less than 20 cents per hour, or $4 per day, be demanded of the postoffice contractors, and immediate

Reports on Congressional and Legislative Candidates to Come Later

Hon. Hill McAlister, candidate for the democratic nomination for governor of Tennessee, was recommended to federation unions and the brotherhoods, and members of these organizations and their friends were urged to go to the polls in the democratic primary Aug. 4 and cast their votes for Mr. McAlister.

A letter to The Labor World this week, signed by six members of the Nonpartisan Political Committee of the Tennessee Federation of Labor and the Railroad Brotherhoods, gave the above as the outstanding action of the committee, in session at the Noel hotel, Nashville, last Sunday. It was pointed out that the labor movement supported Mr. McAlister for democratic standard-bearer in 1926 and 1928, and that "nothing has happened since then to alter our opinion that he is the best qualified man to serve the people of this state as governor among the candidates for the democratic nomination for that office."

Paul J. Aymon, president of the Tennessee Federation of Labor and a member of the committee, returned from Nashville Monday night. Mr. Aymon said the committee was in session throughout the day Sunday, and until late Sunday night. Congressional and legislative records were probed and properly listed, he said, and at the proper time the attitude of every one of these will be made known to labor and its friends throughout the state.

Formal notification of the committee's action on the democratic gubernatorial situation follows:

Nashville, Tenn.,
June 20, 1932.

The State Nonpartisan Committee of the Tennessee Federation of Labor and the Railroad Brotherhoods met at the Noel hotel in Nashville on Sunday, June 19, 1932. This committee is composed of the executive officers of the Tennessee Federation of Labor and the chairmen of the state legislative boards of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen, Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen and the Order of Railway Conductors.

After considering the records of the candidates for the democratic nomination for governor in the democratic primary to be held on Aug. 4, 1932, this committee indorsed the Hon. Hill McAlister, of Davidson county, for the office and urges all trade unionists in the state to go to the polls and vote for him.

The labor movement of this state supported Hon. Hill McAlister for governor on two previous occasions in 1926 and 1928. Nothing has happened since then to alter our opinion that he is the best qualified man to serve the people of this state as governor among the candidates for the democratic nomination for governor of Tennessee.

Pennsylvania Governor Commutes Two-Year Sentence of Hosiery Workers' Representative, Jailed for "Conspiracy."

Out Again

ALFRED HOFFMAN
Victim of Union Haters Freed by Pinchot.

Harrisburg, Pa., June 22.—Gov. Pinchot has commuted to four months the two-year sentence of Alfred Hoffman, young organizer of the American Federation of Full Fashioned Hosiery Workers, who was sentenced to two years imprisonment on "conspiracy" charges in connection with a hosiery workers' strike at Stroudsburg in 1931. Hoffman had already served more than four months when the governor's decision was given. He is to be under parole for the rest of the two years.

Labor charged that Hoffman was the victim of a conspiracy on the part of small town business men determined to deal a blow at what they believed to be the menace of trade unionism. Not only was Hoffman the victim of the carefully worked up anti-labor bias of a semi-rural jury, but he was also the victim of the very crude and deliberate class bias of Pennsylvania judges, labor contended. Lawyers who studied the record in the Hoffman case agreed that the superior court of Pennsylvania, in refusing the labor organizer a new trial, turned the conspiracy statutes of the state upside down to bring in a verdict unfavorable to the trade union movement. There is good reason to believe that even the reactionary supreme court of Pennsylvania would have reversed this decision, had the case been pushed that far. Hoffman, whose union has spent a small fortune fighting "yellow dog" contracts, injunction and other labor cases in the courts of Pennsylvania and other states in recent years, refused to permit his organization to put more money into his defense at a time when a prolonged period of unemployment had left his organization seriously impoverished.

REPUBLICANS PUT SOME IN PLATFORM

Democrats Will Be Presented With Same Proposals at Chicago Meeting

Calling its representatives from all corners of the nation, the American Federation of Labor held at Chicago last week a national conference of a weight and caliber calculated to impress the most callous political delegates.

President Green, on authority of the Executive Council, summoned representatives of all national and international unions to formulate platform proposals to be laid before both national political conventions here. Not a dozen such conferences have been held in all A. F. of L. history and no such conference has ever been held at political convention time.

Unemployment relief legislation was foremost in the category of labor's platform proposals, which included a proposal for a declaration in favor of the amendment of the Volstead act to provide for the manufacture and sale of 2.75 per cent beer.

Other labor planks proposed include declarations in favor of the Davis-Kelly coal regulation bill, old-age pension legislation, the principle of high wages and the five-day week.

Submitting the labor planks to the platform and resolutions committee of the republican national convention, the A. F. of L. Executive Council told the committee that acceptance of the recommendations and incorporation in the republican platform "will mean progress and will tend to create a feeling of hope and satisfaction among the masses of the people."

The committee accepted several of labor's recommendations, either in whole or in part, including the planks on higher wages, the principle of the shorter work week and day, freedom of speech and Porto Rico and incorporated them in the platform adopted by the convention.

The program included the following recommendations:

Amendment of the antitrust laws in the interest of industry, labor and the farmers.

Enactment of the Davis-Kelly bill for the stabilization of the bituminous coal industry.

Recognition of labor's right to organize into trade unions.

Opposition to compulsory labor.

Guarantee of free speech, press and assembly.

INDUSTRIAL LEADERS IGNORE DISTRESS OF NATION'S MILLIONS

Gorman Flays Selfishness of "Big Business."

PEOPLE'S DESTINY IN HANDS OF VERY FEW

Meat Cutters' Chief Delivers Forceful Address to Local Trades Unionists Monday Night.

Orator

PATRICK E. GORMAN
President Meat Cutters and Butcher Workmen.

Comparing the attitude of America's captains of industry today to that of the captain of a large vessel whose machinery has failed in midocean, Patrick E. Gorman, president of the Amalgamated Association of Meat Cutters and Butcher Workmen, told an audience at Central Labor hall Monday night that when a seagoing vessel's machinery becomes disabled the captain directs every operation for its repair; that he will not eat or sleep until adjustments have been made and the safety of his passengers is assured. Our national machinery has stopped, he declared, and the captains of industry do not hear the cries of distress from the hundred and twenty million passengers.

Mr. Gorman walked into the hall during the regular meeting of the Labor Day Committee of Central Body, with some thirty-five or forty members present, and when he was introduced launched immediately into an address which, though brief, was one of the most eloquent and forceful which local trades unions have heard in recent months. A dynamic speaker, the international union head drove home his points with telling effect, and many of those present expressed regret that a much larger audience could not hear his address.

Reviewing past industrial disturbances, President Gorman said most of these major depressions affected only certain lines, while the present economic crisis is world-wide and affects every one. "The economic destiny of our people is held in the hollow of the hands of a few," he said, and no effort is being made to readjust the condition.

"A nation of happy people," he declared, "has been turned into a nation of misery. More shoes than necessary, yet men, women and children wrap their feet in gunnysacks to keep out the cold; nearly enough wheat to feed the world, and yet actually thousands rummage the garbage cans for crusts of bread."

The American worker, he declared, is not interested in revolution; he is interested in a home, a radio, an automobile, education for his children, solid wholesome food for those who depend upon him.

The trades unionist, he said, while having ample reason to complain, is in far better position than many who have no means of protection what-

Firefighters To Help Make Program "Biggest and Best"

Committee Offers Fullest Co-operation, Which Is Considered "Privilege and Pleasure."

REPORTS SHOW FINE PROGRESS ON CELEBRATION

Another splendid meeting of the Labor Day Committee of Chattanooga Trades and Labor council was held Monday night at Central Labor hall, and reports of chairmen of various subcommittees indicated that preparations for staging the greatest celebration in the history of Chattanooga are well in hand.

Unusual willingness on the part of local business men and the general public to co-operate in every way possible has been a marked feature of the reports to date, and the spirit of enthusiasm which exists generally among working people is a matter for comment generally.

Due to unforeseen circumstances, it was announced Friday, plans for a meeting of the general committee on Sunday morning at the courthouse, where a group picture was to be taken, have been postponed. This meeting will be held at a later date, to be announced at regular meeting of Central Body Monday night, it was said.

Chattanooga firefighters will "consider it a privilege and a pleasure" to help make Labor Day the "biggest and best," if sentiment of the boys at No. 1 fire hall, as expressed in a letter to T. R. Cuthbert Friday, is shared by the entire department, and every indication is that such is the case.

"We fully realize the many benefits we have derived mainly through the efforts of organized labor," the committee's letter said, and assurance is given of co-operation to the fullest extent.

The letter to Mr. Cuthbert, signed by W. F. Park, U. G. Bowen and S. O. Kinsey, follows:

Chattanooga, Tenn.,
June 22, 1932.

Chattanooga Trades and Labor Council,
Att.: T. R. Cuthbert, Secretary.
Gentlemen:

In reply to one of several letters of recent date requesting the members of the Chattanooga fire department to purchase tickets to the Labor Day celebration and barbecue given by your organization, we would like for you to know that we are only too glad to comply with your request as to the purchasing of these tickets.

We would also like to say here that we fully realize the many benefits we have derived mainly through the efforts of organized labor. We not only consider it a privilege but also a pleasure to contribute in a small way to your efforts to make this the biggest and best Labor Day celebration ever held here in the city of Chattanooga.

We feel assured that the other members of the fire department will join with us (of No. 1 fire hall) in our efforts to make this coming Labor Day a wonderful success.

Again thanking you for the many past favors we remain,

Fraternally yours,
W. F. PARK,
U. G. BOWEN,
S. O. KINSEY.

The Social Ideals of Jesus of Nazareth

An Interpretation

Written for The Labor World
By WILLIAM L. MOSS

Chapter V

JESUS' EVALUATION OF LIFE

Part V

What He taught was not a code of rules, but a loving spirit. not truths but a spirit of truth not views, but a view
—Robert Louis Stevenson

All four gospels record a series of clashes between Jesus and the Pharisees. When Jesus was first attacked if He had either altered His teaching to suit the Pharisees or had withdrawn to the seclusion of His humble Galilean home the Pharisees would have been satisfied and would have let the whole matter drop. But as it was, when the Pharisees and Scribes opened their attack on Jesus He refused to run. Instead, He began to assail the Pharisees. In His own significant words, He was laying the axe to the roots of the tree. (Mat. 10:3.)

WM. L. MOSS

The difference between the teaching of Jesus and that of the Pharisees was that they were teaching narrow-minded precepts of casuistry while Jesus was teaching the fundamental and universal principles of morality. They were thinking in terms of legalism and stressed the letter above that of the spirit of the law. They busied themselves with the observance of a whole catalog of minute rules governing hand-washings and tithing. They developed into posers, actors—for that is the meaning of the word "hypocrite." On the other hand, Jesus was concerned with a righteousness that would please God and not necessarily please men alone. His message was centered around a new ideal in religion, the gradual perfecting of character. To those who have consecrated themselves to a study of what a distinguished German scholar called the "psychological hermeneutics" of the Master, that is, to get in behind the actual words of Jesus used while teaching and seek to discover the spiritual intention He had in mind when He expressed His thoughts, it is like discovering a new continent when the truth dawns on one that in all His varied expressions He was striving to mold men's character into the ideal He desired. He knew from the beginning of His ministry that the most insurmountable obstruction to His purpose was not men's sins. As Prof. F. G. Peabody observes, Jesus was "infinitely patient with the precipitate Peter, He could not bring Himself to despair of the treacherous Judas, He was a friend of those whom the world called sinners. He accepted those whom the world called lost." What Jesus saw was the real insurmountable obstruction to His purpose was men's incapacity for growth. The Pharisees were unteachable, self satisfied and their minds impenetrable. They did not want to learn. Thus the Pharisees blocked his own way into the Kingdom of God as well as becoming the classic example of men's incapacity for growth.

LABOR MAN NAMED.

Otto R. Hartwig, of Portland, president of the Oregon State Federation of Labor from 1916 to 1924, has been appointed labor member of the Oregon state industrial accident commission. He is a member of the Painters' union.

Altruistic (?) Contractors

Examining board of the state contractors' association, we are informed, has succeeded in having the state highway department stipulate a minimum wage of 15 cents per hour for employes on road projects. The board, it is indicated, was in effect sorely vexed by "outside" contractors paying starvation wages on such work, and in order to "protect" the victims these employers representatives of this branch of the state government were appealed to to require a minimum wage of 15 cents of all contractors. The state highway department, doubtless itself burning with indignation because of the fact that laborers were being paid less than 15 cents per hour, we are informed complied with the wishes of the contractors' committee and set 15 cents as the minimum.

Now, of course, any desperate unemployed head of a family who holds out for a decent wage will be cited to the action of the state highway department, and told that 15 cents is the official wage.

Three cheers (Bronx) for our altruistic employer contractors! Fifteen cents for an hour's hard labor; $1.50 per day of ten hours; $9.00 per week of six days, or sixty hours!

That's a lot of money for a man with seven or eight children to support; but we must be patriotic and protect the living standards of America's workingman! The land of the free and the home of the brave!

Labor-Displacing Machinery

Under the present form of our system for the production of wealth, labor-displacing machinery is introduced solely for the financial benefit of those who own and control industry and seek to live on dividends and interest.

The disastrous effect of this policy on the workers is strikingly shown in the survey made by the bureau of labor statistics of the U. S. department of labor of the number of Morse telegraphers' jobs destroyed by the printer telegraph.

In the larger offices the printer telegraph has enabled the employers to dismiss 50 out of every 100 telegraphers.

In addition, employers have taken advantage of the surplus of workers to substitute low-wage printer telegraphers for the skilled Morse telegrapher. "The skill and training characteristic of Morse operators," the bureau's report says, "are supplanted by ability simply to operate a keyboard adapted to telegraphic purposes." The result of the lack of skill required to operate the printer telegraph and the determination of employers to use the machine for their own profit are shown by the fact that in the offices investigated by the bureau the proportion of male operators has been reduced from about 80 per cent to about 40 per cent of the total number.

In discussing the general results on the telegraphers of the introduction of the printer telegraph the bureau says:

> "The effect of change to printer operations are by no means limited to a reduction of the number of operators otherwise necessary. Technological displacement includes, in this case, not only a decline in the number of opportunities for employment, but also other changes of considerable social importance. These are the passing of a long-established technique requiring highly specialized skill and training; and the supplanting of men by women.
> "While Morse telegraphers have been confronting a rapid decline in the demand for their services in commercial telegraph offices, they have also encountered a decrease of opportunities for transfer to related fields, such as railroad telegraphy. At the same time, they have met several obstacles in the way of their becoming operators of printer telegraphs. The chief of these has been the rivalry of young girls expertly trained in the handling of the typewriter."

Organized labor has a positive remedy for the disastrous effects on the workers of labor-displacing machinery so poignantly described by the bureau of labor statistics.

The remedy is that the length of the work day and work week shall be reduced in all industries as rapidly as machinery is introduced and to whatever extent may be necessary to provide jobs for all the workers.

Employers refuse quite generally to recognize this demand of labor for the right to work. The existence of an army of over ten million unemployed does not move them to change their reactionary policy. They stick to it with the persistency that the slave owners stuck to the slave labor system in the last generation.

Ultimately the slave owners lost. Ultimately our capitalists will lose. They should learn a lesson from history.

Gold the "Open Sesame"

In the state of Washington a school for placer mining instruction is being held. Some 3,000 unemployed workers are being taught the seductive art of panning for gold. Hardware stores in Spokane suddenly found themselves unable to supply the demand for pans and attics were scoured for utensils long out of use.

That there's still "gold in them thar hills" is of course true.

This placer mining episode is another sidelight on the phenomenon of unemployment. There is an ample availability of commodities. There is no shortage of food or of clothing. It is money and work that are not to be found.

If the unemployed can find the gold, by magic or by mining, they can buy food and clothing.

Thus again we learn that it is not our machinery of production that has broken down. It is our method of distribution. Placer mining will not mend the ways that are wrong, though it will bring relief to the lucky ones.

State Compensation Insurance Funds

Despite the depression, considered by some authorities the worst in the history of the United States, there has not been a defaulted security in the $17,000,000 investment list of the New York state insurance fund for workmen's compensation insurance. This speaks well for the fund, which has gained the full confidence of employers and employes. How the employers regard it is shown by the fact that though many concerns have been forced out of business by the depression, the number of employers insuring in the fund is steadily increasing.

The New York state fund was supported by organized labor, which has urged the establishment of state funds for compensation insurance and opposed compensation insurance by private companies. The fine record of the New York fund vindicates state funds.

If there is one point in the records of senators and representatives coming up for re-election in November that deserves to be kept in mind above others by trade unionists, many will consider that it is the record of voting on federal pay cuts. Members of congress who voted for drastic pay reductions struck a blow at American standards of living that should cost them their seats. One house leader in the fight for federal pay cuts told a labor representative that when congress comes back in December, it will reduce federal workers' pay to 1913 levels. Men who think as he does deserve enduring political oblivion.

Labor and the Courts

By GEORGE F. SAMUELS

Written for The Labor World

CHAPTER I

The people of the Union are more thoroughly imbued with legal ideas than any other nation.
—Albert V. Dicey

THE protest of the laboring people today is not only that prejudice and archaic precedent governs in place of justice. They do not complain only that undemocratic influences control our judiciary and guide its decisions. Labor is aware of the existence of these dangers to its judicial welfare, but behind them it senses the master evil from which arise these and all judicial evils that are proving dangerous to the freedom of the people living under what is nominally a democratic form of government. The great judicial evil of which not only laboring people but citizens in general not of the privileged classes are conscious and are uneasy about its unobstructed continuance is the development as the leading thought in the minds of the men who compose our judiciary that justice is founded on property rights and not on the welfare and needs of man in a democratic state.

The laboring man has quickly seen that this is a reversion back to the divine right of kings in the minds of our judiciary. He has seen with a growing dissatisfaction and with a feeling of sinking dismay that duplicates of the Old World aristocracies, or power groups, have rapidly established themselves here in his New World democratic government and that here in this republic, as in the aristocratic-controlled governments of Europe, the rich vested classes are dominating his democracy and are seeing to it that the judiciary favor them in questions before the law. The laboring man has been angered—and justly so—at such childish and false statements as the one once made by William Howard Taft that we are living under a democratic form of government wherein "the majority govern for all," for the laboring man knows that a capitalist minority rules this republic for itself alone.

Today there is a shameful disrespect for all laws. The working people are cool in their attitude toward them because they do not regard them as laws which are fair to them, but as laws which intentionally favor the vested interests. As a consequence of this one-sided construction of our laws and their prejudicial administration and interpretation by the courts the common people, with the working classes furnishing most of the activities for bringing about such reforms and safeguards, long ago demanded the initiative, referendum and the recall not only of governmental officials and law-makers but even of judges.

Lewis Strongly Urges Passage Of Coal Measure

Davis-Kelly Bill Represents Salvation for Demoralized and Beggared Industry, Mine Union's Head Declares.

Washington, June 15.—The Davis-Kelly bill for federal regulation of the coal industry represents salvation for the industry, President John L. Lewis, of the United Mine Workers of America, declared in testifying before a subcommittee of the senate mines and mining committee. Lewis' testimony concluded hearings on the bill held for more than two months.

"The Davis-Kelly bill," President Lewis told the subcommittee, "represents the minimum degree of legislation necessary to raise this industry out of the quicksand in which it finds itself. The industry is beggared. Its people are in misery and it is asking for a helping hand."

Only a small group of operators oppose the legislation, which, Lewis predicted, could be enacted before adjournment if committee approval were quickly granted.

He accused the railroads of being the chief opponents in order that they might continue to buy coal at less than the cost of production.

"The coal operators collectively are the most inefficient business group in the United States today," Lewis said. "To meet the terrible competition in the industry, they are willing to sell the blood and bone and sinew of the workers and sacrifice the future of their children.

"It doesn't speak well for the coal industry when operators find it cheaper to keep their mines closed than to operate them."

Woll Explains Basic Policies Of Union Labor

Principle of Voluntarism Runs Through Whole Structure of Movement, A. F. of L. Official Shows in Radio Address.

New York City, June 15.—The American labor movement has four underlying principles, Matthew Woll, vice-president of the American Federation of Labor, said in the sixth of the radio series under the general title of "American Labor and the Nation."

"The basic principle upon which our movement rests is the philosophy of voluntarism. This is central to our labor structure," Mr. Woll said, in speaking on "The Policies of American Labor." He continued:

"The principle of voluntary action runs through the whole American labor structure. It is the principle of government by consent applied to the movement of labor. It provides the basis for autonomy of individual, national and international unions within the federation. It exemplifies the principle of self-government in labor. Thus the local union is bound to its trade organization by voluntary action. In turn the craft unions are bound voluntarily to the federation. In all there are more than 30,000 unions of local, state, national and international bodies bound together by the ties of voluntary co-operation.

A. F. of L. Expresses Principle.

"The American Federation of Labor is the expression of this voluntary association of craft organizations. It has no power of its own other than that which is delegated to it voluntarily by its member organizations. It is not a super-organization, but a federation of organizations. When it speaks it speaks in the name of all the affiliated units, but it cannot bind them to acceptance of a policy in advance. Practically it has no power to tax. It has no power to compel obedience to its authority. It must win assent by volunteer agreement. By voluntary action has been achieved what would have been impossible by compulsion.

"Opposed to compulsion within, the American Federation of Labor has been equally opposed to compulsion from without. American labor has been opposed to every type of compulsion in industrial relations. It opposed compulsory arbitration, the industrial court, and similar methods. Labor has long since recognized that the slower educational processes of informing men rather than compelling them led to the adoption of a specific program and more fundamental and beneficial results."

NEW JERSEY VOTES RELIEF.

The New Jersey legislature has completed the passage of the bills to provide $20,000,000 for emergency relief for the year beginning July 1. It is proposed to utilize approximately $10,000,000 from the proceeds of the sale of Camden-Philadelphia bridge bonds and $4,121,566 to be borrowed from the state teachers' pension fund. In addition, the voters will be asked to rescind $20,000,000 of an $83,000,000 bond issue approved in 1930 and reappropriate the money for relief purposes.

Labor Favors 5-Billion-Dollar Bond Issue

McGrady Declares Huge Public Works Program Is Absolutely Necessary to Provide Work for Idle.

Washington, June 15.—Organized labor's approval of a five billion-dollar federal bond issue to finance huge construction projects for the relief of unemployment was expressed by Edward F. McGrady, legislative representative of the American Federation of Labor, in a radio address here.

Stressing the menace of our unemployed army of 10,500,000 workers with 7,000,000 more working only one, two or three days a week, Mr. McGrady said:

"The money raised by this bond issue would be used for useful national, state and local public works. Plans have already been drawn for public works calling for an expenditure of $500,000,000, so that if we had this $5,000,000,000 bond issue, public works could get started at once and then be enlarged upon. Not less than 2,500,000 people could be put to work at once, possibly more.

"Vast quantities of material would be needed, men would be put to work in our mines, quarries, fabricating factories, cutting timber, building new machinery, tremendous orders for steel, iron and cement, architects would be put to work, clerical forces would be enlarged and this new spending power of these people being put to work would mean that more money would be spent among the professional people of our country and the farmers. Could these bonds be sold? Most emphatically, yes.

"If you approve of this bond issue, I recommend that you, the American citizens, raise your voices so that they will be heard and listened to. But you've got to do it quickly, you've got to do it now, so that the president of these United States and congress shall know how you feel about it. Tell them to stop talking and start working."

Insull's Career As Public Utility Magnate Closes

Resignation From Mid-West Utilities Writes Finis for Man Whose Polices Brought Losses of Millions to Small Investors.

Chicago, June 15.—Regisnation of Samuel Insull as chairman of the board of the Commonwealth Edison company, the People's Gas Light and Coke company and the Public Service Company of Northern Illinois wrote finish to his career as a public utility magnate. The three concerns are operating companies under the Mid-West Utilities company, the big $2,000,000,000 Insull holding concern that was thrown into receivership seven weeks ago. Insull also resigned as one of the receivers of the Mid-West concern.

For the last fifteen years Insull was the great antagonist of public ownership and operation of public utilities. He stressed his opposition mainly on the alleged greater efficiency of privately-owned plants. But that efficiency did not prevent the nation-wide Mid-West Utilities under his own autocratic control from getting to the point where it could not pay its bills.

Thousands of workers and middle class investors lost millions of dollars when Mid-West Utilities went to the wall. Stock which was unloaded on the public up to as high as $50 a share is currently quoted at 36 cents. Those familiar with the financial setup of the concern are of the opinion that the owners of the common stock will receive nothing under the reorganization effected by the receivers.

Go to your Union Meetings

Don't say you are too tired; the weather is bad; or there is too much quibbling and "hot air" to interest me.

Every time you miss a meeting and leave it to the other fellow to look out for your interest, you are doing an injustice both to yourself and your organization.

Your views on especially vital subjects should be represented in discussion and by vote, and the only way for this to be done is for you to be at your union meeting.

You are responsible for the good and welfare of your organization, and non-attendance of union meetings on your part is not excuse enough for you to voice your opinion after a measure has been passed. It is then time for you to concur in what has been done and work in harmony with the officers and other members of your union.

Go to your union meetings regularly and induce others to do the same, because one important thing to remember is the meaning of the slogan:

"United we stand, Divided we fall."

MORE ABOUT

PATRICK GORMAN

ever. "Trades unionists," he declared, "still attempt to take care of their destitute members, they still try to pay them when incapacitated, and, thank God, we are still making a feeble effort to produce food and to prevent home evictions of our members totally unemployed."

Mr. Gorman said, in part:

The present economic situation is unusually serious because all the doctors of economy admit in their diagnoses that the ailment has become chronic. There is a widespread belief that the present system of capitalism, which certainly is the cause of the present seeming never-ending world-wide depression, will have to undergo a major operation, and that mostly new parts will have to be added to the body politic of human relationships.

Periodic panics and trade depressions have always been with us. In 1894 the steel industry suffered through the czar-like tyranny of the steel barons in their treatment of employes; in 1894 there was a slump in railroad activities because of Gene Debs' attempt to remedy the evils of long hours and low pay which resulted in a strike; in 1902 the anthracite coal industry was paralyzed because of the Pennsylvania strike; in 1921 the meat packing industry became stagnant because of the greed of the beef trust for more profit by their attempts to destroy packing house organization. These were merely trade depressions and most of the country generally was enjoying prosperity while these unfortunate incidents were happening.

The present situation, however, has not only affected every single industry of the nation, but has affected every state in the Union, and every country in the world. In North America it has resulted in hunger and starvation; ten million totally unemployed; eighteen million more averaging from one to three days per week, and the rest of the working millions living in a constant dread and fear that the next pay envelope will be their last. A nation of happiness has been turned into a nation of misery. Millions of skilled craftsmen have been transformed into just so many gypsies, sleeping in meadows along railroad lines and in box cars on the sidings. All this, mind you, in a country that has an over-abundance of every human necessity. More shoes than necessary, and yet men, women and children wrap their feet in gunnysacks to keep out the cold; nearly enough wheat to feed the world and yet actually thousands rummage the garbage cans for a crust of bread. This is a putrid management of human affairs and if not remedied will of necessity have to be given an ignominious burial.

It is a well-established fact that certain industrial combinations have come to bestride this country as a Colossus. The economic destiny of the people is held in the hollow of the hands of a few dozens of people. What effort does any of these industrial leaders make to lead the way out? Absolutely no effort whatsoever. Recently in California I talked to a minister. He told me that several years ago he sailed south from Manchuria. He noticed the captain of the ship had quarters that was fit for a king. Socially he was the head; he occupied the chief seat at the captain's table. Authoritatively, his word was law. He was an absolute monarch. That morning the ship stopped in midocean. Engineers and mechanics were in a ferment of activity. Something was wrong with the machinery, but the captain directed every operation; he did not sleep or eat until the trouble had been remedied. He had in his hands the lives and the safety of the passengers.

In comparison, our national ship's machinery has stopped, probably because of wear and antiquation, but are our captains of the ship losing any sleep or making an intelligent effort for the one hundred and twenty million passengers that depend upon them for economic safety? No! They supervise the job as though they were suffering with peresis. They act in the interest of the greedy owners while panic reigns among the passengers. They think of the bondholders and stockholders and heap upon the riders more misery in wage cuts and longer hours.

The American workingman is not interested in revolution, he is not yet desirous of changing to a new captain. He is interested in a home, a radio, an automobile, an education for his children, solid wholesome food for those who depend upon him—in other words, he is interested today only in a job. Unless it is given to him he cannot be expected to forever tolerate a condition which makes him a pauper, hungry and ragged, in a garden where all of his necessities grow in abundance. Surely, eventually, he will take the thing which he has produced and has given to a man who is too greedy to share with him. That is revolution.

We in the American labor movement, while we have reason to complain, are a little more fortunate than the millions who have not the slightest semblance of protection. Trade unionists still attempt to take care of their destitute members; they still attempt to pay them when incapacitated, and, thank God, we are making a feeble effort to produce food and to prevent home evictions of our membership totally unemployed. It is a disgusting situation when billions can be given by the government to large corporations to help tide over poor times for the stockholders, but it cannot bankrupt the nation by giving food to the hungry.

President Gorman addressed a largely-attended meeting of members of Local 600, Meat Cutters, at Central Labor hall Wednesday night, and conferred while here with officers of the local union on matters pertaining to the craft in this city. He left Thursday morning.

steps are to be taken to investigate the matter of employment of laborers on skilled craftsmen's work.

Following conferences on Monday between L. Bert Lowe, representing the U. S. Employment Service; officials of the Carter Construction company, which has a subcontract for excavating on the postoffice building, and representatives of Chattanooga Trades and Labor council, it was evident that no agreement could be reached, the construction company representatives stating unqualifiedly that they intended paying 20 cents per hour for common labor, and building and painting the fences with truck drivers and laborers employed by the company. Protests of the labor representatives, backed by Mr. Lowe, were of no avail, and when the work started Tuesday morning the following letter was addressed to the local office of the employment service:

June 22, 1932.

Mr. L. Bert Lowe, Manager,
U. S. Employment Service,
Federal Building,
City.

Dear Sir:

Acting upon information secured from your office and from other sources, Chattanooga Trades and Labor council desires to enter the most vigorous protest possible against the reported action of sub-contractors on the new local postoffice building in:

First—Payment of a wage scale of 20 cents per hour for common labor, which we regard as entirely inadequate and tending to defeat what is generally understood to be one purpose of the government's building program, the relief of economic conditions.

Second—Use of common labor on skilled craftsmen's work, and payment of wage rate below skilled craftsmen's wage on such work.

We are today wiring Secretary of Labor Doak and Hon. John R. Alpine, supervising director, as follows:

Chattanooga Trades and Labor council is today filing protest with director of local U. S. Employment Service against wage scale of 20 cents an hour on local postoffice project. Also use of common labor on skilled craftsmen's work. (Signed by George W. Perry, president; T. R. Cuthbert, secretary, and Paul J. Aymon, president Tennessee Federation of Labor.)

Trusting that you will take immediate action to the end that such conditions be remedied,

Yours very truly,
T. R. CUTHBERT,
Secretary.

Mr. Lowe Friday indicated the position of his office in the following interview given to a representative of The Labor World:

"Investigations which I have carefully conducted recently have indicated an average minimum wage for common labor of upwards of 25 cents per hour, rather than 15 cents which has been suggested by certain gentlemen with whom the matter has been discussed. I sat in several conferences in which contractors, subcontractors and labor were represented, in which conferences a wage for common labor could not be agreed upon.

"The controversy seems to me to hinge not so much on the wage of skilled crafts, which are stronger in Chattanooga now perhaps than ever before in their history; but on those whose standards of living are lower and whose ability to command a decent wage is less, because of their dire necessity and lack of organization. I am at a loss to understand how any man could take advantage of these unfortunate yet useful people.

"Through a recent act of congress which makes it mandatory on the secretary of labor to decide in advance what wages shall be paid, much of this unpleasant and, to me, unnecessary wrangling over wages will cease. I am sorry that it was impossible for us to come to an agreement before the work started on the postoffice. I am sure, however, that Mr. Doak, who has always been an advocate of living wages, will speedily and satisfactorily assure for the common labor on this work not less than $2 per day of eight hours, and to the skilled crafts a wage in keeping with our standards of living which, due to the far-sightedness of labor organizations, are the highest in the world."

A wire received by Secretary Cuthbert Thursday from John R. Alpine, supervising director, U. S. Employment Service, states that a commissioner from the Department of Labor has been directed to come into the city to investigate conditions under which work on the new postoffice has been started.

Officials of Chattanooga Trades and Labor council were sorely disappointed at the turn of affairs, the labor having felt that the fact that a general contract was awarded to Pickett & Sons, which has never been known as a low-wage concern, would insure fair dealing with labor throughout the construction of the government project.

$1,600,000,000 PUBLIC WORKS BOND ISSUE BY SOVIET UNION

Moscow.—Newspapers of the Soviet Union carried feature articles urging all citizens to subscribe at least [illegible] weeks' salary to the new soviet loan of 3,200,000 roubles, nominally $1,600,000,000. The articles pointed out that the proceeds of the loan will be used for industrialization and increase the country's military capacity.

The new loan brings the sum which the population of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics will have invested in the cause of industrialization to the neighborhood of 8,000,000,000 roubles. The loans represent the means of paying the cost of new construction enterprises which are unproductive without resorting to extra taxation or printing additional money.

Nearly a score of state legislatures passed lays bearing on unemployment relief during the 1931 legislative year, the United States bureau of labor statistics reported recently, in a summary of such legislation.

Much of the detail necessary to smooth operation of the construction of Chattanooga's new million-dollar postoffice was ironed out Wednesday at conferences between representatives of the Ralph Sollitt & Sons company and of Chattanooga Trades and Labor council, and indications are that the disagreement over use of common labor in building a fence around the project, as well as the wage scale for common labor employed on the excavation, will be adjusted to the satisfaction of every one concerned.

The Sollitt company, one of the largest contracting concerns in the country, has a nation-wide reputation for "square dealing," and it now appears that local trades unionists' satisfaction that this company was the successful bidder will be justified.

In preparation for a project of this magnitude, officers of Central Body pointed out, it is but natural that a large amount of detail must be worked out, and while complete accord on all this detail has not as yet been reached, it is felt that after certain slight differences have been "ironed out" there will be no further complications.

It is the purpose of the Sollitt company, according to George Sutherland, the concern's representative, to employ almost exclusively Chattanooga labor, and to begin actual operations immediately following completion of the excavating.

U. S. TREASURY LOST OIL TAX NOW PUT AT $32,000,000

Joint Resolution to Remedy Omission Fails in Senate for Lack of Unanimous Consent and Enormous Gain by Distributing Companies Is Irrevocable.

Washington, June 29.—Tax revenue lost by the United States treasury through the oversight of congress in allowing gasoline in possession of distributors to go untaxed, as exclusively reported by International Labor News Service, has cost the government $82,000,000, the treasury now officially estimates.

The new law levied no tax against distributors and whatever gasoline distributors had on hand on June 21 could be sold by them without the tax, giving someone a profit of a cent a gallon above the profit on taxed gasoline.

On June 9 distributors, having secured a treasury ruling, proceeded to buy enormous quantities of gasoline. All that was necessary was possession of title.

Immediately after publication of the facts by International Labor News Service a joint resolution was introduced in congress to remedy the defects in the law. The joint resolution was adopted in the house, but was blocked in the senate. Senator Smoot, chairman of the senate finance committee, sought unanimous consent, but was unable to secure it. Several senators declared they would offer amendments if the measure came up. Among them was Senator Norris, with a power amendment. Under these circumstances, lacking unanimous consent for the resolution to come up without amendment, it was abandoned. It was learned this week that Senator Smoot has given up the plan to secure action and it is said in addition, that even if action could be had now it probably would be to no avail, since the loss has been incurred and the legislation would be ruled invalid as retroactive.

LABOR "SAVING" MACHINES ADD TO DEPRESSION'S UNEMPLOYMENT

One Plant, Seeking Reduced Costs, Inaugurates Methods and Mechanical Devices That Reduce Force of 880 to Skeleton of Only 220, Leaving 620 Idle.

(By Staff Correspondent)

New York City, June 29.—Unemployment is helping to create more unemployment. "Hard times" lead employers to seek new ways to "save labor." Predictions that returning prosperity will bring greater technological unemployment have their foundation in today's happenings.

To offset forced unemployment there must be a shorter work-day and a shorter work-week.

It easily may develop that a 30-hour week is too long.

But for today the 30-hour week is the available remedy.

Francis A. Westbrook, engineer, declares in "Industrial Relations" that many firms now doing "good business" are in fact adding to the general depression.

One concern, seeking to cut costs, installed changes by which, Westbrook reports, "it now produces a greater output with 260 employes than was done less than three years ago with 880 employes. In other words, the "improvement" resulted in the technological unemployment of 620 people."

Labor saving machinery, all reports show, is being introduced today at an unexampled rate of speed. Engineers are searching for the last word an automatic production, which contributes to further unemployment.

If there is any remedy other than the 30-hour week, what is it?

Howard to Join Wage Negotiators In New York City

I. T. U. President Called Upon to Meet Publishers Following Chicago Session — Photo-Engravers Agree to Arbitrate.

New York City, June 29.—New York City, just through with a seven-weeks' building trades dispute in which wage-cutters were walloped, is in the midst of a printing trades wage dispute that ranks as one of the most important of the year.

Typographical Union No. 6, having deadlocked with the publishers last week, this week expected International President Charles P. Howard here to meet representatives of the publishers' association.

President Howard on June 25 met with Chicago publishers in an effort to adjust relations there and was booked to come to New York as soon as he could conclude business in the western metropolis.

New York photo-engravers have agreed to arbitrate their scale and arbitrators have been named. They are: Federal Court Judge John C. Knox, Supreme Court Justice Peter J. Schmuck and George J. Ryan, president, board of education. Employers seek a 20 per cent pay cut, which the union opposes.

Chicago employers are reported seeking arbitration with Webb Pressmen's Union No. 7 and to negotiate with engravers and stereotypers.

Reorganization Bill Backed by Miners Continues to Lag

Congress Fails to Advance Measure Designed to Rehabilitate Bituminous Industry, Though Union Is Hopeful.

Washington, June 29.—The mine reorganization bill backed by the United Mine Workers has dragged through another week of inaction, with the senate concentrating most of the time on the combination relief bill now described as the Wagner bill.

Thomas Kennedy, speaking for the United Mine Workers here, said it is difficult to see how there can ever be improvement in the bituminous situation until this legislation is enacted.

While the measure drags along, the miners continue to have hope that favorable action may be secured.

Resolved, That the Tennessee State Association of Letter Carriers in convention assembled at Memphis, Tenn., May 30, 1932, urge all branches in the state association to affiliate with the Tennessee Federation of Labor and the local labor council in their city.

POSTOFFICE, LABOR DAY DISCUSSED

Central Body Delegates Transact Routine Business Monday Night.

COMMITTEE TO MEET TUESDAY

Regular meeting of the general Labor Day committee of Chattanooga Trades and Labor council will be held Tuesday night at Central Labor hall, 7:30. Chairman Paul Aymon urges that all members be present, as the elaborate program planned demands undivided attention of every member from now until the "big day."

Discussion of plans for Labor Day and report on the progress of negotiations concerning building of the new postoffice were two major matters occupying the attention of Central Body delegates Monday night in an otherwise featureless meeting. Considerable business of a more or less routine nature, however, kept the delegates in session until a late hour.

Chief interest in the discussions of Labor Day centered in a motion which passed after some discussion calling upon the county court to observe Labor Day as a legal holiday in the schools and close them for the day. It was pointed out that in the past local schools have operated despite the holiday, and it is hoped the court will take notice of the appeal and give proper recognition to the workers' holiday. Secretary Cuthbert was also instructed to write principals of all private schools in the city and county making the same request.

President Perry was instructed to name a committee of three to investigate charges nonresidents were employed by the city and county governments.

A nonpartisan political committee of seven members will also be named to investigate the records of various candidates for federal, state and county offices. This committee will make a thorough probe into the records of all aspirants, and will report back for action of the body.

New delegates obligated were as follows: Bricklayers, S. A. Martin, Lester Larsen and Harry Davis; Carpenters, C. C. Ferry.

A. C. Kamin and Roy Lee were elected to fill the places of C. R. Ruggles and W. A. Witt, resigned, as members of the board of trustees and Labor World directors, respectively.

"I GUESS WE'LL HAVE TO JOIN UNION," SAYS HOTEL CLERK

"Depression" Brings Pay Cut After Cut, Compelling Employes of Palatial Hostelries to Think of Uniting for Self-Protection Against Starvation Conditions.

New York City, June 29.—"We need a union; I guess we'll have to join the union. Conditions are terrible."

So spoke an elderly woman floor clerk in one of New York's largest and finest hotels.

These hotel workers have been in fear of their lives, for powerful interests would combat any tendency of theirs to join a union, and they know it.

But desperation is driving them.

"We've had five cuts in pay since this place opened," said this worker. "The last was two weeks ago. How do we live? Well, I don't know. Some of us can't pay our rent, but we work here all day in fine surroundings, going later to homes that are mean and pitiful in most cases—and where the rent is in many cases unpaid.

"We work nine hours a day. We get no time off except at our own expense. There are no longer any vacations, unless we pay for them. We must manage our floor; we must be detectives; we must be timekeepers; we must be affable and diplomatic. But the pay keeps going down.

"In some hotels it is worse than here. Of course business is bad, but there is a limit to the burden we can carry. It's terrible. It seems as if we'd have to join a union to help us protect ourselves."

BUILDING WORKERS DEMAND 40-HOUR WORK WEEK

UNEMPLOYMENT REACHES TOTAL OF 10,800,000, A. F. OF L. SAYS

Green Warns Coming Winter Will See Thirteen Million Idle Unless Nation Meets Emergency with Work. "Hunger and Desperation Spreading," He Declares.

Washington, June 29.—New high figures on unemployment were issued by the American Federation of Labor this week when President Green announced that preliminary figures for May showed 10,800,000 involuntarily idle. By cities, fifteen out of forty reporting offices showed new growths of unemployment.

The coming winter was forecast as worse than last, with hunger and despair spreading.

Millions Since January.

"The public seems entirely unconscious of the growing catastrophe that is upon us," he said. "Unemployment has been increasing this spring at a rate unprecedented even in the wo years of disress we have just been through. From January to May, 1932, well over a million men and women have been thrown out of work in industry. The rate of increase this year has been considerably more than twice that of 1930 or 1931. Trade union figures for June show a still further increase. If unemployment keeps on increasing at this rate we shall have 13,000,000 out of work by next winter.

"Our preliminary estimate of unemployment shows at least 10,800,000 out of work in May. Trade union figures for the first part of June show the largest increase this year. Applying them to industry generally would indicate that at least 200,000 more have been thrown out of work since May. Farm work has provided some jobs, but unquestionably the number now out of work is nearly 11,000,000. Our weighted figures of all trades are: May, 22.8 per cent out of work; June, 23.6 per cent. This is an increase of eight-tenths of one per cent, while no other month this year has shown more than three-tenths.

Building Hardest Hit.

"In June, according to union reports, 63 per cent were out of work in building, 41 per cent in clothing, 41 per cent in metal trades, 35 per cent in water transportation (seamen and longshoremen), 18 per cent in printing, 18 per cent in street transportation (truck drivers). Unemployment in building has increased in June when it normally improves.

"The report for cities shows unemployment increasing in fifteen of our twenty-four reporting cities. Detroit and Cleveland report the highest unemployment, with New York, Paterson, Chicago, Buffalo, Pittsburgh and Philadelphia following closely. The month has brought serious increases in Denver, Baltimore, St. Louis and San Antonio.

"From all present indications it looks as if next winter would be worse than anything we have yet experienced—unless we take the necessary constructive measures. Hunger and despair are spreading unrest among masses of our people."

Offer Sympathy To a Brother

Members of Lodge 56, Machinists, have adopted the following resolution of sympathy for H. E. Kelley, secretary of the lodge, in the loss of his little daughter, who passed away last Wednesday morning:

"Members of Lodge 56, International Association of Machinists, hereby extend their heartfelt sympathy to Brother Harry E. Kelley and family in their sorrow caused by the death of their daughter, Jewell Margaret, aged 10, who died Wednesday morning at 10 o'clock."

The resolution was signed by a committee consisting of Dave Sivley, Joe Milburn and W. L. Wergin.

The Labor World joins with members of Lodge 56, and speaks for the entire local movement in extending to Brother Kelley and other relatives sincerest condolences in their bereavement.

RHODE ISLAND TO FIGHT.

"A Call to Action" issued by the Rhode Island State Federation of Labor condemns what it calls "the corrupt political machine which rules for the few" and calls for a vigorous campaign to defeat "all candidates for office, from the governor down, who have repudiated the workers in their hour of need." All local unions are urged to act at once.

LIVING COST REDUCTION IS NOT REALITY

Many Items Fail to Show Decreases.

"SOCK AND SOAK 'EM" RULE IS APPLIED

Taxes, Fines and Fees Continue to Pile Up on Harassed Population.

By B. C. CLARKE

Quite a good deal has been heard lately in the halls of congress and elsewhere about the cost of living being less today than it was twelve, twenty-four or thirty-six months ago. Very little is being said about the decreased income of the people, and still less whenever possible about the heavy and constantly growing tax burden they are carrying.

The whole national income today, as estimated by statistical agencies at 57 billion dollars for the year, is exactly 65.53 per cent of the same estimated income in 1929. In other words, wage and salary slashes, with other causes of loss, reach an average of 34.47 per cent for the whole people.

More specifically, the man who in 1929 was making $100 a week is today, by this average, making $65.53, provided he has been able to hold his job. If he was making $50 a week then, he is today by this average making $32.75.

No sane person will contend that $32.75 or $65.53 will buy as much today as would $50 or $100 in 1929.

Lower Cost Mostly Fiction.

There have been reductions in prices of canned foodstuffs and some articles of clothing. But rents have scarcely come down an inch, taxes have increased to the highest peaks in the nation's history, gasoline is going up in price by leaps and bounds, and it costs as much today to repair an automobile as it did four or five years ago.

Street car fares are as high as ever, electric and gas rates are as high or higher, railroad fares stand just where they did, first class postage is going up by 50 per cent, a newspaper costs just as much as it did, and federal taxes are boosting the prices of movie tickets.

The man who can find where his expenses are less today than they were three or four years ago except by dire economy, deprivation and curtailment, belongs in the class of miracle men.

All over this country tax hungry public officials, following the evasions and subterfuges of congress at this session, are striving to dodge constructive and permanent reductions in the costs of government, and turning to every possible subterfuge to extort more money from the people.

"Sock" and "Soak" 'Em.

With the exception of picayune cuts in the pay of salaried employes of the government, congress has refused to effect retrenchment, reorganization, consolidation or elimination of duplication in the federal structure.

All over the country—in states, cities and towns—public authorities are passing the word along to their police departments to "sock" and "soak" motorists on every conceivable charge as a means of increasing their public revenues. Traffic fees and fines are going up, for no reason except easy revenue.

Hordes of policemen rove the streets to find some overtime parker or petty violator of a regulation that he may be hauled into court and $3 or $5 extorted from him for the public till.

The order has gone out in scores of states and cities to issue summons to every man against whom a traffic complaint can be made, even though he may be clearly in the right, and the police know him to be so.

The man who strikes an automobile or an intersection which did not have the right of way against him finds himself summoned to court and made to defend himself with witnesses and an attorney. He is lucky if with the loss of his own time, he escapes with an outlay and loss to himself of less than $30.

Chapter VI
JESUS' EVALUATION OF LIFE
Part VI

WM. L. MOSS

The [illegible] is found to be the [illegible] to His [illegible] self-satisfied [illegible] always [illegible] that is [illegible] and vigorous spiritually. We [illegible] not wonder, then, at Jesus finding the most determined opposition to His teaching coming from the prosperous and respectable churchgoers and church supporters of His time. The disease of spiritual [illegible] always endemic among those who lead favored lives. Life's material affairs being kind to them, the easiest religion to be also easy and pleasurable. Maintaining a passive conformity to the conventional ethics of social life they assume the same attitude towards things spiritual and lose the capacity for moral enthusiasm vigorous spiritual decisions.

Jesus' teaching was not of a doctrine nor was it a code of ethics. He taught a way of life. His demand was not merely for a good life, but for a life that is good for something; teachable that it may learn to grow; growing that it may be fruitful. Jesus knew He need not look for development in the Pharisees of the kind of character He desired men to have for they were unteachable, impenetrable, unsusceptible and self-satisfied. The opposite of this Pharisaic spirit is the teachable, open-minded, trustful spirit of the little child. The [illegible] believed himself [illegible] perfect, but Jesus knew [illegible] not grow in a day. [illegible] soul must be given time to grow. His observation of [illegible] taught Him the analogy of the [illegible] of men: "First [illegible] the ear, after that [illegible] the ear." (Mark 4:28.) Knowing [illegible] to be a law of God [illegible] world Jesus saw [illegible] opportunity in [illegible] imperfect characters of men [illegible] could [illegible] in the [illegible] Pharisee.

Now to return to Mark 10:15. "Whosoever shall not receive the kingdom of God as a little child, he shall in no wise enter therein," the passage which inspired what has been printed in this column during the past three weeks. In the light of what I [illegible] the three [illegible] what [illegible] those three [illegible] ever [illegible] of [illegible]

From [illegible] not [illegible] (naivete) to [illegible] does [illegible] the spirit of [illegible] open-mindedness, [illegible] receptivity, [illegible] condition of entrance to the Kingdom.

What Next!

German [illegible] has blasted the atom, recovering vastly more energy than required in the blasting. The process changes one substance into another. These scientists have reached a goal aimed at throughout the scientific world.

B.-M. T. PLANS WAGE CUT.

B.-M. T., New York transit system, announces a 10 per cent wage cut which will affect 2,000 immediately. Motormen belong to the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers and towermen to the Signalmen, both having agreements carrying 30-day clauses.

Abolish This Gag on Political Liberty

Under the American form of government as expressed in the Declaration of Independence and declared in the federal constitution, every citizen has the right to participate in the processes for selecting all elective officers of the government. This right applies especially to the election of members of the house of representatives and the senate. It attaches to all citizens, whether they are civilians or employes of the federal government.

The citizen who takes an interest in national political affairs usually works and votes for or against the election of a candidate for the house or the senate according to that candidate's public record.

To deprive any citizen or group of citizens of this right is to deny them political essentials without which American citizenship means but little.

Nevertheless, this deprivation is just what the United States civil service commission does in its rules restricting the "political activities" of employes of the government.

The commission's rules are especially sinister in connection with the drastic pay cuts and other reactionary measures which the present congress voted to impose on federal employes.

Under the constitution, federal employes have the right to endeavor to defeat in the November election members of congress who voted a $2,000,000,000 dole from federal funds to banks and other institutions in financial distress, and then slashed the pay of government employes nearly $100,000,000 a year on the pretext of necessity in balancing the budget.

Federal employes also have the right, under the constitution, to endeavor to elect members of congress who voted against the federal pay cuts and opposed other legislation inimical to the interests of over half a million government workers.

But the civil service commission announces that it will recommend dismissal from the government service of all government employes who assert their political rights to oppose and attempt to persuade other citizens to oppose the re-election of wage slashing representatives and senators and who favor and attempt to get other citizens to favor the election of representatives and senators who voted against the federal pay cuts.

The language of the commission is plain. On the penalty it will seek to impose on federal employes who oppose the federal pay slashers it says:

> "To make a public attack on a candidate for public action by an employe is a violation of civil service rule 1 office is to take active part in a political campaign. Such and may subject the offending employe to separation from the public service. If the attack is made by the joint action of several employes, the guilt is still personal and attaches to each employe separately and severally for the purpose of the administration of the civil service law."

The commission is equally plain regarding the penalty it proposes to apply to federal employes who exercise their constitutional right to work and vote for the election of representatives and senators who opposed the pay cut. It says:

> "* * * the commission accordingly holds that it is contrary to the civil service rules prohibiting political activity for any organization of classified federal employes to issue letters or statements making direct or implied suggestion that the federal employes vote or work for the return to office of those legislators whose records are regarded as favorable in matters primarily or solely concerning federal employes."

The clear meaning of this rule is that the civil service commission threatens with dismissal all employes in the federal classified service who work for the election of senators or representatives who have favored maintaining the living standards of government employes and against the election of senators and representatives who have opposed maintaining those standards.

This threat of dismissal is an economic terrorism utterly unworthy of an agency of the federal government. It flaunts the declaration of independence. It nullifies rights set forth in the federal constitution. It denies political liberty. It sets up in the capital of the United States a despotism similar to the dictatorships imposed by the governments of soviet Russia and fascist Italy.

The United States civil service commission is not exempted from the provisions of the federal constitution. It should abolish without delay this gag on the constitutional rights of American citizens who are employes of the government.

Hairsplitting on Workers' Compensation

Recent decisions by state judicial bodies affirming the rights of injured workers and their dependents to compensation for certain types of industrial accidents show with what persistency employers and insurance companies continue their attempts to victimize the workers by fighting their claims for just awards.

In Ohio an employe was struck by an automobile and killed while walking to his work inside the employer's plant. His dependents filed a claim for damages under the workmen's compensation law. The claim was fought on the technical ground that when he was killed the employe was not at the specific location required for work.

The Ohio supreme court swept aside this subterfuge. It decided that an employe entering the premises of his employer to begin the duties of his employment but who has not yet reached the place where the service is to be rendered is discharging a duty to his employer which is a necessary incident to his day's work.

In Washington a timber worker died from cerebral hemorrhage sustained while under unusual exertion in sawing a log. The claim of his dependents for compensation was contested. It was contended that the killed man had hardening of the arteries and that therefore his death resulted from physical imperfection and was not attributable to the work he was doing.

Medical testimony admitted the diseased condition of the man's arteries, but declared his death would not have occurred at the time except for the physical exertion.

The Washington supreme court sustained the claim for compensation on the ground that "it was not the legislature's purpose to limit the provisions of the workmen's compensation act to only such persons as approximate physical perfection."

In the District of Columbia a worker died from sunstroke while working in the open air loading a truck when the temperature was 92 degrees. The application of his wife for compensation was contested on the ground that the man was killed by abnormal heat to which the general public was subjected and that the fatality was not due to any special hazard due to increased heat resulting from his occupation. The district court of appeals decided that the man's death by sunstroke was an accidental injury which arose out of his employment and directed the United States employes' compensation commission to award compensation.

Workmen's compensation laws were enacted by our states largely through the influence of organized labor.

The laws were not passed for the benefit of self-insuring employers or companies which write compensation insurance for private profit. They were passed to protect the workers and their families.

State compensation boards, self-insuring employers and insurance companies should recognize the broad principles of protection underlying the compensation laws. They should stop compelling the injured workers and their dependents to resort to the courts to protect them by technical and hair-splitting interpretation of compensation laws.

The Rockefeller Oligarchy

Standard Oil of New Jersey, head of the Rockefeller family of oil companies, has ordered the five-day week into effect to increase employment.

The Rockefellers stand out as the dominant American financial family. In this period of national distress the Rockefeller family has done absolutely nothing to bring relief to the wage earners. Notably Standard Oil of New Jersey has failed, until the hour of the five-day week announcement.

Rockefeller stands for industrial autocracy in America. Despite the highly effective work of a skilled publicity outfit and the able efforts of a Rockefeller oligarchy, which includes all of the branches of a regular government, to point the Rockefeller family as a reformed family, the old Rockefeller tyranny stands.

The Rockefeller institution is curious. Rockefeller junior does the posing. He makes the grandstand plays. He spouts ethics. But when it comes to vital decisions that fix Rockefeller industrial policies, keep this straight:

John D. Rockefeller—the elder—rules like a czar. His word is the LAW! And he is the same autocrat today that he was in the nineties, unchanged, unswerving from the regime of tyranny that made him in those older days the target of every person who cared for social justice.

Three major episodes mark industrial policy in the Rockefeller kingdom. They are, in the order of their development: Ludlow, Continental Coal, Western Maryland railroad. In those cases IT WAS THE ELDER JOHN D. ROCKEFELLER WHO RULED LIKE A TYRANT.

The play of the publicity machine has been to paint the elder Rockefeller as a man in retirement, a kindly old gentleman who gives away dimes, has birthday parties and poses for obsequious photographers.

THAT IS JUST SO MUCH ROT. The nice old gentleman who plays golf moderately in Florida in winter and who gives dimes to all comers, is the man who still wields the scepter of rulership and who DOMINATES LIKE A TYRANT through the ramifications of the biggest grouping of corporations in America.

That is truth. The fiction makes a nice Sunday supplement story. But the truth crashes into the midst of that picture to show that while millions are hungry, while millions have no jobs, while millions are defenseless and helpless in the face of economic disaster, the biggest industrial ruler in America is still the ruler, is still the active head of the vast Rockefeller oligarchy, is still the man who turns thumbs down, is still the man behind the decisions in every case that counts.

There are three outstanding American families of power—Rockefeller, Morgan and Mellon—and of these Rockefeller is the greatest. And in the realm of Rockefeller the wrinkled, weazened face of the old autocrat still peers forth to give the orders that send men to work or to hunger, that makes conditions good or bad, that determines their economic fate.

The young John D. Rockefeller spreads a certain idealism abroad and his friends say that he is sincere, which he quite likely is. Inside the Rockefeller institution there are two camps—the one helping the young John D. to dispense palaver and to enhance the Rockefeller reputation for decency, the other playing the game for the old man, helping the ancient ruler to rule with unceasing vigor and autocracy. The voice is the voice of the younger man, but the hand is the hand of the father and it is as effective and as dominating and as autocratic as ever it was.

The Rockefeller autocracy lives. It does not change.

That Furlough Victory

Organized labor is entitled to vast credit for victory of the furlough plan for government workers as an alternative to out and out pay cuts.

The furlough plan compels all workers earning over $1,000 to take a month's furlough, but it preserves the rate of earnings per month, which labor always considers vital.

The measure is a big feather in the cap of labor as a step toward national reduction of working time. It is not a five-day week measure, but it tends in that direction, which is all to the good.

Labor and the Courts

CHAPTER I

America . . . has given autocratic status to its successful classes.
—Percy Stickney Grant.

WHEN we analyze closely the actual economic, religious, social, political and judicial forces of our republic and are unafraid to face the facts so deduced, the unpleasant conviction forces itself upon us that, class for class, American life is organized in the same way as that which is characteristic of the European social order. Although affecting to despise and even to avoid in large measure Europe's social classes and distinctions we have in reality permitted class rule to become the dominant factor in our republican life.

There is this difference between us and the class-ridden Europeans: they make no pretense that this is not the state of affairs with them while we make much ado about a supposed equality of all on our shores and blind ourselves to a fast-growing class rule that some day must be uprooted and destroyed if republican government is to survive in this country. The European has no tradition that "equality and liberty" are the chief benefactors his native land bestows upon the individual, hence he does not attempt to disguise the fact when reminded that he is ruled by those who have no personal interest in keeping control of him. As for Americans, their thinking is confused and they cannot see matters straight due to the fact that they have been systematically taught that even the loss of their personal liberty is in conformity with the high and lofty ideals that shaped their republic; that whatever is done, though it may not be to the welfare of the common people, if done by the vested interests, is according to the "American plan" and no one but an "enemy" of the government or a "radical" will protest nor show resentment.

Thus it has become exceedingly easy for the affairs of our republic to be controlled by a hegemony consisting of the vested interests made up solely of powerful employers and the rich. Our government, therefore, has been rightfully called a "plutocracy," an "oligarchy," and, with reference to powers, "a government by injunction."

It has been the most natural thing in the world for those who are using the nation to serve their own personal, selfish purposes to see to it that our judiciary supports them in their activities. The same American tradition of "equality and liberty" that has kept our citizens mild and submissive while there grew up about them and made them the willing victims of a deceptive social and political order has prevented the vested interests from a display of undue force, or rather it has made possible the growth of undemocratic and at times subtly illegal use of judicial force. In fact, instead of using much actual force it has been far easier for the vested interests that rule our republic to have enacted the laws they desire, and in the case of existing laws which have not permitted them to do all they wished because of the restricted latitude of the laws themselves, the path leading to the ends they would attain has been cleared before them by the voluntary acquiescence of the judiciary to their autocratic program.

WILLARD IS HOPEFUL.

Daniel Willard, B. & O. railroad president, told Rochester alumni that with the budget balanced and relief legislation passed conditions will improve. "There is too much criticism of congress," he added.

THIRTEEN MILLION DOLLAR VICTORY WON BY NEW YORK BUILDING TRADES UNIONS

Employers Lose After Six Weeks—Ultimatum Ordering 22 to 30 Per Cent Cut Overthrown by Labor Solidarity—Tremendous Blow at Wage Cutting.

(By Staff Correspondent)

New York City, June 22.—One and a half months of the most amazing building trades tie-up New York has ever witnessed ended June 15 when the building trades unions forced an agreement calling for a wage cut of 15 per cent and less, in place of the 22 to 30 per cent cut decreed by the employers on April 1.

All trades returned to work promptly on June 16.

The situation developed many complications before final settlement came.

A portion of the trades had been signed to take the cut proposed by the employers, but it is the understanding now that even those trades will win the new rate, a cut of only 15 per cent.

The bricklayers, whose international officers have been here for two months, take a cut of only 14.20 per cent. A clause will be written into their new agreement calling for arbitration of all future disputes. Their new agreement will run until April 30, 1933. In the case of all other trades the new agreement will run until Dec. 31, 1933.

Big Sum Saved Workers.

The rate won by the long fight is $1.20 a day more than the wage fixed in the employers' ultimatum of April 1. Figuring on only half the building trades membership finding work for only 150 days in the year the wages won by this fight will total more than $13,000,000.

The developments at the outset gave the workers the chance to fight against the dictated wage. First the Elevator Constructors gained a separate agreement for a wage higher than the dictated wage. That was on May 1. On the next day the Bricklayers secured an arbitration agreement with one of the two associations of their employers. In that arbitration they won a wage award of $13.20 a day, $1.20 above the dictated wage in the employers' ultimatum. Immediately the trades that had not accepted the proposed cut rallied together and until the end stood as a unit in opposition. The bricklayers' arbitration award was the mark shot at by these unions from May 10, when it was handed down, until the day of settlement, and that award was the basis of the wage finally fixed.

Workers Stand Solid.

During the whole month and a half not a tool was lifted. No open shop operations were attempted and no difficulty of any kind took place. Nobody attempted to go to work. The union ranks, filled with hungry men, remained intact to a man. Perhaps no city has ever had such a peaceful, orderly, solid and united tie-up of construction on a city-wide basis.

Announcement of the settlement for all trades except the bricklayers was made by C. G. Norman, chairman of the board of governors of the Building Trades Employers' association, in the presence of President McDonough, of the A. F. of L. Building Trades Department. The bricklayers' settlement was announced at the same time by the executive board of the B. M. & P. I. U.

Doctors Forced To Drive Taxis To Earn Living

Depression Continues to Take Toll — Hundreds of Young New York Buusiness Women Jobless and Homeless.

New York City, June 15.—Depression continues to take its toll.

President-elect Charles Heyd, of the Medical Society of New York State, has just said that a number of physicians in large cities have been forced to take jobs as night watchmen, taxi drivers or elevator operators.

Meanwhile apartment house janitors and assistants tell heart-breaking stories of the extra work piled upon them and the 12-hour shifts following in the wake of reduced staffs.

Meanwhile there is here a new type of homeless woman—the young business woman. Because of lay-offs in business houses there are hundreds of highly skilled office women not only out of work but homeless.

At the central registration bureau for the homeless many of the 1,400 applicants of the last seven months have been of this new type.

During March and April 300 newly homeless women applied to the Travelers' Aid. Some were in their teens, thirty-nine were over 60 years of age, seventy were trained in highly skilled occupations and half had never before sought aid.

Dr. Heyd predicted a rise in the number of tuberculosis cases, arising from malnutrition and gastric intestinal disorders.

Organized Labor Wins Fight For Picket Signs

District of Columbia Commissioners Charge Sign Code Interpreted as Banning Right of Pickets to Carry Placards.

Washington, June 15.—Organized labor of the District of Columbia won a distinct victory for strike activities when the district commissioners decided to amend the sign regulations so as to permit picketing.

The controversy arose over an interpretation of the sign code in connection with a labor dispute between Fur Workers' Union Local 72 and a furrier. The union pickets, carrying placards informing the public that the furrier was unfair to organized labor, patrolled the sidewalk in front of the furrier's shop.

The municipal drafting committee said it had no intention of discriminating against labor when it framed the sign code. Nevertheless, Corporation Counsel W. W. Bride held that the placards violated the code.

The Fur Workers' union asked the commissioners to hold a hearing on a proposed amendment that the sign rules shall not apply to "signs displayed or carried for the purpose of acquainting the public with the existence of a labor dispute."

Organized labor was represented at the hearing by Edward J. Tracy, of the legal information bureau of the American Federation of Labor; Marx Lewis, attorney for the Fur Workers' union, ond John B. Colpoys, editor of the Washington Trades Unionist.

Mr. Tracy contended that the sign regulation as interpreted by Mr. Bride abrogated the right of labor to maintain picketing as defined in the Norris-LaGuardia anti-injunction bill recently enacted by congress. He said that congress had legalized picketing, and that any attempt by the district commissioners to enforce regulations against union placards so used would not only be a violation of the Norris-LaGuardia law, but would also be the same as lending their offices in behalf of unfair employers in local labor disputes.

At the conclusion of the hearing, Maj.-Gen. John C. Gotwals, engineer commissioner, said the sign regulations would be modified to prevent any future ban on labor picketing.

MORE JOBS TO GO.

Oklahoma oil refineries are planning a part shutdown for this summer to prevent demoralization of the market, but while the market may be steadied many workers will lose jobs.

UNEMPLOYED MULTITUDE SEEKS RELIEF IN BOOKS

Throngs Try Self-Teaching in Hope for New Occupations. Desperation Drives Workers to Use Every Recourse in Hunt for Work in New Fields.

New York City, June 29.—Unemployment is driving enormous numbers of men and women to the public libraries in search of knowledge which they hope will help them out of their difficulties.

Last year there was a gain of a million books for home circulation, but this year's figure will go far over that, the library board of trustees reports.

Unemployed workers come seeking books that will help them learn new trades and occupations. Those that have not lost hope are wracking their brains to find new fields of endeavor.

Besides the quest for books the unemployed come seeking information, doubtless on the theory that where there are books there must be helpfulness.

A man asked for a map to show him the shortest route to walk to Newark, where he heard there was a job. Another wanted a book to brush up on blacksmithing for a civil service examination. Many ask for books on poultry raising, radio and automobile repair work.

The big main library at Fifth avenue and Forty-second street gets the bulk of the unemployment requests, showing how humanity is using every resource to live through the depression, seeking to hunt in new paths where the old have failed them.

HEATING AND POWER PLANT PROPOSED FOR MILWAUKEE

Milwaukee, Wis.—The special utility committee of nine city officials and private citizens appointed by Mayor Hoan ordered a study of the advisability of the city erecting a central heating and power generating plant to serve public buildings and possibly private consumers. The proposal was presented to the committee by Howard F. Ilgner, superintendent of the bureau of municipal equipment.

AS THE WORKER SEES HIS WORLD

Despite all pulmotor efforts, twenty-one banks went down last week, nailing up deposits of $60,000,000. The year's closing now total 740.

President John L. Lewis, United Mine workers, has called a joint conference for Indiana and Illinois to consider advisability of assembling an interstate conference to negotiate uniform wage agreement.

While a half million under March's high mark, German unemployment still exceeds 5,500,000.

Lawrence division of Pacific mills adds to misery by ordering a 20 to 22½ per cent wage cut, the second in four months.

A flat 25 per cent increase has been ordered by stock companies on compensation insurance rates.

With refrigeration now a large part of their work Chicago master steamfitters want to be called "comfort contractors" instead of heating contractors.

House of representatives labor committee has reported favorably bill to distribute surplus government clothing to needy persons.

Census figures just made known show 131,264 bricklayers and 887,379 carpenters in the United States.

Six New York skyscrapers, including Empire State, required 30,000,000 building brick as back-up material. Empire State took ten million.

Consumption of cigarettes, mostly non-union made, fell hard in May. Drop was exceeded only in April and in last October. Likewise May was the twelfth consecutive month of decline.

6-HOUR DAY URGED TO HELP PROBLEM OF UNEMPLOYMENT

London, Eng.—The executive committee of the National Union of Railwaymen decided to submit a resolution at the forthcoming labor party conference asking it to declare in favor of the six-hour working day as a contribution toward solving the unemployment problem.

Go to your Union Meetings

Don't say you are too tired; the weather is bad; or there is too much quibbling and "hot air" to interest me.

Every time you miss a meeting and leave it to the other fellow to look out for your interest, you are doing an injustice both to yourself and your organization.

Your views on especially vital subjects should be represented in discussion and by vote, and the only way for this to be done is for you to be at your union meeting.

You are responsible for the good and welfare of your organization, and non-attendance of union meetings on your part is not excuse enough for you to voice your opinion after a measure has been passed. It is then time for you to concur in what has been done and work in harmony with the officers and other members of your union.

Go to your union meetings regularly and induce others to do the same, because one important thing to remember is the meaning of the slogan:

"United we stand, Divided we fall."

MORE ABOUT LIVING COST

People Tolerate Piracy.

If he demands an explanation he is told it is "the order of the department" that he be summoned to court. These departments have found that many people prefer to pay a fine of $5 or $10 rather than try to defend themselves, and through this piracy are reaping a harvest that does not appear in the tax assessment.

Police precincts in Washington, D. C., especially those in the downtown district, are glittering examples of this species of robbery.

Methods that are being pursued by Washington police today, as well as by police elsewhere, are significant of the things to be found in the new federal tax law, passed by congress, saddling inexcusable and indefensible taxes upon the people. These congressmen through their methods of taxation have adopted virtually the same practices that are being followed by police departments to extort additional public revenue.

Defeat to Be Penalty.

Some of the "strongest" men in congress—in both senate and house—admit today they are faced with overwhelming defeat at the polls this year. The people are showing a disposition to throw out the job holders and pie eaters in office who have shown no greater genius in government than to devise new means of piracy and robbery to obtain funds, rather than effecting constructive reorganization and economy in government.

That tendency is already manifest among those who have already faced the voters in recent primaries. The polls next November give indication of holding the greatest house-cleaning in store, irrespective of party, faction or clique, that the country has known in a long time.

546 EMPLOYERS PROSECUTED FOR LABOR LAW VIOLATION

Boston, Mass.—State Commissioner of Labor and Industries Edwin F. Smith announced that for the six months ended May 31, 1932, prosecutions against Massachusetts employers for violation of the labor laws were one-third greater than during the corresponding period a year ago. The prosecutions numbered 546, while in the same months last year the figure was 399. Most of the prosecutions in both periods were for the nonpayment of wages.

TAXES TAKE $1 TO EVERY $4.25 EARNED, HIGHEST IN U. S. HISTORY

Federal, State and Local Governments All Take Toll From People to Pay High Cost of Government. Diversion Evil Bound to Become Serious Issue.

By B. C. CLARKE

High taxes are taking one dollar today out of every four and a quarter that are being earned. They are taking one day's work out of every four and a quarter, and one week's work out of every month.

We are all paying taxes, whether we see them or not, and we are paying more of them than at any time in the last ten years. But we are paying a larger part and per cent of our total income as taxes than at any time in the history of the nation. Never before has the cost of government taken one dollar in every four and a quarter that the people earned.

Money Needed for Work.

Business and industry need every available cent now to get back to work and to put people to work. It has a staggering load of losses to carry, caused by depression, and every penny drained away from it in taxes retards and delays its recovery, and prolongs the time before the effects of depression will be dissipated.

Federal, state and local governments are all taking a toll, amounting in all for this year to about 14 billions dollars. The national income for this year—including the profits and dividends of the rich man, the returns of the little man in business, and the salaries and wages of everyone else—is estimated by statistical agencies at 57 billion dollars. This is aratio of exactly one dollar in taxes for every four and a quarter dollars in income.

Many of the taxes being paid are of the so-called "invisible" sort, as taxes on gasoline, tobacco, cosmetics and a multitude of other things. But we are all paying taxes.

Legislators of all kinds, from those of the federal government down to township trustees, are trying to evade real taxation issues. They are making few genuine efforts to cut their public expenditures and costs, except to slash the wages and salaries of the rank and file of pay rollers.

Main Issue Evaded.

With their depleted and empty treasuries, they are inundating legislatures with demands for money, and lawmakers are grabbing at whatever they can to find it. On both sides is an evasion of getting down to brass-tacks economy and cutting the costs of government in other directions than in mere slashes in the salaries of stenographers, clerks and street sweepers.

What is happening in respect to gasoline taxes indicates pretty clearly what is going on all along the line—in tobacco and all kinds of sales taxes, higher land taxes, and income taxes levied by the states.

Motorists, who include the head of almost every household these days, are up against diversion of gasoline taxes from road building purposes in nearly every state. This legal theft—in some cases amounting to one-half of the road tax money—is the largest ever known.

Furthermore, there is every indication that if this breach of good faith is successful, the diversion which is described now as an emergency measure, will become a permanent policy, opening the gate to further diversions and encouraging new raids by hungry public agencies.

The tax for road building purposes is the present most obvious source of ready money, and it is therefore being seized and robbed. One of the main sustaining factors during the depression has been construction work, and especially highway building. It has provided employment and kept men at work when all other agencies failed. It is today one of the principal means and hopes of early recovery from the effects of depression.

Diversion Grave Issue.

Robbery of the road funds means increased idleness in this direction, deterioration of the roads, saddling greater costs on motor car operation, and eventually a prohibitory effect upon motor transportation. These raiders overlook the fact that the country largely subsisted in 1931 on its three billion dollar volume of public construction.

Naturally the railroads and street car companies enjoy this diversion. It is just a step further toward taxing the automobile out of business, or at least out of the hands of the little fellow, and putting them thoroughly and substantially into the saddle again.

The fight against diversion is not merely a fight to preserve road building and the volume of employment it represents; it is a fight to make public officials deflate the costs of government, and bring down a tax load of one day's pay in each four and a quarter days' work in come more substantial and material way than in slashing and cutting salaries and wages that represent the livelihoods of public employes.

President Green Warns Congress Not to Adjourn

Let Legislators Stay in Session and Respond to Need of People as They Met Needs of Bankers, A. F. of L. Plea.

Washington, June 29.—Congress "responded with alacrity" to the demands of bankers—let it stay in session and respond to the need of people, is the warning of President William Green.

"Congress must not, it should not, it dare not adjourn until the hopes and expectations of these suffering millions have been met in a reasonable way," President Green declared in a public statement.

"Because a national emergency exists congress must face its duties and discharge its responsibilities. The construction and unemployment relief measures now being considered by congress in a hasty and illogical way are totally inadequate to meet the minimum requirements of the critical situation which prevails. Responsible executives of city governments, leaders of organized labor, the administrators of unemployment relief funds in the cities, the welfare agencies, the churches, all are sounding a note of warning. They are advising congress of the facts. They are presenting to congress all the information obtainable and which cannot be refuted.

"Millions of idle, hungry people, who are dependent upon relief agencies, cannot be supplied with relief through the ordinary relief agencies. If congress fails in this great emergency it cannot plead ignorance of the facts, but must assume the responsibility for what will follow.

"We have reached a critical period in the history of the nation. It is fraught with most serious consequences. Patience and fortitude are being shown by those who suffer because they still hope and believe that congress will not fail them. It is for these suffering men, women and children, who have shown such wonderful self-restraint under the most deplorable conditions, that labor appeals."

URGES FEDERAL BONDS FOR PUBLIC WORKS IDLE RELIEF

West Point, N. Y.—Edward S. Rybicki, director of the free employment agency of the New York city department of welfare, in a Memorial Day address to 2,000 Polish-Americans at the Kosciusko monument here, urged a federal bond issue for public works as an outstanding solution of the unemployment problem.

He said such a program started in various parts of the country "would attract from the cities the army of the jobless and the purchasing power of the millions employed would stimulate other industries and bring back the confidence needed by finance, industry and labor."

Among federal projects he mentioned erection of buildings, development of inland waterways, reforestation and flood control. He claimed the bond issue would tend to relieve states and cities which would have been forced to abandon their new public works due to lack of funds.

POLICE CLASH WITH JOBLESS PARADE INJURES FIFTEEN

New York City.—A demonstration of the unemployed here, in which many communists participated, resulted in a melee with the police in which fifteen were injured. The parade, numbering from 3,000 to 5,000, was a quiet affair until it reached City Hall park. Its spokesmen demanded the right to interview Mayor Walker and leave their unemployment relief program with him. Police inspectors refused to let the delegation enter the city hall. Thereupon one of them broke through the police line. He was immediately arrested. Then the general melee started. According to the New York Times, "policemen charged the surging line of demonstrators, mounted patrolmen swung clubs as they cleared paths before them, fists flashed, and men and women alike were beaten, kicked and trampled." After the melee was over it was found that fifteen persons, including four policemen, had been injured.

The world wholesale price level sank further in April, with decreases reported for seventeen of twenty countries, according to a recent statement by the department of commerce. Thirteen countries listed recessions in March.

ROOSEVELT OPPOSES SLASH IN WELFARE WORK BUDGETS

Rochester, N. Y.—Gov. Franklin Roosevelt issued a warning against excessive cuts in governmental and social welfare activities in an address here before the convention of the International Society for Crippled Children.

He said that government funds spent in the rehabilitation of handicapped persons brought great returns in making them active participants in economic life instead of drains on the community.

He declared that some government activities could be curtailed, but feared that in the "mad scramble to cut expenses there is danger that some of the humanitarian work carried on by the government may suffer to such an extent that future generations will be seriously affected."

He urged that there be no reduction in government contributions to aid the crippled child and said that a certain percentage of employment to capable cripples should be guaranteed at all times.

New York Building Trade Unions End Dispute on Wage

Marble Workers, Last Union, Get Settlement, Wins $ Wage, Reduction of About Per Cent. Under Old Rate.

New York City, June 29.—Ma masons, last of the New York bu ing trade unions to win a wage agr ment, have reached agreement w the employers on the basis of a amounting to little over 10 per c The new wage is $12 a day.

Most of the unions settled o basis of 15 per cent reduction, exc the bricklayers, who won a cut only 14.20 per cent based on an a tration award.

The New York building tra unions have been idle since May 1, which time the employers posted tices of wage cuts ranging from to 35 per cent on a "take it or le it" basis. The unions desided "leave it" and as a result have all along the line.

UNION LABEL

What is the objection to union-labeled products?

There would appear to be some objection or else there would be greater general demand for them.

Why not go into this matter now? The time was never more propitious for cooperative effort to popularize union-labeled products. Unionists are usually willing enough to lend aid to efforts to create demand for the label representative of their own craft. Why neglect union-made products of other crafts? Other organized craftsmen are asked to see that your label is on what they purchase. Isn't it only fair to see that their labels are on what you buy?

The union label on products of any description is indisputable evidence the goods were made by union workers, in a union shop and under union conditions. This is the main point in their favor.

By purchasing union-made products with union-earned money unionists are aiding each other. If all union-earned money were spent only for union-made products there would be no enforced idleness among members of organized labor.

Argument is heard that union-labeled products are not easy to obtain. Why aren't they? It is idle to assert that dealers will refuse to stock union-made products if shown sufficient demand exists. Why not create that demand?

Once in a while unionists declare this or that nonunion product is better suited to their taste than union-made goods of a similar kind. Is taste a matter of principle? Isn't it a cultivated sense? Did the founders of organized labor consider taste when formulating the principles upon which the movement is predicated?

No unionist can justify his attitude of noncompliance or indifference unless and until he has exhausted all reasonable efforts to obtain for himself and his home products that bear the symbol of fair labor. There are, perhaps, times when a certain article is unobtainable, but a quest for it may arouse sufficient interest among dealers to make it easy to find the second time inquiry is made.

Labeled hats, shoes, cigarets and other goods are easily obtained in most sections simply because demand for them has been so great dealers have realized the wisdom of stocking them. The average merchant has slight regard for sentiment in business. He wants to handle goods that move. Move the first consignment for him and he will order the second at once.

A demand must first be created. And if organized labor does not create the demand for union-made products, who will?

United and consistent effort to create and maintain a demand for union-made products will lessen unemployment, increase wages and decrease working hours to the glory of the organized labor movement.

Government Conciliation Helps to Adjust Differences on Wage Scale Rates.

LOCAL 74 CALLS SPECIAL MEETING

C. C. Ferry, recording secretary of Local 74, Carpenters, announced Thursday morning that a special called meeting of that union will be held Friday night at Central Labor hall.

Mr. Ferry said it is hoped a 100 per cent attendance of the members will be on hand to make a decision which will be of vital importance to each and every one. Although the union official did not so state, it is believed the postoffice matter will receive the attention of the members of Local 74.

Arrival in the city Tuesday of H. B. Dynes, representative of the conciliation service of the United States department of labor, and subsequent conferences between interested parties, brought one step nearer final and complete agreement on wages and conditions with respect to work on the new Chattanooga postoffice, it was announced Thursday morning.

Representatives of the Ralph Sollitt & Sons company, Chattanooga Trades and Labor council and the U. S. employment service held a series of conferences on Tuesday and Wednesday, following which confidence was expressed that agreement perfectly satisfactory to all concerned would be reached before the end of the week. It was said to be the policy of the Sollitt company, general contractors for the new postoffice, to take up and thresh out all details regarding wages and conditions before actual construction is begun on any large project, in order that perfect harmony and co-operation may mark the progress of the work. President George W. Perry, of Central Body, said this policy certainly has the hearty approval of organiztd labor, and that eventual agreement which would leave no room for "sore spots" was regarded as assured.

Mr. Dynes left Wednesday evening for Knoxville, where he will endeavor to compose differences which have arisen in that city after erection of a new postoffice there.

THREATEN TO DISPENSE WITH UNION ORCHESTRAS

Baltimore.—The three Baltimore theaters using vaudeville shows and orchestras threatened to dispense with them indefinitely owing to a controversy with the Musicians' union over pay for Sunday work.

When the theaters recently opened on Sunday the theater owners agreed to pay the musicians double time for every Sunday, which amounted to $22 for each musician and $33 for each director. The musicians finally agreed to time-and-one-half pay for Sunday, but the exhibitors refused to pay more than single time and said they would give straight film shows until the musicians' union accepted the single time pay.

Veteran Carrier Leaves U.S. Service After Many Years

R. B. Lane to Be Retired Friday, July 8—Was Appointed as Regular on January 13, 1899, and Has Served Continuously.

R. B. "BOB" LANE

Friday, July 8, will witness the retirement from active service of R. B. (Bob) Lane, veteran Chattanooga mail carrier, after a continuous career which dates from Dec. 28, 1897.

One of the most popular mail carriers on the local force, Mr. Lane had covered practically the same territory since his appointment as a regular on Jan. 13, 1899, serving postoffice patrons in the vicinity of lower Market, Broad and Chestnut streets.

He was born in Memphis in 1866, and came to Chattanooga in 1881. He was always active in the welfare of the carriers, having been a delegate to one national convention and a continuous correspondent of the Postal Record. He was for a long time a delegate to Chattanooga Trades and Labor council as representative of the local branch of Carriers.

Mr. Lane was uniformly pleasant and courteous, and his retirement will be sincerely regretted by his associates at the local postoffice, as well, doubtless, as by the patrons on the route which he served so long, faithfully and well.

Labor Day Celebration Boosted By City Judge, County Court

FLEMING ASKS PUBLIC SUPPORT OF BIG PROGRAM

Pays Fine Tribute to Labor Movement.

SAYS TRADE UNIONS CARE FOR THEIR OWN

Declares Charities Are Not Asked to Support Organized Workers in Crisis.

American labor "is the outstanding power and force that is holding the government together, and bearing its breast to every emergency of the government," according to City Judge Martin A. Fleming in an interview given the Chattanooga Times this week.

Judge Fleming, whose sponsorship of the Good Samaritan inn was an outstanding feature of charity work done by public-spirited citizens last winter, appealed to the general public for support of organized labor's program for Labor Day, and expressed the hope that "the people will see the justice that is due and will give till it hurts."

"During the past winter," he said, "when we handled the transient and local needy at the Good Samaritan inn, organized labor cared for its own and we did not have to look after any of its membership." Plans of the Trades and Labor council to assist in caring for the unemployed during the coming year therefore were highly commended, and a splendid tribute was paid to the movement, national and local.

The judge's statement, which will be appreciated by working people of Chattanooga and vicinity, follows:

The Central Labor Body in Chattanooga is planning a holiday of sports and recreation at Warner park on Labor Day, and there are many reasons, and urgent ones, for the support of the venture by the public. I am asking the people generally to "give 'til it hurts." The trades and labor council, handling as it does the organized groups of labor people, are preparing wisely now to help keep the wolf from the door of women and children in this city during the coming fall and winter. Every other agency in this community ought to actively emulate this wise and patriotic effort.

During the past winter when we handled the transient and local needy at the Good Samaritan inn organized labor cared for its own and our organization did not have to look after any of its membership. Now many of these members are out of work or are working only part time and they will not be in shape without help to carry on this fall and winter.

I would like to state my observations. America can never repay the debt it owes to organized labor when the country emerges from the present depression. American labor has taken it on the neck and on the chin and is still taking it and is still suffering, but it is not grumbling, but is trusting in a God on high and in a government that is now trembling. Labor hopes and is assisting to maintain this government by patriotic and Christian forbearance. The American people owe an everlasting obligation to organized labor. It is the outstanding power and force that is holding the government together and bearing its breast to every emergency of the government.

I ask every citizen to give what is in his power to help these men to take care of and protect the needy during the coming winter and their families and keep them from want. The honest Christian laboring men form an army that offers this country the greatest protection it could have. I hope the people will see the justice that is due and that they will "give 'til it hurts."

PAINTERS NAME NEW OFFICERS

A. L. Surrett Heads Local—Brighter Outlook for the Future Seen by Members.

Local 226, Painters, at the regular weekly meeting last Friday night named a complete set of officers, some changes being noted in the list supplied The Labor World, while some of the veterans are among those re-elected for the coming year. A. L. Surrett is the new president, succeeding W. A. (Zeke) Witt, and the following "assistants" were named to work with him:

Vice-President—Horton Morrison.
Financial Secretary—J. A. Farmer.
Treasurer—J. G. Schrock.
Recording Secretary—C. H. Thurston.
Conductor—A. T. Jones.
Warden—H. M. Ottman.
Trustees—Charles Milford, Roy Bowen and F. S. Thurston.

Delegates to Chattanooga Trades and Labor Council—J. G. Schrock, W. D. Canada, A. L. Surrett, W. A. Witt, Lon Camp, Roy Bowen, M. H. Ortwein, J. G. Burkes.

The new officers of Local 226 begin their terms with prospects brighter than in many moons, a member of the board told The Labor World this week. Even now, he said, the local is in better condition both numerically and financially than at any time within the past two years, and while employment is by no means steady or general, an increasing number of actual days' work is being secured by the membership.

Stage Employes Name Officers

Members of Local 140, Stage Employes, apparently are well pleased with their official family, The Labor World being informed this week that all last year's officers were retained at the annual election held Sunday morning.

The list, as supplied The Labor World Thursday, follows:

President—Emmett Lockhart.
Vice-President—John Carpenter.
Recording Secretary—Karl Hawk.
Financial Secretary—Eb Carpenter.
Business Agent—Carter Gillespie.
Sergeant-at-Arms—Fred Gillespie.

It was announced that delegates to Chattanooga Trades and Labor council will be named by President Lockhart.

RAILWAY WORKERS COERCED TO INCREASE PASSENGERS

London, Eng.—The power of the employers to coerce workers into propaganda work for the employers' interests was shown by the campaign initiated by the organized railway executives of Great Britain to secure increased passenger transportation at the expense of motor coaches.

"Every servant of the railways must become a salesman for railways," said Mr. Ashton Davies, passenger manager of the L. M. S. railway. "He must think railways, talk railways, and even dream railways. Even an ordinary conversation must be brought round to the subject of railways."

THE MANUFACTURERS SEEK TO ABOLISH HOLIDAYS PLAN

Northampton, Eng.—British boot and shoe manufacturers declared they would propose the abolition of the holidays plan at the coming general conference of the National Union of Boot and Shoe Operatives.

For ten years past the holiday fund has been in general practice. Employers and employes make weekly contributions of like amount and the operatives receive certain sums immediately before the Easter, Whitsuntide, August and Christmas holidays.

Originally this was a voluntary agreement, but in 1922 was made a part of the national agreement.

Union officials said they regarded the abolition of the scheme as unthinkable.

COURT CALLS FOR OBSERVANCE OF LABOR DAY

Schools, Offices to Be Closed September 5.

RESOLUTION MAKES HOLIDAY OFFICIAL

First Formal Recognition by County Squires Declares Move Permanent.

For the first time in many years, Hamilton county will officially recognize Labor Day this year, and all county schools and various offices will be closed for the entire day.

A resolution providing for the above, and calling upon all citizens to fittingly observe the day set aside in honor of America's workers, was passed by the county court in quarterly session Monday. An amendment to the resolution, which was introduced by 'Squires Ernest Dennis and Wilkes Thrasher, and unanimously passed on a roll call vote, recognizes Labor Day as a permanent holiday.

Attention is called to the fact that local labor organizations are planning a great celebration for Labor Day, and the resolution states that an opportunity should be afforded citizens of all groups to "recognize the worth of labor to our community, and participate with the workers in their public celebration of that day."

The resolution follows, excepting the amendment, which was added following the introduction originally:

A resolution proclaiming Monday, September 5, 1932, a legal holiday, and calling for its general observance as such in Hamilton county.

Whereas, on June 28, 1894, President Grover Cleveland signed a bill passed by both houses of congress proclaiming the first Monday in September as Labor Day, as follows:

"A bill making labor day a legal holiday:

"Be it enacted, by the senate and house of representatives of the United States of America, in congress assembled, that the first Monday in September in each year, being the day celebrated and known as labor's holiday, is hereby made a legal public holiday, in the same manner as Christmas, the 30th day of May, and the 4th day of July are now by law public holidays;" and

Whereas, through the efforts of labor practically every state in the union has proclaimed the first Monday in September as Labor Day; and,

Whereas, the great American labor movement, in war and in peace, has demonstrated the sound patriotism and Americanism of its rank and file, and has in foreign and domestic crises acted as a bulwark against forces which had for their purpose the destruction of our government and its institutions; and,

Whereas, local labor is planning to fittingly celebrate this holiday with a program of sports and entertainment; therefore be it

Resolved, that the Hamilton county court, in quarterly session assembled this fourth day of July, 1932, joins with our national and state governments in thus honoring those who toil, proclaims Monday, September 5, 1932, a legal holiday, and calls for its general observance by the closing of public offices, schools, etc., that our citizens of all groups may recognize the worth of labor to our community, and may participate with the workers in their public celebration of that day.

Dispatches from Wheeling, W. Va., report that the Yorkville tin plant of the Wheeling Steel corporation is now working at capacity, employing nearly 2,000 men, for the first time in many months.

First Duty Now Is Organization, Weber Declares

To Keep Up Union and Activities Paramount Tasks Before Labor in Present Crisis, Re-elected Musicians' Head Says.

JOSEPH N. WEBER

Los Angeles, July 6.—One of the first duties of labor organizations in the present economic crisis is to remain organized and bend all efforts against the weakening of their activities, no matter how unfavorable the odds nor how difficult the task, President Joseph N. Weber of the American Federation of Musicians, told the thirty-seventh annual convention of the organization here. President Weber was re-elected and given an ovation.

"No matter how impatient and idealistic we may be in the defense of the principles of organized labor, and no matter how right we may be in pointing out to he wage workers the economic justice to which they are entitled, now if ever," President Weber said, "it is our duty, even though our heads are in the clouds, to remain with our feet on terra firma—to treat realities as they exist and not apply philosophical speculations to same, but to apply beneficial constructiveness to conditions as we find them, and not as we would have them. An idealist should not ignore realities. This appears to me the only sane position that the leaders of our movement, local or national, should assume.

"It is obvious that when labor is in demand, it is easier for organized labor to better the conditions of its members than in times of unemployment. A labor union which at the present time, to a considerable degree, maintains an undiminished standard of wages for its members who are working and can indeed boast of a successful defense of the principles for which it contends, has rendered its members a service, the future value of which cannot be overestimated. Such a union will be in a position eventually to conform to favorable conditions in a manner benefiting its members to the same degree that its conforming to unfavorable conditions permitted it to mitigate the damage the latter caused the material standards of its members."

In closing a review of conditions affecting musicians, President Weber said that the depression, with its resulting misery, was caused by overproduction, underconsumption, unemployment, uncontrolled distribution, uncontrolled use of the money of the people by financial interests, and, as the result of it all, the decrease in the purchasing power of the masses.

"It is a crying shame," he declared, "that we should experience unmerciful suffering in a country that produces more than the people need for decent subsistence. However, we have a right to hope that the conscience of the country has been awakened and that the government, through proper legislation, will solve the problem of preventing its recurrence, as failing to do this, it will place itself in the position of a Nero fiddling while Rome burned."

Booth Barber Shop Moves to Arcade

Booth's barber shop, which has been located at 18 West Eighth street, has removed to No. 14 Arcade, and a modern, sanitary shop is among the first business institutions to locate in the new Arcade. Besides Mr. Booth, the personnel of the shop includes W. A. "Woodrow" Wilson, Joe Burton and F. H. Horton, all, of course, members of Local 415.

COMMITTEE TO PROBE RECORDS OF CANDIDATES

Labor Will Seek Views of All Aspirants.

TO COMPILE DATA FOR USE OF FRIENDS

Information Secured Will Be Submitted for Consideration of Voters.

Records of candidates for political office, if any, and the views of various aspirants on matters affecting the public welfare, with particular reference to the masses, will be thoroughly gone into by a nonpartisan political committee named this week by President George W. Perry, of Chattanooga Trades and Labor council, under authority of a resolution adopted at last regular meeting of that body.

The committee, Mr. Perry said, will be expected to delve deeply into the records of any who have formerly held office, and will probably submit questionnaires to those who are offering for positions for the first time. When the information has been received and compiled, he said, report will be made to Central Body, and the data thus gained will be passed on by various means to all members of organized labor and their friends.

Work of the committee will be started immediately, according to plans, and friends of organized labor will be given the information in ample time to plan according to the dictates of their consciences in view of the facts submitted.

The duties of the committee will cover a wide field, including candidates for national, state and local offices. It is presumed, however, that action of the nonpartisan political committee of the Tennessee Federation of Labor and the Railroad Brotherhoods with respect to the governor's race will be approved, and that committee's indorsement of the candidacy of Hon. Hill McAlister in the democratic primary will be made the official action of local bodies.

The committee named by President Perry is as follows:

Tom F. Hall, Railroad Machinists, chairman; Felix Hamil, Moving Picture Machine Operators; W. A. Witt, Painters; Paul J. Aymon, Soft Drink Workers; W. L. Wergin, Contract Machinists; F. S. Thurston, Painters, and R. M. Cooke, Typographical.

Appointment of a committee to investigate complaints that nonresidents are being employed by both city and county departments while local citizens are begging for employment was also announced by President Perry, as follows: Z. B. Bender, Carpenters; M. H. Ortwein, Painters, and A. C. Kamin, Moving Picture operators.

"DENVER PLAN" OF LABEL DRIVE WITHOUT BOYCOTT

Denver, Colo.—The Denver Typographical union does not use the boycott and its "unfair list" in promoting the use of union label printing, according to G. A. LaVelle, president of the union, who described what he calls the "Denver plan" of extending the label.

"No attack is made on the employer who is outside the union," Mr. LaVelle said. "In fact, under the plan he is completely ignored, the object always being to put printing in union offices.

"The chief point stressed is: the union man and woman are disposed to give friendly consideration to the concern which shows its friendliness to them. The union label on printed matter indicates this, and its unobtrusive use, which would be passed without attention by those outside the labor movement, is taken as a friendly invitation by those who favor the principle of trade unionism."

A large increase in the number of destitute women in New York City is reported by the Salvation Army.

Labor and the Courts

By GEORGE F. SAMUELS

Written for The Labor World

Chapter I

[illegible] exasperated [illegible] part of the [illegible] taking a [illegible]
—Emerson

TODAY the wage-earner is disturbed by the unhappy thought that the courts of this country, under pressure from [illegible] interests, have established as their guiding principle that justice is founded upon property rights. In making property sovereign the courts have merely followed the lead of "big business," which scoffs at the suggestion of a humane estimate of men and their needs in a so-called democratic state, and in making property sovereign our courts have done their full share in relegating the common people to a position where they are utterly without consequence or importance in the government that are taxed to support. This has been done without incurring the wage-earner's wrath by making his interests useless to him through the simple expediency of ignoring him in the economic life of the nation and in the case of the wage-earner and the courts it has been accomplished through consistently adverse decisions and judicial interpretations of laws.

Labor is clear and specific in its charge that not only do most laws favor its employers but that the courts are against it in minor as well as major issues before the law. The laboring man is not in doubt in the least that the courts are openly siding with wealth for year after year he sees legislative enactments favorable to him or designed to protect him fought successfully by the vested interests. To his amazement he sees public service corporations doing much as they please and without a sign of fear that attorneys-general and other guardians of the people's interests will [illegible] into court.

He sees manufacturers openly seeking to get [illegible] covering [illegible] of [illegible], running [illegible], etc., and [illegible] stopped through [illegible] of manufacturers' [illegible] agents he sees it attacked as [illegible] unconstitutional. If a law [illegible] the ordeal of the [illegible] and corrupt legislatures [illegible] constitutional [illegible] a case [illegible] decision of one of these laws is at once he sees the business men of the corporation in effect commend it for the evasion through the court's decision in favor of the defendant.

Everywhere the wage-earner [illegible] practically every law [illegible] him, though properly [illegible] and enforced, and, furthermore, [illegible] if a violator of [illegible] were prosecuted [illegible] be small [illegible] sion against [illegible]

LABOR QUERIES

Q.—[illegible] bill [illegible] that [illegible] labor [illegible] than political life.

Q.—Is the American Federation of Labor officially on record in favor of repeal of the eighteenth amendment?

A.—Yes, but it has urged modification as an immediate measure. President Green reiterated this before the democratic convention in Chicago.

Q.—Do all unions have union labels?

A.—No, but practically all whose members are in manufacturing trades have them and they are organized into the Union Label Trades Department of the A. F. of L., of which John J. Manning is secretary-treasurer, with offices in the A. F. of L. building.

Job Insecurity and Low Wages

During the present business depression most college and university professors have maintained silence from the point of view of criticizing our economic order under which employers have thrown over 10,000,000 workers into the unemployed army and drastically reduced the wages of millions more kept at work.

It is therefore refreshing to find Prof. Arthur E. Wood, of the University of Michigan, pulling away the smoke screen of the apologists and blurting out the truth that "insecurity of the job and low wages are a normal aspect of our industrial system."

He said that unemployment so greatly increased during the depression is seriously injuring home security, with jobless workers compelled to ask charity organizations to care for their families.

Prof. Wood added that "one service of the present depression will be to throw the high light of criticism upon an industrial order that makes such ravages into the family life of the people."

Criticism amounts to nothing unless it results in the application of tangible remedies to cure things criticized.

Labor criticizes both normal and abnormal unemployment and low wages. Labor also presents remedies for these evils.

To remedy unemployment, labor demands that the length of the work week and work day shall be decreased to whatever extent necessary to provide jobs for all the jobless.

To remedy low wages, labor demands that minimum wages shall be high enough to enable the people to purchase the output of all the workers in all our industries.

The autocrats who own and control industry, if they had the will to do it, could make labor's job and wage policies effective in short order. So far they have quite generally refused to do so.

Labor refuses to permit charity standards of existence to be set up permanently in the United States for millions of the unemployed.

Labor also refuses to permit the living standards of those who are employed to be permanently reduced by part-time work and low pay.

The shorter work week and work day and higher wages must come. It is dangerous to put them off too long. The unemployed will not consent to live forever on the garbage can standards of public and private charity. The employers should not wait until the degradation of millions of our workers leads them to the borderland of revolt.

Labor's Work Day and Work Week

Certain so-called "progressives" and "radical" critics of organized labor's shorter hours policy declare that the five-day week would not provide work for all of the jobless.

This criticism indicates either a misunderstanding or a willful misstatement of labor's policy.

Labor proclaims the right of every able-bodied person in the United States to a job.

Labor demands that to secure this right the length of the work week and work day must be decreased to whatever extent may be necessary to accomplish this purpose.

Labor desires to see the five-day week universally applied with the hours per day lowered to whatever extent may be required to absorb all the unemployed.

It may be necessary to reduce the length of the work per day to six hours, five hours, or even four hours.

Work for all is labor's principle. The days of labor per week and the hours of labor per day must be adjusted to make this principle a living reality.

"Capable" Business Leaders

Thomas J. Watson, president of the International Business Machines corporation, declares that "the business of the country, our railroads, our industrial institutions and our financial institutions, are in capable hands."

The "capable" hands referred to by Mr. Watson are the officials who manage our business concerns.

Under our industrial system, work opportunities are owned as a private monopoly by the men who own our business establishments.

The workers can live only by selling their ability to produce wealth and perform service to the work opportunity owners.

To provide these work opportunities is the major moral function of business. During the last two and one-half years those who own and control business have refused to provide these work opportunities for over ten million workers, and have reduced them and their families, numbering over thirty million persons, to the near starvation living standards imposed by private and public charity.

With this record of stupendous managerial incapacity, striking at the very life of our institutions, even the president of the International Business Machines corporation must be deaf, dumb, and blind to refer to our business leaders as "capable." Modern industrial history does not contain a more striking illustration of managerial executive bankruptcy.

Unemployment Insurance

Spencer Miller, Jr., secretary of the Workers' Education Bureau of America, told the University of Michigan Institute of Labor that prior to the depression from 1,200,000 to 2,000,000 workers were "normally" unemployed in the United States. He also predicted that after the depression ends—if it ever does—around 3,000,000 will be "normally" and permanently unemployed unless the hours of labor are drastically shortened.

By "normally" unemployed Mr. Miller undoubtedly meant the number of jobless under conditions which obtain when those who own and control our industrial, commercial, and financial institutions conduct their businesses "as usual" with maximum profits for the owners and scant regard for the interests of labor.

The figures cited by Mr. Miller were interpreted in some quarters to imply the necessity for unemployment insurance. They imply nothing of the sort.

Unemployment, whether "normal" or "abnormal" is caused by the refusal of employers to adjust the number of work hours per week in accordance with the increased output of labor under machine production. As the increased output per worker enables fewer workers to produce a certain unit of commodities, reason dictates that the working hours for all the workers should be reduced so as to keep them all earning wages. But employers apply the unreasonable policy of discharging some workers and making the smaller number work as many hours per week as did the larger number. This employer policy is the cause of unemployment.

Unemployment insurance advocates say the jobless workers, created by the will of the employer, shall be supported on starvation rations during their idleness. This scheme perpetuates unemployment. It sets up two groups of workers with two living standards. One group with relatively steady employment will be able to buy a good living for themselves and their families. The other group, the insured jobless, will be compelled to live on the disgustingly low funds.

Labor abhors unemployment insurance. Labor abhors any institution that will perpetuate unemployment.

Labor demands that unemployment shall be prevented, not perpetuated.

Unemployment can be prevented by making the work week and work day short enough to put all the ten millions of jobless to work and keep them short enough so that all the workers shall be employed in the future.

Shortening the work week and work day to end unemployment is thoroughly reasonable.

Unemployment insurance to perpetuate unemployment is thoroughly unreasonable.

Raising Wages to Boost Business

FROM THE LITERARY DIGEST

In a day of salary cuts and wage-reductions, "when the average citizen has tied a double knot in his purse-strings because of fear of a reduction in income," in such days the news of an actual increase in wages comes pretty near being sensational.

The complete story is told, with interpretative editorial comment, by the Southern Automotive Journal of Atlanta. It is an Atlanta story.

There was Mr. J. W. Lyerly's Ansley garage. Work was just about at a standstill this spring, "the mechanics were twiddling their thumbs, waiting for service jobs." They all thought that the next step would be a wage-reduction, and so Mr. Lyerly called his force together one day and announced—a wage increase.

The first thing noticed was the effect on the working force:

> The wage increase was put into effect about the middle of March. One month later the business of the Ansley garage had doubled. About half the jobs have been the result of the outside sales efforts of the employes.
> The foreman, the eight mechanics and the porter all are busy as though this were the boom period of 1929 instead of the generally unsatisfactory year of 1932. There have been no reductions in the force. In fact, it has been necessary to add men for part-time employment during the last few weeks.

Then Mr. Lyerly decided he ought to tell the world. Not to get publicity, but to lead other employers to take similar action:

> For he is firmly convinced that a general wage increase would be the antidote to deflation, that it would be the certain remedy for depression, that it would stimulate new courage and initiative which would quickly bring a return of nation-wide prosperity.

So a modest little advertisement appeared in one of the local newspapers "stating that the Ansley garage had found the way to end depression—that a wage increase had been put into effect, and that this already had resulted in a large increase in business."

The effect was amazing, we read. People began to call upon or write to Mr. Lyerly, casting doubt upon his sanity, or applauding his courage.

Aside from the publicity value of this plan, the important question is this, we read in the Southern Automotive Journal, "Are higher wages of direct benefit to the employer?" Mr. Lyerly is reported as insisting that they certainly are:

> He says that during the last few weeks in which his shop has had so much more work to handle, his men have insisted on working overtime, without extra compensation. Aside from a night man, the closing hour is 5:30 p.m. But on many occasions the men have insisted on working until 7 or 8 o'clock, and it has been necessary to demand that they "call it a day."
> The other day a luxurious car with a South Carolina license tag stopped in front of the shop. "Is this the Ansley garage?" the driver inquired. On being answered in the affirmative, he said: "Well, there's considerable work I must have done on this car, and I wanted it to go to that garage man who had the nerve to boost the wages of his men."

The Atlanta editor comes to the conclusion that Mr. Lyerly's plan has certainly been most effective in his own business:

> Whether it would prove equally effective in another business might depend on whether the plan were inaugurated merely as a mercenary move or as a real public-spirited effort to help remedy the trouble which now afflicts the nation.
> We feel, too, that Mr. Lyerly is correct in his belief that a nation-wide movement toward wage increases would do more than anything else to restore that spirit of optimism and confidence which is the background of national prosperity.

In connection with the Atlanta story, it is interesting to find in the Albany (N. Y.) Evening News a statement from a manufacturer of envelopes, in Cohoes, who has gone through the depression without reducing wages, and has kept busy by active sales effort. Says this manufacturer, Mr. Robert M. Lackey:

> I believe that reducing wages, wholesale discharge of employees, and the working of others on short time absolutely destroys the purchasing power of the people, and is as ridiculous as an attempt to fill a barrel by opening the bung-hole.

SEZ WHICH

By H. F. B.

Editor Labor World:

You know, I am nothing if not scientific. And I have been thinking deeply of late of certain very positive effects this depression seems bound to produce, judging by the certain effect it has already had upon myself, an average man, if there ever was one (outside of being married!). You know, I told you and your beloved readers once before I was an average man—and proved it! And I can reasonably assume that any effect this depression has upon me is bound to be common among others.

This peculiar effect I speak of is caused by the rigid economy I am forced to practice in eating, by circumstances over which I have no control, and I find that, if this depression lasts much longer, I will have trained my stomach to such an extent that I may be able to do without eating entirely. Already I have succeeded in shrinking to such an extent that a small veal chop, two rolls and a cup of coffee for breakfast forced me to quickly secure a gross of a certain digestant to secure relief from the heavy overload.

My doctor tells me that it will be much better for me physically, not to mention financially, but what is worrying me is what sort of effect is this going to have on the world's food markets and the poor farmers? If, as President William Green says, there are ten or eleven million people out of work, and they average two dependents each, and all that thirty million are training down on short rations as I am forced to do and this depression keeps on till we are all able to stop eating entirely, as I'm sure I will, isn't this going to play havoc with the food markets, for at least the "Plebian grub" class of groceries?

It looks like a very serious question that should be studied by some of our renowned economists and determine the real danger to our country. Then again, quite a number of us are very liable to die in this process, you know. It's worth serious thought on the part of us all!

The only bright spot I see in the whole matter is that those who do survive will be pretty doggoned tough and hardy! You couldn't kill 'em with an axe. Hoping you may escape,

H. F. B.

P. S. I wish to acknowledge the nice compliment paid to me in a recent issue by W. B. Dyche, who was pinch-hitting for Crosby in the "Electrical Etchings." I feel sure Mr. Dyche is a very clever and discriminating gentleman and a fine critic. I would like to meet him personally, and if I wasn't so busy on my duties as a high private in the ranks of the army of the unemployed I would deem it a great honor to have him take dinner with me! He is a man and a scholar and a gentleman!

Strict and impartial enforcement of the antitrust laws to prevent monop- oly and unfair trade practices, and revision thereof for the better pro- tection of labor and the small packer and distributor.

epublican Party Convention Declarations on Labor Matters

he platform adopted by the na- l convention of the republican contains the following planks bjects of interest to the Ameri- labor movement:

Unemployment Relief.

to American traditions and ples of government the admin- tion has regarded the relief prob- as one of state and local respon- ity. The work of local agencies, lic and private, have been co-or- ted and enlarged on a nation- scale under the leadership of the sident.

dden and unforeseen emergencies as the drought have been met the Red Cross and the govern- t. The United States public th service has been of inestimable ef to stricken areas.

here has been magnificent re- se and action to relieve distress citizens, organizations and agen- public and private, throughout country.

provide against the possible ure of local and state agencies, president has urged the congress erate an emergency relief fund be loaned temporarily to any state showing of actual need and tem- ry failure of its financial re- ces.

he republican party indorses this ed and policy and is opposed to federal government entering di- into the field of private char- nd direct relief to the individual. ognizing that real relief to un- loyment must come through a re- l of industrial activity and agri- re to the promotion of which our effort must be directed, our n state and nation undertakes all in its power that is hu- possible to see that distress is relieved in accordance with erican principles and traditions.

Wages.

believe in the principle of high es.

Hours of Labor.

favor the principle of the ur work week and shorter work with its application to govern- t as well as to private employ- , as rapidly and as constructively nditions will warrant.

Home Building.

favor legislation designed to ulate, encourage and assist in e building.

Immigration.

he restriction of immigration is a erican policy. Our party formu- ed and enacted into law the quota em which for the first time has e possible an adequate control of gn immigration. Rigid examina- of applicants in foreign coun- has prevented the coming of nals and other undesirable es, while other provisions of the have enabled the president to end immigration of foreign wage- ers, who otherwise, directly or ectly, would have increased un- loyment among native-born and ly resident foreign-born wage- ers in this country. As a result, igration is now less than at any during the past 100 years.

favor the continuance and enforcement of our present laws this subject.

Department of Labor.

commend the constructive work the United States department of or.

Collective Bargaining.

llective bargaining by responsi- representatives of employers and oyes of their own choice without interference of any one is rec- ized and approved.

Labor Legislation.

gislation such as laws prohibit- alien contract labor, peonage la- and the "shanghaiing" of sailors, eight-hour labor law on govern- contracts and in government loyment; provision for railroad safety devices, of methods of conciliation, mediation and arbitration in industrial labor disputes, including the adjustment of railroad disputes, the providing of compensation for injury to government employes (the forerunner of federal workers' compensation acts), and other laws to aid and protect labor are of republican origin, and have had and will continue to have the unswerving support of the party.

U. S. Employment Service.

We commend the constructive work of the United States employment service in the department of labor. This service was enlarged and its activities extended through an appropriation made possible by the president with the co-operation of the congress. It has done high service for the unemployed in the ranks of civil life and in the ranks of former soldiers of the World war.

Freedom of Speech.

Freedom of speech, press and assemblage are fundamental principles upon which our form of government rests. These vital principles should be preserved and protected.

Child Welfare.

The children of our nation, our future citizens, have had the most solicitous thought of our president. Child welfare and protection has been a major effort of this administration. The organization of the White House conference on child health and protection is regarded as one of the outstanding accomplishments of this administration.

Welfare work in all its phases has had the support of the president and aid of the administration. The work of organized agencies, local, state and federal, has been advanced and an increased impetus given by that recognition and help. We approve and pledge a continuation of that policy.

Puerto Rico.

Puerto Rico, being a part of the United States and its inhabitants American citizens, we believe that they are entitled to a good-faith recognition of the spirit and purpose of their organic act. We, therefore, favor the inclusion of the island in all legislative and administrative measures enacted or adopted by congress or otherwise for the economic benefit of their fellow citizens of the mainland.

LEWIS EXPLAINS BILL TO GUARANTEE EMPLOYMENT

Washington.—Representative David J. Lewis, of Maryland, urged favorable action on his bill to guarantee equal employment for all workers through a system of national trade associations at a hearing before the house committee on ways and means.

The bill declares that "every citizen possesses a right to work and is entitled to the protection of the laws in maintaining such right and in demanding an equal share of the employment available in the trade."

Representative Lewis said his measure would distribute equal shares of employment to every member of the various trade associations formed under the supervision of the federal trade commission, and would provide life and disability insurance, workmen's accident compensation, workmen's pension and unemployment insurance.

CHURCH FOR ARMS CUT.

Highest officials of nearly a score of national church bodies joined in a message to President Hoover, expressing "most hearty approval" of his "courageous proposal" for the reduction of armaments. The church leaders described the proposal as "highly prophetic" and expressed the judgment that the president's "constructive leadership" will be enthusiastically welcomed by the members of all the churches.

The Passing Show

Note and Comment on Things Doing in the March of Events

The air is filled with proposals to mitigate the effects of depression. Come now the railroad unions proposing a reconstruction finance corporation to make loans to wage-earners to be used for necessities.

It is true and more than true that the government has poured out money and credit to the bankers.

The government likewise has helped the railroads which at long last were faced with a day of reckoning when paper had to be met and with no chance to meet it with new issues, as of old.

It is fair to ask that something be done for the plain man who has no mill for the issuance of bonds or stocks—who has not even a job.

But the really adequate thing to do for the common man, the plain man, or whatever else people have to call a working man, is to give him work.

To give him a loan of up to $500 as the railroad unions propose, would get many a family out of desperation and it would turn loose a flood of purchasing power.

As an immediate relief measure it would have great effect.

But meanwhile unless we drive for permanent measures we shall be simultaneously on the road to a repetition of disaster.

Money loaned, money raised for construction, money put into whatever emergency project, has to be repaid, even as the war debts have to be paid, and even as they plague, so probably will these new obligations later plague us for repayment.

But when desperation rides it isn't fussy about the horse.

Other funds exhausted, St. Louis aldermen will consider raising $5,000,000 to $10,000,000 for unemployed relief by bond issue.

Columbia university proposes to construct a $7,000,000 30-story college building on the campus in New York.

Princely Salary Roster of Roads Shown by Couzens

Twenty-two High Officials on Four Lines Draw Total of $1,294,500 — Southern Pacific Pays $1,191,930 to Thirty-five.

Washington, July 7.—Twenty-two top officials on only four class 1 railroads are paid an aggregate annual salary roll of $1,294,500.

There are several individual salaries of $135,000 per year.

Thirty-five Southern Pacific officials whose individual salaries are $10,000 or more draw a total of $1,191,930.

Senator Couzens, Michigan, dug these figures from interstate commerce records and has been spilling them all over the place in a damaging bombardment. It is his belief that they ought to bear some relation to loans applied for by railroads from the Reconstruction Finance corporation.

Borrows, But Pays Well.

Couzens said that despite the fact that the St. Louis & San Francisco system is so hard up it had to borrow $5,000,000 from the Reconstruction Finance corporation, its president gets $63,000 a year and its board chairman $36,000.

Here are Couzens' figures on three roads:

Pennsylvania Road — President, $135,000; vice-president, $58,500; five vice-presidents of divisions, each $31,500; four other vice-presidents, $36,000, $45,000, $45,000 and $54,000, and others down to $10,000.

Southern Pacific—Executive committee chairman, $135,000; president, $90,000; executive vice-president, $36,000; executive committee vice-chairman, $76,500; other executives to a total of thirty-five from $31,000 down to $10,000.

Baltimore & Ohio—Forty-two officers getting $10,000 or more each; president, $120,000; senior vice-president, $76,500; another vice-president, $54,000, another at $45,000.

Figures Go to Senate.

The total salary roll will be laid before the senate soon. Couzens got his information to help him in getting an appropriation to enable the interstate commerce commission to carry on its work.

Cut Work-Week to Use Full Power Of American Labor, Says Howard

By CHARLES P. HOWARD
President, International Typographical Union.

Prosperity for all classes demands that the work-day and work-week shall be restricted to an extent that full use of our man-power within the limits established will not produce more than that which can be purchased and consumed.

The only element which has anything to lose from a properly balanced economic and industrial system are those who have been taking enormous profits at the expense of all other elements of the nation.

Wage cutting is no solution for the present problem. No matter how cheaply articles can be produced unemployed men and women cannot buy because they have nothing with which to purchase. So long as these unemployed millions cannot buy there can be no resumption of business and no prosperity.

Domestic demand cannot be artificially increased by wage reductions based upon the theory that lower production costs will increase the volume of business. Each cut in wages reduces the purchasing power of the nation by just as much as the aggregate of such reductions. What we need is to increase the ability of the workers to buy and consume rather than further restriction.

It is recognized as an inescapable economic law that wages in any industry must be within the ability to pay. But lower wages to maintain unjustified profits or meet financial burdens which result from unnecessary expansion and speculative excesses will be strenuously opposed.

Economy Burden Put on Workers In Mongrel Act

Payless Furloughs But One of Many Ways Federal Employes Will Help Save $150,000,000—Overtime Work Must Be Gift.

Washington, July 7.—Though it was called "a bill with which nobody is satisfied" and with the chance of a subsequent concurrent resolution to eliminate the provision barring employment of married women whose husbands work, the so-called economy bill as passed by the house was approved this week by the senate, 35 to 11, and went to the White House to become law.

With less than half of the senate present, eleven senators opposed adoption of the measure. They were: Republicans—Blaine, Dale, Davis, La Follette, Reed and Schall; democrats—Bulow, Caraway, Copeland, Lewis and Pittman.

Senator La Follette, after branding the measure "a humiliating surrender by the senate," said he realized further opposition would be futile, though he said he would be glad to assume responsibility for its defeat if that could be accomplished.

Called "Mongrel" Act.

The measure is designed to save $150,000,000 in the coming fiscal year. It enforces a 30-day furlough without pay upon government employes everywhere, except those earning less than $1,000 a year and with certain other exceptions, including enlisted personnel of the army, navy and marine corps. The furlough plan is equivalent to a salary cut of 8.3 per cent. The furlough plan was advocated by the American Federation of Labor as the alternative to straight salary reduction, but, as one spokesman put it, "We did not approve this mongrel measure."

Automatic pay increases and promotions within grades will cease.

No Overtime Pay.

Pay for overtime and Sundays and holidays will cease. Workers now getting a 10 per cent differential for night work will get five.

No federal service vacancies will be filled without written consent of the president.

Annual leave with pay will be reduced to fifteen days, but not during this year. This year there is no leave with pay.

Retirement pay will be based on the annual rate before reductions and deductions will be made accordingly.

Retired military officers holding civilian positions will not be allowed to draw more than $3,000 a year, including pensions, though they have served their entire career with the stipulation that upon retirement a definite rate would be paid after retirement.

Will Seek Modification.

There is every reason to believe that upon convening the new congress labor will inaugurate a campaign to modify the measure in many of its important provisions. But for at least six months the draft as it stands will be the law.

Unless there is modification by resolution, employed couples must choose which will continue to work for the government and in many cases must choose which will work at all. Department heads who are able to save by economies will not be allowed to use their savings to maintain employment, but must turn the money into the treasury. Department heads also must enforce as many workless days as possible, in addition to the mandatory 30-day furlough without pay.

A political leader is a forward-looking individual who gets ahead of the crowd after he finds which way it's going.

Injunction Against Labor Union Denied

Judge Sullivan Upholds Wisconsin Anti-Injunction Law in Picketing Case — Persuading Persons to Aid Union Legal.

Milwaukee, Wis.—Circuit Judge Daniel W. Sullivan denied the petition of the Tugenberg Baking company for an injunction to restrain Bakers' Union Local No. 752 from picketing the concern's place of business and soliciting patrons to stop buying the company's products.

First Case Heard.

The case was the first one heard under the new Wisconsin labor code passed by the legislature of 1931, which permits the taking of oral testimony before a temporary injunction can be granted in connection with labor disputes.

The controversy arose when the company refused to deal with the union relative to wages. Picketing began shortly after two of the employes quit and joined the union.

Picketing Defended.

Attorney Joseph A. Padway, counsel for the Wisconsin State Federation of Labor, representing the union, claimed a strike was in force at the plant and defended the picketing under the labor code. The baking company contended there was no strike, and that their employes were willing to work for low wages.

"The purpose of the law," Padway told Judge Sullivan, "is to give the unions more freedom in fighting their economic battles. It endeavors to give to union employes the same privilege the capitalist employer has by virtue of his monew power. It was set up to equalize the struggle."

Constitutionality Affirmed.

Judge Sullivan gave judicial approval to the new code, and held that all provisions in applying it to the Tugenberg case were constitutional. He said that under the law the pickets had the right to attempt to persuade persons to buy union-made bread, provided no force or intimidation was used.

"We are pleased at the result of the first trial of the new Wisconsin labor code," said J. J. Handley, secretary-treasurer of the Wisconsin State Federation of Labor. "We didn't expect anything else, because the matter had been discussed and considered by so many eminent lawyers that we were satisfied the law was constitutional."

Blow to Antiunion Employers.

The decision of Judge Sullivan was a blow to the Milwaukee Employers' council and affiliated groups who fought bitterly against enactment of the labor code. The organization attacked it in the state legislature as unconstitutional and vicious.

NEW JERSEY LESISLATURE BANS YELLOW DOG CONTRACT

Trenton, N. J.—The New Jersey senate adopted the "yellow dog" contract bill, already passed by the house.

The bill voids agreements between employers and employes in which the latter stipulate that they will not join labor unions, or if they are already members that they will withdraw.

The bill was introduced by Assemblyman Edward D. Ballentine, Jr., who is a member of Newark Typographical union.

Though vacations scatter the family the Telephone keeps them together

Vacation time is here and soon thousands of families will be scattering to various places to spend their vacations. Some will go to the seashore, others to the mountains or on week-end motor trips; yet large numbers of these vacationists will keep in close touch with relatives and friends back home by telephone.

People are fast learning that it adds much to the pleasure of their vacations and the happiness of those left at home when they call back at regular intervals.

The cost is small. To most places 25 miles away, the day station-to-station rate is about 25 cents; 75 miles, 60 cents; 100 miles, 65 cents; 150 miles, $1.00. During the evening and night periods, rates are much lower.

UNION LABEL

What is the objection to union-labeled products?

There would appear to be some objection or else there would be greater general demand for them.

Why not go into this matter now? The time was never more propitious for cooperative effort to popularize union-labeled products. Unionists are usually willing enough to lend aid to efforts to create demand for the label representative of their own craft. Why neglect union-made products of other crafts? Other organized craftsmen are asked to see that your label is on what they purchase. Isn't it only fair to see that their labels are on what you buy?

The union label on products of any description is indisputable evidence the goods were made by union workers, in a union shop and under union conditions. This is the main point in their favor.

By purchasing union-made products with union-earned money unionists are aiding each other. If all union-earned money were spent only for union-made products there would be no enforced idleness among members of organized labor.

Argument is heard that union-labeled products are not easy to obtain. Why aren't they? It is idle to assert that dealers will refuse to stock union-made products if shown sufficient demand exists. Why not create that demand?

Once in a while unionists declare this or that nonunion product is better suited to their taste than union-made goods of a similar kind. Is taste a matter of principle? Isn't it a cultivated sense? Did the founders of organized labor consider taste when formulating the principles upon which the movement is predicated?

No unionist can justify his attitude of noncompliance or indifference unless and until he has exhausted all reasonable efforts to obtain for himself and his home products that bear the symbol of fair labor. There are, perhaps, times when a certain article is unobtainable, but a quest for it may arouse sufficient interest among dealers to make it easy to find the second time inquiry is made.

Labeled hats, shoes, cigarets and other goods are easily obtained in most sections simply because demand for them has been so great dealers have realized the wisdom of stocking them. The average merchant has slight regard for sentiment in business. He wants to handle goods that move. Move the first consignment for him and he will order the second at once.

A demand must first be created. And if organized labor does not create the demand for union-made products, who will?

United and consistent effort to create and maintain a demand for union-made products will lessen unemployment, increase wages and decrease working hours to the glory of the organized labor movement.

UNION MINERS ARE LOCKED OUT BY 2 COMPANIES

More Misery Reported for Coal Diggers.

OPERATORS DEMAND LOWER STANDARDS

Charities Will Now Have Complete Burden of Feeding Workers.

After managing to exist for many months by reason of the fact that income derived from their work in the coal mines was supplemented by donations of food and clothing from farmers and the Red Cross, mine workers in Fentress county, Tennessee, were officially locked out by the Fentress and Davidson companies this week, according to Ben Williams, representative of the United Mine Workers of District 19.

Although a joint agreement was entered into one year ago, Mr. Williams said, conditions were forced on the workers which were in some cases worse than those inflicted upon the nonunion miners of Tennessee, but no protest was made, the workers feeling that with a resumption of business they might, in an organized capacity, be enabled to build up conditions to a semblance of American-ism.

However, the agreement expired April 8, previous to which time the mines prepared a new contract similar to that which had been in effect during the past twelve months, and which provided for no increase in operating costs. This was answered by the coal companies named with a demand for 20 per cent decrease in wages and other requirements which the workers regarded as impossible to meet. Among the demands of the mine owners, said Mr. Williams, was that all employes must agree to rent company house, and any one violating this plan would be immediately discharged. Purchase of a modest home, or even the raising of a garden to supplement the meager income after long hours of toil in the coal mines, was thus effectively barred, Mr. Williams pointed out.

The mine workers unanimously refused to accept the ultimatum, and the works of both companies are completely closed.

Discussing the matter this week with a representative of The Labor World, Mr. Williams said:

"Miners of Fentress county have been virtually locked out by the Fentress and Davidson coal companies, over which concerns contractual relations, although of themselves not satisfactory, have been maintained for the past year. Some weeks ago, however, the miners, in assuming the initiative for a renewed agreement, decided against asking any changes in the contract at this time, and the new contract was drafted with the idea in mind of protecting the companies in every way against increased operating costs. The operators, however, appeared to desire to dodge the issue, and to avoid coming out in the open after the employes had presented their proposals. This, however, was immediately followed by an ultimatum demanding a flat 20 per cent reduction in prices of all work.

"Added to this was the proposed requirement that no miner should rent or attempt to purchase a home for his family, the companies to control the housing, on penalty of summary discharge. This means that no miner would be allowed to try and better his condition through raising foodstuffs for the use of his family, which would hurt the 'sales' of the company commissaries, where the miners are compelled to trade.

"The mines have been operating on orders of from one to three days per week, and when the coal company deducts house rent, pit expenses and the 'take-offs', in addition to exorbitant prices for all commodities purchased by the company-owned commissary, there is nothing left, and the proposed pay-day is just another day to them.

"In fact, conditions this spring and summer have been so bad that many miners have been compelled to solicit aid from merchants and others in the community affected, and the Red Cross has been assisting by distributing govern-

FEUDAL ROCKEFELLER HAS VAST DOMAIN OF SILENCE

Hundred Armed Negro Guards Tread on Inch Rubber Soles as Aged Magnate Moves Railroads, Roads and Houses Out of Sight and Hearing to Conserve Energy.

New York City, July 14.—No more amazing story has been told about the topsy-turvy American social structure than streaked through between the lines of the Rockefeller birthday, just celebrated at the Tarrytown baronial estate. The veteran oil magnate was 93 and hopes to reach the century mark.

Rockefeller has become convinced that he must conserve energy and have no distractions. The birthday was quiet.

The estate contains about 3,000 acres. Behind barbed wire fences workmen constantly clear away obstructions, moving the fences steadily back, giving the old baron more undisturbed serenity. Weekly the fences are set farther away.

On sites outside the barbed wire houses are being built so that at sundown all the gardeners, chauffeurs, carpenters and most of the house servants may withdraw outside the 3,000 acres.

Remaining inside then will be only the family and about 100 armed negro guards, each shod with rubber soles almost an inch thick, to insure quiet.

Houses in view of the Rockefeller mansion are either being bought and razed or the owners are being induced to allow them to be painted green, so as to blend with and disappear in the foliage.

All human intrusion, save that deliberately sought, is being ruled out of sight by the man who, at his retirement, as it was, called, turned over capital holdings of one billion dollars to his son for the various Rockefeller institutions and projects.

Pursuing his plan for quiet in the midst of a vast estate, Rockefeller has moved a railroad, plans to move a highway and is trying to move a children's home from which child voices can be heard faintly when the wind is right. If it can't be bought out of the way an effort will be made to at least have it painted green.

On his birthday this feudal magnate said "prosperity has always returned and will again."

MACHINES AND COAL.

Figures compiled from the reports of the bituminous mine operators of Pennsylvania show that approximately 75,000,000 tons of coal, or almost 80 per cent of the total production in 1931, was produced with the aid of mining machines.

Carpenters, 74, Reduces Pay Rate To 80 Cents Hour

Local Union Believes Step Will Stimulate Building—New Scale in Effect Saturday.

Beginning Saturday morning, the union wage rate for Carpenters in Chattanooga will be 80 cents per hour, it was announced by T. S. Rose, business agent of Local 74.

Mr. Rose said that while the Carpenters' scale had not kept pace with the prices set for the other building trades, members of the union took into consideration that other crafts had suffered reductions, and that if the Carpenters voluntarily clipped 10 cents per hour from their rate it would have a tendency to stir interest in local construction work, and would also show to the public that these craftsmen are willing to sacrifice in order that business may not be hindered when it again starts on the upgrade.

The local union made the decision last Friday night, but the matter of when the new scale was to go into effect was left in the hands of the executive board, which Thursday set the date for Saturday, July 16.

Business for the Carpenters, Mr. Rose continued, is "looking up." Every construction job of any consequence, he said, is being done by members of Local 74, and when work begins on the new postoffice every member of the local is expected to be engaged for many months.

Tucker Badly Hurt By Falling Timber

Ed Tucker, well-known member and official of Local 74, Carpenters, is at Erlanger hospital seriously injured as the result of being struck by a huge timber which fell with great force last Friday, striking the trades unionist across the back with near-fatal consequences. The accident occurred on the Sears, Roebuck building, at Sixth and Market streets.

Mr. Tucker's injuries necessitated placing him in a cast, and it was said this week it will require several weeks for the victim to recover.

Tommy Thomas New Manager Park Shop

A. H. "Tommy" Thomas has assumed charge of the Park barber shop, at 111 East Seventh street, and now has associated with him the following well-known members of Local 415: Roy C. Davis, G. D. Shields and C. C. Lawson.

"Johnnie" Harrison and Charles Milliken, formerly at the Park, are now with the Lookout shop, 728 Market street.

News of Passing Of Harry Minor Shock to Friends

Former Well-Known Member of Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen Dies at Macon.

HARRY R. MINOR

News of the passing, at Macon, Ga., last Sunday night of Harry R. Minor, formerly active in the councils of the local lodge, Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, was received as a shock to many local friends.

Mr. Minor, 43, was a son of John S. Minor, one of the best-known citizens of Chattanooga three decades ago. He was employed by the Southern railroad for ten years, and maintained a deep interest in the affairs of organized labor generally. He was also a member of the Chattanooga police force for some ten years, and was always known as an efficient and fearless officer.

Funeral services were held Wednesday morning from a local funeral home, and the interment followed in Forest Hills cemetery. Members of the local lodge of trainmen served as honorary pallbearers, services at the grave being in charge of the Masonic order.

Mr. Minor is survived by his widow; one stepson, Shelby Weaver; three brothers, John S. and L. H. Minor, of Chattanooga, and E. L. Minor, of O'Brien, Fla.; five sisters, Mrs. W. R. Ulrichson and Mrs. D. B. Jones, of Lima, Ohio; Mrs. C. R. McClain, Mrs. W. L. Perry and Mrs. J. M. Sertel, of Chattanooga.

Executives In Session to Map Political Fight

Advisory Council for President Suggested as Need Arising Out of Economic Crisis in Session That Surveys Platforms.

Atlantic City, N. J., July 14.—In session all of this week and due to run well into next week, the executive council of the American Federation of Labor had before it the two major political platforms and figures on unemployment showing a constant gain in idleness since the last figures of 10,634,000 were issued. The present total is shown to be close to 11,000,000.

Unemployment Steadily Gains.

Figures furnished for the meeting by President Green show that with steel, car loadings and power output at new low points, employment not only has failed to rise, but has fallen to new levels.

In the face of this situation the federation has formulated the suggestion that there be formed:

An advisory council of various groups, including labor, "through which the president can have regular and dependable information so that developing problems can be met quickly."

There is no concealment of the gravity with which the council views the industrial situation.

It is pointed out that while some living costs have gone down, labor earns only 50 cents where formerly it earned a dollar.

Income Falls 37 Per Cent.

Thus while 82 cents will buy what a dollar formerly bought, labor incomes are 37 per cent below the 1929 level!

The council is scrutinizing the major political platforms through glasses on which are superimposed these figures on unemployment and collapsed wage-incomes. It is looking at the planks that deal with industrial and economic issues, or that should have dealt with them.

There will, of course, be no indorsement of any party or candidate. The records will be analyzed and the results published. This is customary procedure, in line with the nonpartisan program, from which there will be no departure.

Report on Labor Press.

The council will have many other issues before it. It will have before it a report on labor's participation in the war against depression campaign to secure a million jobs. It will have before it a report of a special committee appointed by President Green, pursuant to convention action, to survey the labor press with a view to recommending measures helpful to the local newspapers published by and for the movement. A questionnaire has been sent to all publishers and the report will be based largely on the answers that have come to the committee, which is headed by Matthew Woll.

But essentially all paramount interests centers in the political program and in the desperate industrial situation.

PAYLESS VACATION PLAN INFLICTS NEW PENALTY

Extended Leave Enforced by Many Firms in Wave of Economy at Expense of Employes—Hourly Workers Harder Hit Than Salaried Personnel as One-Fourth of Companies Change Policy.

New York City, July 14.—More payless vacations than ever will be taken by industrial and clerical workers this summer and vacation periods will be longer.

A survey of the plans of 275 New York employers has just been finished by the Merchants' association and the report contains two striking paragraphs, probably indicative of the situation nationally. They are:

"Vacations of three or four weeks and even longer will be the rule this summer for more employes than ever before.

"Unfortunately for the employes, the longer vacations will frequently be taken at reduced pay or without any pay at all."

More than 25 per cent of the companies have changed their vacation policies since 1929, most of them doing it to cut pay roll expenses.

Of the 273 companies reporting, 165 will give vacations to salaried employes, eight will give none. Of 115 employing hourly employes only 65 will give scheduled vacations.

Salaried employes will draw full pay from 215 companies, four will pay two-thirds salary, 22 will give half-pay, one will pay one-third, 15 will give no pay. Hourly employes on vacation will draw full pay from 36 companies, half pay from 11, no pay from 10. Sixteen report the fractional wage basis is reached by requiring employes to take longer vacations at their own expense. In addition, 115 companies said they were willing for employes to take extra time off the payroll.

Three companies substituted Saturday off for vacations, one cut out vacation pay for unmarried workers only.

Reports from other cities indicate similar vacation policies as being applied on a wide front.

Meatcutters Plan Moonlight Trip Down Tennessee

Frank Worthy's Orchestra to Furnish Music for Outing Staged by Local 600

Moonlight boat trip down the Tennessee river, sponsored by Local 600, Meatcutters, bids fair to be unusually successful, according to members of the committee in charge of the affair for the union.

The pleasure boat will leave the wharf, it is announced, promptly at 8:15 Monday night, and will cruise down the river, probably to the lock and dam, returning at about 11:15.

An orchestra under direction of J. Frank Worthy will discourse music for dancing on a barge fitted especially for such affairs, it was said. Any Chattanoogan who has never witnessed the majestic palisades of the Tennessee by moonlight, a member of the committee said, has missed a rare treat, and opportunity is now offered for enjoyment of this unusual sight under most favorable circumstances and at a cost of only $1 per person for transportation.

Committee in charge of the ride consists of M. E. Ball, Charles Clinton, A. L. Surrett, Paul Sorrick and E. R. Caniff.

Mr. Clinton said Thursday that tickets are being sold rapidly, and indications are that a capacity crowd will make the trip with the "butchers" and their families.

CAMPAIGN FOR CHILD SIGHT.

Absolute prohibition of the manufacture and sale of dangerous toys such as air rifles, cap pistols, sling shots, bows and arrows, darts, toy guns and other devices for projecting missiles, firecrackers and torpedoes is advocated by the National Society for the Prevention of Blindness in the report of a study of eye accidents in child play made public by the society July 1: The society finds that there are now in schools for the blind some 500 children who have lost their sight as a result of accidents, chiefly through the use of fireworks, air rifles and other weapons. Each year between 750 and 1,000 children suffer accidental eye injuries in the United States.

AUTOS STILL CLIMB.

Sales of automobiles continue to show a rising trend in newest trade reports. May sales of passenger vehicles rose to 131,000 vehicles, according to a report by R. L. Polk & Co. This marks a gain of 11,000 units over the preceding month and a rate of increase of 9 per cent.

HAL CLEMENTS GETS APPROVAL OF STATE BODY

Committee Puts O. K. on His Record.

RECOMMENDED TO REPUBLICAN VOTERS

The Hon. Hal Clements, of Knox county, has received the official "O. K." of the nonpartisan political committee of the Tennessee Federation of Labor and the railroad brotherhoods, and those trades unionists and their friends who vote in the republican primaries are urged to support the fiery leader in his candidacy for his party's nomination for governor.

Mr. Clements represented Knox county in the 1931 general assembly, and he was an outspoken champion of legislation proposed for the benefit of the masses. His relentless fight on the Horton administration was a feature of the session.

The Hon. Hill McAlister, as has been previously announced, was indorsed for the democratic nomination. The committee deferred action on recommendations regarding the race for utilities commissioner.

On the Third district congressional race no recommendation is made, both S. J. McReynolds and Walter M. Cameron, it is declared, having records tempting to force upon the workers." "favorable to labor." The matter is thus left to the judgment of local workers.

The committee's statement, received by The Labor World this week, follows:

There are three candidates for the democratic nomination for governor in the primary of that party to be held on Aug. 4, 1932. The records of all these candidates are personally known to the members of this committee. Organized labor supported Hon. Hill McAlister in 1926 and again in 1928, on the recommendations of this committee. We believe that we are justified on these two occasions in indorsing him for governor. Nothing has happened since that time to alter that opinion.

Hon. Hill McAlister was a member of the Tennessee general assembly of 1911 and 1913 as a senator from Davidson county. His record as a legislator shows that he was not the representative of any special interests. He was elected treasurer of the state by the votes of all factions of the general assembly of 1931. He has been faithful to every public trust.

On Mr. McAlister's record as a public official we believe he is the best qualified man among the candidates for the democratic nomination for governor of this state. We believe that if he is elected governor he will be the representative of all the people of Tennessee.

This committee, therefore, indorses Hon. Hill McAlister and urges the members of organized labor and all others who believe in honesty and efficiency in public office to vote for him in the democratic primary to be held on Thursday, Aug. 4, 1932.

In the contest for railroad and public utility commissioner the committee made no indorsement, but will take up this office prior to the regular election in November.

In the congressional races the committee took the following action:

First District—Congressman O. B. Lovette was indorsed, over Carroll B. Reece.

Second District—Congressman J. Will Taylor was indorsed.

Third District—The candidates are S. J. McReynolds and Walter Cameron. No indorsement was made. Congressman McReynolds has a record favorable to labor. Mr. Cameron, as a member of the general assembly, has a record favorable to labor.

Fourth District—Congressman

The Social Ideals of Jesus of Nazareth

An Interpretation

Written for The Labor World
By WILLIAM L. MOSS

Chapter VI
JESUS' EVALUATION OF LIFE
Part VII

Whosoever heareth these sayings of mine, and doeth them, I will liken him unto a wise man which built his house upon a rock.
—Mat. vii:24.

WM. L. MOSS

Jesus was a teacher. As such He is addressed more than forty times in the New Testament. But throughout the four gospels we also have abundant evidence Jesus was conscious of not only filling the role of a teacher but that He knew He was a teacher of universal and undying truths as well. In declaring Jesus a teacher of universal truths we do not have to rely at all upon the fact that He presented His teaching in the form of pointed sayings, memorable parables and a brief, topical expositions.

Our most conclusive evidence that Jesus was a teacher of universal truths and recognized himself as such is gathered from two sources.

The first source is found in sayings of the Master similar to those quoted in italic type at the head of this article. Note how He refers to His utterances as "sayings," followed by the implication that the speaker expects the listener to be guided by what the latter has heard: "Whosoever heareth these sayings of mine, and doeth them . . ." But acceptance of this source without further evidence is out of the question; it calls for nothing more than our subjective assent. This becomes clear when we remember it was Oriental usage for teachers, especially those with personal followings, to refer to their teachings as "sayings." Their utterances were thus correctly named since the Oriental teacher needs must give his teaching in a form easily committed to memory by his pupils, for note-taking was not the custom. All teachers of that day taught in epigrammatic form and we therefore need something more than the mere fact that Jesus followed prevailing custom and referred to His teaching as "sayings." To merely give our subjective assent to Jesus' claims of being a teacher of universal truths is open to attack from another angle. The Master at times spoke with the transcendant and exquisite rapture of the poet-prophet, who very commonly degenerates into the philosopher-mystic. We who are accustomed to the Western method of having presented to us formally stated logical reasoning which never deviates from a direct path leading through premise and proof to conclusion must be a little slow in saying whether one trained in the axiomatic and impassioned method of the East is of the indisputible world-teacher type, no matter how "universal" his utterances may sound. Both the graphic, subtle parable and effusive mouthings are typical of the Oriental philosopher-mystic. Being master of the situation because he is the teacher, he expounds with the finality of "authority" on whatever subject is suggested to him.

LABOR QUERIES

Q.—Do unions have the initiative and referendum?

A.—A few have it, but in most unions the convention system is preferred. The Cigar Makers, to cite an example, abandoned it after years of practice, on the ground that it retarded progress.

Q.—Is the A. F. of L. officially in favor of the six-hour day?

A.—No, the A. F. of L. is officially on record in favor of a work-day and work-week adjusted to available employment.

Q.—How are the A. F. of L. departments supported?

A.—By a per capita tax paid by the national and international unions affiliated to them.

Cost of Living Facts

That the cost of living has not fallen as far or as fast as in the 1921 depression is shown by the national industrial conference board, which reports findings to the effect that while living costs dropped 18 per cent in 12 months in the '21 slump, this time the first 20 months of depression brought a drop of 15 per cent in the cost of living index and 17.7 in 26 months.

Some employers have tried to use cost of living as a lever to bring about wage reductions. Almost uniformly they have exaggerated the extent of the reductions.

The cost of living is in no case a reason for wage reductions or a basis for wage-fixing, but when the argument is used it is well to have the facts. Many of the commodities most necessary have dropped but little, and some not at all.

Stabilizing Poverty by Cheap Housing

It cannot be truthfully denied that the working people produce the most of our wealth. Despite this, it is a well-authenticated fact that they are able to appropriate but a small portion of it. By far the larger portion is taken by those who own industry. Their share is represented by dividends and interest.

The reason labor receives so little is because its purchasing power is arbitrarily limited by those who control work opportunities, and thus fix wages. This is the general policy except where it is modified by strong trade unions.

By the ruthless exercise of this arbitrary power, employers force wages far below the point set by decent living standards.

Socially constructive forces endeavor to raise the living standards of the workers to ever higher points so that they may enjoy more of the material good things of life.

Socially destructive forces endeavor to lower the workers' living requirements and thus perpetuate their poverty.

The socially destructive forces are responsible for the new cheap housing plan recently launched by a New York corporation.

The corporation claims that the present type of small houses for urban workers sell for from $6,000 to $8,000, with monthly interest and amortization charges of $50 to $60 a month, and that 50 per cent of the workers cannot afford to pay this price. It is therefore planned to produce ready-made steel houses that will sell for $4,000.

The employers first degrade wages below decent living standards, and then hire engineers to produce housing in conformity with these standards. This tends to perpetuate the low wages.

Social progress does not consist in lowering wages so that the workers cannot afford decent houses and then evolving cheap houses to correspond to the compulsory lowered living standards.

Social progress consists in raising wages so that the workers can buy good houses for themselves and their families.

If 50 per cent of urban families cannot buy houses costing from $6,000 to $8,000, the progressive remedy is not to mobilize science and mass production to produce cheap houses that may be sold at a profit for $4,000.

The remedy is to mobilize science and public opinion to see the necessity of employers raising their reactionary wage standards to the point where the $6,000 or $8,000 houses can be purchased without undue sacrifice.

Vegetable Gardens to Relieve Jobless

Planting jobless railroad workers on unused land so that they may grow at least a portion of the foodstuffs necessary to keep them and their families alive is the favorite method used by railroad executives to meet the unemployment emergency. "Subsistence gardens" is the technical term used to describe the soil-tilling scheme.

Mr. R. H. Aishton, chairman of the executive committee of the association of railway executives, who is also a member of the president's organization on unemployment relief, sponsored the subsistence gardens plan with railway executives throughout the country as a "practical" measure to enable the thousands of railway workers whom Mr. Aishton and his associates refuse to employ to wrest at least a part of their living from the soil.

It is interesting to note in this connection that Mr. Aishton's association of railway executives regards as impracticable the proposal of the railway labor organizations, supported by the American Federation of Labor, to reduce the length of the work day from eight hours to six for railway workers and thus go a long way toward abolishing unemployment in the railroad industry.

Mr. Aishton and his associate owners and managers of our railroads carried their opposition to the six-hour day to the interstate commerce commission and persistently fought it all through the investigation made by that body, under a joint resolution of congress, to determine the probable effect of the application of the six-hour principle to all branches of the railway service.

The six-hour day would enable the railway employes to live according to decent standards. Moreover, it would permit them to enjoy some of the benefits flowing from the revolutionary increase in their output during the last few years resulting from the application of labor-saving machinery and methods in the railway service.

Shorter hours of labor, not vegetable gardens, is the most practical remedy, and in fact the only remedy, for unemployment. It is regrettable that Mr. Aishton and his associates are so vegetable minded. They resemble the ostrich who blinds himself to facts by sticking his head in the sand.

Wage Earners and Bankruptcy

Bankruptcy laws are designed to legally discharge insolvent debtors from paying their debts. They are used by all classes of business men who are unable to meet their obligations.

But the very business men who rely on the institution of bankruptcy to settle claims against them for a few cents on the dollar oppose financially distressed working people using the same mechanism to wipe out legal responsibility for their debt.

The attempt to convey the idea that there is something disgraceful about a worker making use of the bankruptcy laws is frequently used by those who wish to limit the advantage of them to business.

This idea of disgrace was recently developed by Mr. Lloyd K. Garrison, dean of the law school of the University of Wisconsin, at the meeting of the national credit association in Detroit. To enable workers who can not pay their debts to avoid the alleged disgrace attached to bankruptcy proceedings Mr. Garrison evolved the scheme of permitting them a special extension of time in which to do it.

Mr. Garrison explained that this "suspended discharge feature" gives the workers two years "to make good their obligations and in the end receive final discharge without having been in the meantime stigmatized with the odious term bankrupt."

Workers who are unable to pay their debts should not be influenced by this sort of propaganda against their making use of the bankruptcy laws. There is no odium attached to these laws. They are specifically designed to enable business men and all other citizens to receive legal discharge from obligation to pay debts in excess of their financial ability and begin their life over again.

In the severe strain of distress caused by prolonged unemployment millions of workers find themselves unable to meet their obligations.

Often they have been the victims of unscrupulous promoters of various sorts. Frequently they have fallen into the claws of loan sharks.

They should make use of bankruptcy laws to free themselves from the consequences of these mistakes or misfortunes and be legally discharged from all obligation to pay debts they are unable to pay and which stand in the way of their providing decent living standards for themselves and their families, both now and in the future.

The Passing Show

Note and Comment on Things Doing in the March of Events

Can the work-week ever be stretched out after inauguration of the five-day week? Plenty of folks are ready to say no.

The economy act has forced thousands of government employes to the five-day week.

In the navy department alone 45,600 civilian employes have been ordered on the five-day week.

Chances are that it will be difficult, if not impossible, ever to add the old half-day. The move, when economy is not a fetish, will and should be to raise pay, but to keep the five-day week.

It may turn out that the one lasting beneficial result of this tragic and hellish depression will be the liberation of millions from all Saturday work.

Out of the sins of the exploiters may come at least that much of definite, permanent social gain.

The five-day week, with reduced weekly earnings, is punishment. But with pay brought to proper figures it will become glorious social advancement, wringing joy out of adversity. Let it come.

J. Mason Knox once wrote:

It is not the individual or the army as a whole,
But the everlastin' teamwork of every bloomin' soul.

Where he said much. The main need of trade unionism today is just that "everlastin' teamwork of every bloomin' soul." And we need that teamwork in support of the fundamental principles of the trade union movement.

With that teamwork the American trade union movement can go on to heights of achievement hitherto undreamed of.

We are in the making of a new day. Whether it be a good day or a day of chaos is largely up to the trade union movement.

However and nevertheless, there must be ground gained toward permanent cure.

There is, within the present economic order, but one way to effect cure and that is by these two things:

1—A greatly shortened work-week.

2—Progressively increasing wages.

Today's calculations show a 30-hour week absolutely necessary.

To put into American circulation for commodities the money that in the past has been drained away and either sunk abroad or hoarded at home there must be a rising wage rate.

Thus three things are gained:

1—There is work for all;

2—There is leisure in which to use commodities that require time for their using;

3—There is the purchasing power among the masses with which to buy.

Recruits are enrolled for the 30-hour week almost daily.

The light seeps in.

Men are thinking more than they thought four years ago.

It becomes clear to increasing numbers that ten million Americans will not continue to go hungry without some kind of vigorous protest.

It is incontrovertable that reasoned, logical readjustment is better than disorderly upheaval in a blind effort to find relief.

Let us concentrate all effort toward bringing into action the measures that will wipe out depression and make America henceforth depression-proof.

America can have permanent prosperity for the masses if America has the vision and the courage to do the simple things that alone can make permanent prosperity possible. If those things are done prosperity will not only be possible, it will be inevitable.

Self-Sustaining Public Works To Make Jobs for Unemployed

By HON. FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT
Candidate of the Democratic Party for President of the United States.

The following statement on unemployment relief was made by Hon. Franklin D. Roosevelt in his speech in Chicago accepting the nomination of the democratic party convention for the office of president of the United States:

And now one word about unemployment, and, incidentally, about agriculture. I have favored the use of certain types of public works as a further emergency means of stimulating employment and the issuance of bonds to pay for such public works, but I have pointed out that no economic end is served if we merely build without building for a necessary purpose.

Self-Sustaining Public Works.

Such works, of course, should, insofar as possible, be self-sustaining if they are to be financed by the issuing of bonds. So as to spread the points of all kinds as widely as possible, we must take definite steps to shorten the working day and the working week.

Let us use common sense and business sense, and just as one example we know that a very hopeful and immediate means of release, both for the unemployed and for agriculture, will come from a wide plan of the converting of many millions of acres of marginal and unused land into timber land through reforestation.

Reforestation for Employment.

There are tens of millions of acres east of the Mississippi river alone in abandoned farms, in cut-over land, now growing up in worthless brush. Why, every European nation has a definite land policy and has had one for generations. We have not. Having none, we face a future of soil erosion and timber famine. It is clear that economic foresight and immediate employment march hand in hand in the call for the reforestation of these vast areas.

Jobs for One Million.

In so doing employment can be given to a million men. That is the kind of public work that is self-sustaining, and therefore capable of being financed by the issuance of bonds which are made secure by the fact that the growth of tremendous crops will provide adequate security for the investment.

Yes, I have a very definite program for providing employment by that means. I have done it, and I am doing it today in the state of New York. I know that the democratic party can do it successfully in the nation. That will put men to work and that is an example of the action that we are going to have.

Work and Security.

What do the people of America want more than anything else? In my mind, two things: Work, work with all the moral and spiritual values that go with work. And with work, a reasonable measure of security—security for themselves and for their wives and children.

Work and security—these two are more than words. They are more than facts. They are the spiritual values, the true goal toward which our efforts of reconstruction should lead. These are the values that this program is intended to gain. These are the values we have failed to achieve by the leadership we now have.

N. Y. Printers Boost Assessment for Idle

President Hewson Says Union Has Paid $4,000,000 to Jobless Members in Two Years—2,600 Receive Unemployment Benefits.

New York.—Typographical Union No. 6 adopted by referendum the proposal to levy a special assessment of 5 per cent in addition to the present assessment of 10 per cent to increase the unemployed benefit fund.

Austin Hewson, president of the union, said the organization had paid out close to $4,000,000 to its unemployed members in the last two years.

Members employed full time in job printing plants are now paying 10 per cent of their incomes toward the unemployment fund and printers employed in newspaper composing rooms are paying their assessment by giving up one day's work a week to a substitute.

The adoption of the referendum will enable the union to keep up its out-of-work benefits and to repay loans made to the relief fund from the general fund and the local union's old age pension fund.

Compositors who have regular positions in newspaper plants will be exempt from benefit payments if they give up two days a week to substitutes. Those who have regular positions in job plants will be exempt from payments if they give substitutes one and one-half days' work a week.

The union, according to Mr. Hewson, is now paying 2,600 idle men unemployment benefits.

Frey Praises A. F. of L.'s Nonpartisan Political Policy

Metal Trades Department Secretary Declares Independent Use of Ballot Has Won Notable Legislative Achievements for Labor—Vote Record of Legislators Determines Labor's Attitude—Injunction Judge and Senators Defeated—Trade Union Votes Not for Sale.

Washington, July 12.—"The American Federation of Labor will take an active part in the campaign this year as in years past," declared John P. Frey, secretary-treasurer of the Metal Trades Department of the A. F. of L., in a radio address here over the Columbia network on "Labor in Politics."

"It will definitely refrain from indorsing any political party," Mr. Frey said. "It will devote its efforts to secure the election of public officials whose past record justifies this support. In a number of instances it will actively work to bring about the defeat of candidates for public office whose legislative or executive record is evidence that they have been reactionary in their attitude toward industrial and social questions or who have seemingly been the representatives of special interests."

Mr. Frey traced the origin of the present nonpartisan political policy of the American labor movement to the experience of trade unions with independent political parties from the National Labor union in 1870 and the Knights of Labor which followed it.

Nonpartisan Policy Adopted.

From the establishment of the American Federation of Labor in 1881, political action was given serious consideration by the federation.

"In 1898," Mr. Frey said, "the annual convention of the American Federation of Labor declared for 'the independent use of the ballot of trade unionists and workmen regardless of party.'

"Commenting upon this policy in 1917, Mr. Gompers said: 'The one great advantage of the political policy the A. F. of L. has pursued, is that it has in no way hampered or detracted from the economic power or effectiveness of the trade unions. Nonpartisan political activity does not subordinate the economic interests of the trade unionists to partisan interests, but our political policy has made our economic influence, our economic needs, our economic welfare of paramount importance.'"

On the development and achievements of the American Federation of Labor's nonpartisan political policy, Mr. Frey said in part:

Vote Record of Congressmen.

"For many years the American Federation of Labor has kept the record vote in congress on all labor measures. This legislative record is sent to trade unionists throughout the country during election campaigns. It is their nonpartisan political guide. The same practice is carried out by state federations of labor. So that before the primaries are held, trade unionists and unorganized workmen have had placed before them the legislative record on labor measures of the candidates who are seeking re-election.

"This information has assisted wage-earners in becoming familiar with their representatives' labor record, and has enabled them to understand that their nonpartisan political program gave them a balance of power and an effectiveness which in these United States of America has never been acquired by any politically partisan labor or any reform party which has been organized.

Nonpartisan Policy Applied to Judiciary.

"The trade union movement's nonpartisan political policy extends beyond the legislative and the executive, and includes the judiciary where it is appointive to the authority which confirms. The influence of the judiciary is as far-reaching as legislation, and sometimes more so, for the higher courts have authority to declare legislation unconstitutional.

Labor Opposed Judge Parker.

"A notable example of the nonpartisan political policy in connection with the appointment of federal judges occurred not long ago. Judge J. J. Parker, a member of the United States circuit court of appeals, was nominated for justice of the supreme court. While on the circuit court of appeals he had handed down a decision in the Red Jacket Coal company case, which vitally affected labor's rights and welfare. What is known as the 'yellow dog' contract was involved.

"Judge Parker, in his decision, had gone much further than any previous federal judge, for he had approved an injunction which restrained trade unionists from discussing the merits or demerits and the principles of justive involved in 'yellow dog' contracts. As a result of the wide publicity given to the record by the American Federation of Labor, Judge Parker's nomination failed in confirmation by the senate.

Labor Defeats Injunction Senators.

"Labor believed itself justified in holding the confirming power responsible. In the state primaries which followed, several senators who had voted for confirmation were defeated for renomination. In the ensuing election, several senators who had been successful in the primary were defeated on election day. Some of these were republicans, others were democrats.

"They were not held responsible because of their party affiliations, neither were the political parties held responsible for their votes in the senate, but as individuals, regardless of their party affiliations. Their record was widely published so that trade unionists and right thinking citizens would be familiar with the facts before they went to the polls.

Trade Union Votes Not for Sale.

"It should be emphasized for the information of the public, politicians and candidates for public office," Mr. Frey concluded, "that trade union votes cannot be bought or sold; that no trade union official has the power to deliver trade union votes; and that the trade union movement cannot be captured or controlled by any political party or herded together under any partisan political banner.

"Our trade union nonpartisan political policy has resulted in removing the partisan blinders which had obscured the political vision of so many wage-earners in the past. It has broken the hold with which politicians had bound American workmen to political parties instead of political principles and men.

"Trade unionists have become partisan to principles instead of political parties. The American Federation of Labor has done much to give wage-earners a clearer vision and better understanding to guide their political activities, and has played a foremost part in establishing those political methods which have weakened the power of the partisan political boss, and enabled citizens to enjoy a more direct voice in choosing public representatives and shaping legislative progress."

Davis Forecasts Victory of Coal Control Measure

Two of Subcommittee Favor Intervention of Government and All Agree on Right of Workers to Organize.

Washington, July 14.—Report to the senate committee on mines and mining on the Davis-Kelly bill for the stabilization of the bituminous coal industry has been made by the subcommittee. Principal features of the bill are:

1—Creates a bituminous coal commission, cost borne by the industry.

2—Coal mining corporations doing interstate business shall obtain federal license.

3—Licensed corporations may join a selling pool or joint selling agency for marketing product.

4—Coal mine employes shall have the right of collective bargaining; right to organize, and right of assemblage.

The sub-committee was composed of Senator Hatfield, West Virginia, chairman; Senator Davis, Pennsylvania, and Senator Hayden, Arizona. A separate report, with recommendations, was prepared by each, in which each set forth his views and opinions, but the greater part of the entire report was prepared by Senator Davis, in which he supports the bill and urges its enactment. Senator Hatfield opposes federal regulation. Senator Hayden favors federal regulation, but sets out a plan different from the Davis-Kelly bill.

Thinks Bill Will Pass.

Senator Davis gives his reasons why the Davis-Kelly bill offers the best possible solution for the demoralized industry. He expresses the belief that such legislation will be enacted by congress.

It is significant, Senator Davis said, that "two of the three members of the sub-committee agree that the bituminous coal mining industry, in order to function in the public interest, must be stabilized through the intervention of the federal government;" that "two members of the sub-committee are in agreement as to the constitutionality of the Davis-Kelly bill," and that "the members of the sub-committee are unanimous in holding that all employes of bituminous coal mines should be assured the right of collective bargaining through representatives of their own choosing."

Criticisms of and objections to certain features of the Davis-Kelly bill were offered by opponents during the several months' hearings that were held, and Senator Davis has offered amendments which he believes meet them.

For Joint Recovery.

"The Davis-Kelly bill contemplates nothing more than an opportunity for the operators on the one hand, and for the miners on the other, to work out of the slough of cut-throat competition that is bankrupting the operators, starving the miners and pauperizing the mining communities," Senator Davis said; "to work their problems out with a minimum of legislative regulation or government interference; to work them out in a manner consonant with our institutions and traditions, our ideas of property and property rights, and the right of collective bargaining, which is universally recognized as the only protection labor has against an incessant wage deflation."

GOVERNMENT BLOCKS POSTAGE EVASION BY CORPORATIONS

Washington.—Officials of public utility companies and other large business concerns started an organized attempt to sabotage the government by schemes to evade the increase in postage rates on first class mail from 2 to 3 cents.

The favorite scheme was to hire private concerns whose employes are paid low wages to deliver bills instead of sending them through the mails. It was estimated that by pooling their bill deliveries in the hands of private concerns the big companies could bilk the government out of $11,000 on every 100,000 bills.

The postoffice department blocked this scheme by pointing out that the postal laws do not permit anyone to enter into competition with the postal service in carrying letters. A company may use its employes for its own deliveries, the department said, but two or more companies will not be allowed to use the same employe nor hire a messenger or other delivery service to deliver their bills.

TRIES "OPEN SHOP."

The Heating and Piping association, New York, has applied for and received from the Building Trades Employers' association permission to hire men regardless of union membership. Working conditions were in dispute.

WANTS REPRESENTATION.

Tom Moore, president of the Canadian Trades and Labor congress, has asked the Dominion government to name labor advisors for the forthcoming imperial economic conference, but the request has not yet been granted. He pointed out that the British delegation would be accompanied by the president and secretary of the British Trade Union congress.

STAGE HANDS NEGOTIATE.

Theatrical Protective Union No. 1 (stage hands), New York, has authorized its executive board to negotiate a new wage scale. The League of New York Theaters demands a 33 1/3 per cent wage cut, which President James J. Brennan, of the union, terms "ridiculous."

Go to your Union Meetings

Don't say you are too tired; the weather is bad; or there is too much quibbling and "hot air" to interest me.

Every time you miss a meeting and leave it to the other fellow to look out for your interest, you are doing an injustice both to yourself and your organization.

Your views on especially vital subjects should be represented in discussion and by vote, and the only way for this to be done is for you to be at your union meeting.

You are responsible for the good and welfare of your organization, and non-attendance of union meetings on your part is not excuse enough for you to voice your opinion after a measure has been passed. It is then time for you to concur in what has been done and work in harmony with the officers and other members of your union.

Go to your union meetings regularly and induce others to do the same, because one important thing to remember is the meaning of the slogan:

Labor and the Courts

CHAPTER I

The natural impulse of every social body is to harmonize the various forces of which it is composed. All strife or dissonance between these forces is an indication of disease.

—Mazzini.

IT is an undenied fact that employers are using the judiciary as a chief weapon in efforts to render American labor impotent and teach it docility. For years labor leaders have noted with increasing apprehension the inclination of our courts to adjust their attitude toward organized labor to the one that prevails among business men. In fact, it has been clear to all observers that our courts maintain a consistently illiberal attitude with respect to the activity of labor unions.

It has not been so very long ago when a West Virginia court held a miners' union to be an illegal conspiracy and an Arkansas court held a union in striking was illegally interfering with interstate commerce! Looking at the matter in a broader way, fifty years ago a man was freer to strike in Massachusetts than he is today. Legislative enactments did not bring this situation about; the only difference has been in the attitude of the courts of that state! No wonder the American toiler regards with bitterness an industrial "justice" which is only the grist of legal machinery—a legal machinery around which those who compose its personnel have thrown a halo of sanctity to guard against reform by outside influences!

Labor can understand why our courts recognize capital's right to organize, but it does not understand, and resents, the activities of courts to repress this same effort of labor in its own behalf. The courts haven't the courage to say labor must not organize, but once the workingman strengthens his hand by organizing our judiciary, busy themselves in paralyzing and even nullifying his newly-acquired means of protecting himself and gaining a voice in industrial matters. Unable to stop him from organizing, the judiciary declares at the first available opportunity that the "effort to unionize a shop is unlawful" (Lowe et al. vs. Lawler et al., 208 U. S. 274), that it is "constitutional to discharge a man for belonging to a union" (Wm. Adair vs. U. S., 208 U. S. 161), that "a strike is unlawful" (U. S. vs. Cassidy et al., 67 Fed. Rep. 698, 185) and that it is even "unlawful to threaten a strike" (John O'Brien vs. People ex. rel. Kellogg Switchboard and Supply Co., 216 III. 354).

COMPULSORY RETIREMENT FOR ENGINE DRIVERS

London, Eng.—Officials of the Great Western Railway company notified 300 of its older engine drivers that they must retire because of the decrease [illegible]. The men are between the ages of 60 and 65. The normal age of retirement is 65.

The men will receive a pension of one-fourth of their present wage plus a small amount from a superannuation fund. The compulsory retirement [illegible] with the economic [illegible] of the engine drivers, all of [illegible] expected to work until they [illegible] 65.

[illegible] objected to the unequal [illegible]. A man of 60 will lose five [illegible] wages, while a man of 64 will lose but one year's wages.

THIRD OF PARKS DONATED.

Park and recreation areas valued at more than $100,000,000 and comprising 75,000 acres have been donated to municipalities in the United States, according to a study made by the National Recreation association. These parks comprise one-third of all municipal recreation areas, the study reveals, the remainder having been secured by the expenditure of municipal funds. Some cities, including New Brunswick, N. J.; Oneonta, N. Y., and Raleigh, N. C., reported that every acre of their existing parks was secured through gifts.

EUROPEAN JOBLESS GAIN.

Unemployment is 50 per cent higher than in June, 1931, in six major European industrial nations, the International Labor office reports. The report how that the total unemployment in Germany, Britain, Italy, Czechoslovakia, France and Austria is now 11,611,744, against 7,865,698 in June, 1931. Each registered an increase, Germany adding more than 2,000,000 to her 4,000,000 and Italy entering the 1,000,000 class. Unemployment increased in France from 51,354 to 315,52 and in Czechoslovakia from 93,941 to 482,000.

SOCIAL MISERY INCREASED BY BRITISH GOVERNMENT

London, Eng.—George Lansbury, leader of the labor party group in the house of commons, declared that the British government "by its stupid policy of starving the unemployed and their dependents, and its ruthless cutting down of social services, is increasing social misery and raising the death rate throughout industrial Britain."

Green Says Jobs for All Is Main Issue in This Year's Election

President of American Federation of Labor Asserts That Citizens Should Vote for Only Those Candidates Who Positively Declare Themselves in Favor of the Right to Work.

Washington, July 12.—In an editorial in the American Federationist on "The Coming Election," William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor, takes the position that voters should not favor candidates for offices in the federal government who do not declare themselves for measures making jobs for all a reality. The editorial follows:

Even though we may, for the most part, be unconscious of its functioning, the federal government is a most fundamental force, shaping and conditioning life for all of us.

If we lose our confidence in, belittle and restrict our federal agencies, we limit their capacity to serve our needs.

At no time in our nation's history was good government more indispensable than now.

At no time have governmental issues so directly affected problems of life and work for all.

Of foremost importance to each are those representatives elected by the people to constitute the senate and the house of representatives to formulate national policies.

Upon the wisdom and vision of these persons depend the ability of our nation collectively to discern the needs of our citizens and to determine how best to provide the required service.

"There is nothing mysterious about government or its techniques.

It is an agency for co-ordinating action upon matters of collective concern.

The executive and legislative functions are delegated to representatives of our choosing.

It is concerned with the problems of living together, our intercourse with the peoples of other nations, collectively and as individuals.

Practical principles are as simple as the facts of life.

When they are befogged and complicated, it is because some one has been trying to divert policies from the purpose of collective service to a special process that will give special privilege to a few.

The United States and all other countries are confronted with emergency situations more dangerous than war.

We have to conquer abnormal powers that threaten institutions created by centuries of experience.

The key to this situation is providing men and women with an opportunity to earn the necessities of life.

The problem is an elemental one.

Progress in solving it has meant progress in civilization. We must again solve it for our ten and one-half millions of unemployed persons in the United States.

At present it is not possible to solve this problem by normal methods.

Individual employers and companies are unable to move against the world-wide drift.

Upon the federal government rests responsibility for finding how to make jobs available and having the program carried out.

The pressing question to put to every candidate who asks to be be elected to membership in our federal government is, How do you propose to make it possible for all to have jobs?

The reply to this question should decide whether the candidate deserves the confidence of the voters in the coming elections.

ment flour. In the past eighteen months the miners have been compelled to accept two reductions in wages, totaling 25 per cent. These cuts were taken on the strength of promises of more regular employment, but instead of increasing, the number of days' work has decreased.

"Under the pay scale proposed by the coal operators, the majority of the miners would be compelled to work for $2 and less per day, with no assurance of an hour's work. In fact, there are many who would be willing to work with no compensation other than a guarantee by the employers that their families would be fed for sixty days. They are willing to sell themselves into industrial slavery in order that they may be sure of the necessities of life for their wives and families.

"Acceptance of the scale and conditions proposed by the companies would reduce the miners and their families from the present miserable rate to a lower and even more poverty stricken condition, and would require further appeals to charity to avoid actual starvation. There is absolutely no justification for the attitude of the mine owners.

"The miners of Fentress county are determined to fight to the last ditch, taking the position that if they must starve they will probably live longer by remaining out of the mines.

"The works of both companies are closed, and will probably remain so until the coal operators are convinced of the injustice which they are attempting to force upon the workers.

$150,000,000 FOR RELIEF IN NEW YORK NEXT YEAR

Patchogue, Long Island, N. Y.—Public and private unemployment relief in New York state from Nov. 1, 1932, to Nov. 1, 1933, would cost $150,000,000, Walter W. Pettit, executive director of the temporary emergency relief administration for New York state, told delegates attending the annual convention of the New York Association of Public Welfare Officials here.

Declaring that private relief agencies have practically exhausted their means, he said that the $30,000,000 bond issue to be voted in November would be inadequate to provide relief and that the state was depending on receiving $30,000,000 additional from the federal government.

UNION LABEL

What is the objection to union-labeled products?

There would appear to be some objection or else there would be greater general demand for them.

Why not go into this matter now? The time was never more propitious for cooperative effort to popularize union-labeled products. Unionists are usually willing enough to lend aid to efforts to create demand for the label representative of their own craft. Why neglect union-made products of other crafts? Other organized craftsmen are asked to see that your label is on what they purchase. Isn't it only fair to see that their labels are on what you buy?

The union label on products of any description is indisputable evidence the goods were made by union workers, in a union shop and under union conditions. This is the main point in their favor.

By purchasing union-made products with union-earned money unionists are aiding each other. If all union-earned money were spent only for union-made products there would be no enforced idleness among members of organized labor.

Argument is heard that union-labeled products are not easy to obtain. Why aren't they? It is idle to assert that dealers will refuse to stock union-made products if shown sufficient demand exists. Why not create that demand?

Once in a while unionists declare this or that nonunion product is better suited to their taste than union-made goods of a similar kind. Is taste a matter of principle? Isn't it a cultiveted sense? Did the founders of organized labor consider taste when formulating the principles upon which the movement is predicated?

No unionist can justify his attitude of noncompliance or indifference unless and until he has exhausted all reasonable efforts to obtain for himself and his home products that bear the symbol of fair labor. There are, perhaps, times when a certain article is unobtainable, but a quest for it may arouse sufficient interest among dealers to make it easy to find the second time inquiry is made.

Labeled hats, shoes, cigarets and other goods are easily obtained in most sections simply because demand for them has been so great dealers have realized the wisdom of stocking them. The average merchant has slight regard for sentiment in business. He wants to handle goods that move. Move the first consignment for him and he will order the second at once.

A demand must first be created. And if organized labor does not create the demand for union-made products, who will?

United and consistent effort to create and maintain a demand for union-made products will lessen unemployment, increase wages and decrease working hours to the glory of the organized labor movement.

APITAL CITY UNIONISTS RAP LEWIS S. POPE

eclare Candidate "Unfair to Labor."

LOUTED APPEALS OF UNION PRESSMEN

mployed Non-Unionist at ay Rate Higher Than Asked for Member.

Hon. Lewis Pope, former commissioner of institutions and now a candidate for the democratic omination for governor of Tennessee, is severely censured in esolutions adopted by the Printing Pressmen and Assistants' nion of the capital city, and the osition of the pressmen is unanimously concurred in by the ashville Trades and Labor council, according to information received by The Labor World Thursday morning.

It has been a matter of common knowledge among working eople of Tennessee that Mr. ope's attitude on the convict-ontract question when he was ommissioner of institutions was onsistently opposed to the position taken by the Tennessee Fedration of Labor and the railroad rotherhoods, and the candidate's leged visit to Washington to appear before a congressional committee in opposition to the Cooper-Hawes bill is recalled in the apital city unionists' statement. he Cooper-Hawes bill, having to do with interstate transportation of convict-made products, was passed and will take effect in January of next year.

The Nashville resolution, in condemning Mr. Pope's candidacy, states that when Pope was commissioner of institutions there became a vacancy in the pressroom of the Tennessee Industrial School, through the resignation of a member of the union. An official of the pressmen, it is recounted, called on the commissioner for the purpose of arranging for a successor to the member who had resigned, but Mr. Pope was "indignant, sarcastic and very much unconcerned" over the efforts to furnish a competent workman to do such presswork to the boys at the institution.

"A scale of $38 per week was suggested at by Mr. Pope for a union man," the resolution continues, "but the man who was placed in the position, at $45 per week," was an expelled former member of the union, and one whose actions were described as antagonistic to the organization.

"We are also informed," the resolution avers, "that Mr. Pope had his political banners painted by nonunion painters."

Candidate Pope is therefore declared to be "unfit to hold public office of any kind, and especially the governorship of the State of Tennessee," and it is further

"Resolved, that a copy of these resolutions be sent to Tennessee Federation of Labor officers, cities and labor councils of the state, allied printing trades councils of the state, and all other labor organizations, asking that similar resolutions be adopted, condemning Mr. Lewis Pope's attitude and actions as unfair to the people and rendering him unfit to be governor of the state of Tennessee."

The resolution bears the signatures of W. O. Merrill, president, and J. O. Nevil, secretary-treasurer of the pressmen's union. Mr. Merrill is a vice-president of the Tennessee Federation of Labor.

Notation is also made that the resolution was unanimously concurred in by Nashville Trades and Labor council.

Nonpartisan political committees of the Tennessee Federation of Labor and the railroad brotherhoods, after consideration, indorsed the candidacy of the Hon. John McAllister for the democratic nomination, and declared Mr. McAllister to be the "best bet" among the three candidates to represent the whole people as governor.

Executive Council Demands National Conference to Plan Relief for Jobless Millions

Thirty-Hour Week Seen as Only Route Leading to Prosperity.

Congress Denounced for Failure to Act in Nation's Greatest Emergency—Gag Ruling Scored.

By CHESTER M. WRIGHT

Atlantic City, July 21.—American labor is going after the 30-hour week with all big guns unlimbered and with the profound conviction that there is no other quick way out of the current depression.

The executive council of the federation, meeting here in one of the gravest sessions of its long existence, has been laying plans for a campaign that will get results if any effort can possibly do it.

Seek National Conclave.

President Hoover has been called upon for the summoning of a great national conclave of industry for agreement upon a 30-hour week. This summons will be repeated and hammered home.

Labor also has other measures which it is not yet prepared to divulge. But it can be said that the council is deadly serious about this matter.

The action of the government in adopting the five-day week as a means of adjusting federal employes to the economy law was hailed here as a right step in leadership and as marking the end of anything longer than a five-day week in government service. The task now is to get private industry to follow.

Jobless Army Grows.

"There are eleven million unemployed now," said President Green. "By winter there will be thirteen million." He called attention to the bonus army as a most serious manifestation of unemployed. "It is in reality an army of unemployed," he said. "I am not an alarmist," he added, "and I do not think for a moment there is any likelihood of revolution, but unless we have readjustment and relief we may see more hunger marches and raids on community stores. We do not want that and it can be averted."

Labor, as a result of these sessions, will call for a special session of congress and for a relief bill far surpassing the one just passed. It will demand other legislation also.

Industry Must Act.

But labor does not expect government relief measures to solve the industrial riddle. These measures are to stimulate industry and to provide a leadership. President Green made it abundantly clear that real remedy must come from within industry and for that reason the federation is preparing to throw its whole energy into a campaign for a 30-hour week as an immediately necessary measure.

"The government does not own industry," said President Green.

As to modification, he held that the tax to be levied on beer could be used as the basis for a great bond issue with which to finance construction and employment. But always it is in mind that governmental action is a starter—a key, as he puts it—and that private industry must be brought, not only to the 30-hour week, but to a realization that hours of work and wages must be constantly adjusted and readjusted to industrial conditions, so that depression shall not again occur.

Congress Is Denounced.

The session of congress just closed was plentifully denounced as having failed of its duty. The relief measure enacted was denounced as wholly inadequate. The report of the U. S. Council of Personnel Administration, recommending the five-day week for federal workers, was praised highly and Mr. Green gave President Hoover the major portion of credit for the achievement. "We regard this action on the part of the government as recognition of a very vital economic and social reform for which organized labor has contended for many years," Mr. Green declared. "It will have a very helpful effect on the efforts organized labor is putting forth to have the five-day week established in private industry. I regard this action as a great step forward in the establishment of the universal five-day week."

Scores Gag Ruling.

President Green was equally vigorous in denouncing the order of the civil service commission forbidding federal employes from participating in politics, declaring that if the order were enforced, or if an effort should be made toward its enforcement a congressional investigation would be demanded.

The protest grew out of the ruling of the civil service commission and Postmaster-General Brown in ruling that President W. M. Collins, of the Railway Mail association, has no right to furnish to his members an analysis of the votes of congressmen. This autocratic civil service ruling is going to get a genuine test in the interest of citizenship rights for civil service employes.

Iron Molders Change Meeting Schedule

Regular meetings of Local 68, Iron Molders, have been changed from the first and third Friday nights of each month to the first Friday only, according to announcement by James O'Connor, corresponding secretary of the lodge. Mr. O'Connor said the change will be effective at least during the hot weather. The next regular session is for Friday, Aug. 5, at Central Labor hall.

COTTON MILL SHUT-DOWN.

Charlotte, N. C.—The board of governors of the American Cotton Manufacturers' association unanimously recommended that employers in the industry close their mills for one month, during July, August and September. The board made no recommendations with regard to supporting the textile employes during the shut-down.

Miners Will Take Food in 10 Days If State Fails, Solons Are Told

Owners Advised to Make Inventories So They May Have Record of "Requisitions" If Legislature Fails to Act, Union Officials Declare in Harrisburg.

Harrisburg, July 21.—Michael F. Hartneady, president of District 7 of the United Mine Workers of America, told a legislative committee that unless the legislature provides adequate relief for the unemployed within the next ten days that miners in his district will go into the warehouses and stores and take the food that they need.

"I am advising all warehouses and storekeepers in my part of the state to take an inventory because we propose to help ourselves to whatever food is needed unless the commonwealth provides aid at once," Hartneady said.

John F. Boylan, president of District No. 1, declared that if the legislature didn't act soon that the hard coal counties would march 50,000 starving people down to Harrisburg for the members of the general assembly to feed.

Kennedy Sees No Sin.

Thomas Kennedy, secretary-treasurer of the United Mine Workers, the main speaker, declared he had consulted religious leaders, who had assured him that it was no sin to take the means to maintain life if these were denied by unrighteous means.

About 500 jobless workers from Philadelphia and the hard coal regions attended the hearing, which was to have been a joint session of the two houses. Directly affronting the federation of labor, the senate and assembly adjourned at 11 in the morning and adjourned until late at night, when the unemployed and labor leaders had left for their homes.

Clarence Moser, secretary of Central Labor union, Allentown, said:

"Hundreds of thousands of babies and young children in Pennsylvania are either starving or are deprived of proper nourishment and clothing. If the children and wives of the members of the general assembly were in these straits adequate relief would have been enacted within twenty-four hours. This is proven by the fact that the only thing this body has done so far is to vote its own wages."

Thousands in Distress.

Martin F. Brennan, Shamokin, president of District No. 9, United Mine Workers, said:

"There are no funds available for relief in Northumberland or Schuylkill counties. Twenty thousand miners in this district have no employment and are permanently out of jobs. From ten to twenty thousand additional men are working only one to two days a week and are not earning enough to have a decent livelihood. Families all over the district are wanting for bread and milk."

"I'LL SHOW YOU HUNGER"

By PATRICK FAGAN
President, District 5, United Mine Workers, Pittsburgh.
(Addressing the Legislative Committee at Harrisburg.)

I say that I will show members of the legislature miners along the Ellsworth branch at Bentleyville, employes of the Bethlehem Mines corporation, who are living right now off potato peelings and nothing else.

I will show members of this legislature men who are going into the mines with nothing in their buckets but water.

I will show you men who carry a handful of oats from the mangers of the mules as their only food for a day's work.

Let me tell of a typical case illustrating the treatment of the poor in this commonwealth. Miss Lillian Lane, who is an investigator for the poor board in Washington county, visited the home of a family named Williams at Avella. Miss Lane saw a dog lying on the porch of this home.

"You must be getting along pretty well since you haven't eaten the dog," Miss Lane told the Williams family.

WAGE-CUTTING SAPS LIFE-BLOOD FROM INDUSTRY

America Can Only Live on Pay Rolls.

STATISTICS SHOW INTERESTING FACTS

"Cut Wages and Business Goes to Hell," Terse Announcement of Wright.

By CHESTER M. WRIGHT.

Washington, July 21. — Striking proof that cutting wages is nothing less than cutting the throat of industry itself, and that America must live on her own payrolls is found in a group of figures just gathered by leading statistical institutions.

The downward crash of retail business, for example, in May of this year was the direct reflection of new wage cuts and added unemployment just prior to that month.

The wage cutters are the prosperity killers and the figures prove it.

Those who follow the volume of retail sales announce that "contraction of consumer buying became suddenly and glaringly apparent" when May figures were published.

First Pay Rolls Dropped.

But in March unemployment went over the ten million mark!

Pay rolls fell 2.8 per cent in March from the February level and dropped another 7.3 per cent in April, continuing into May with another slice off of 4.9 per cent.

Metal industries pay rolls, which formerly ran to 40 per cent of total manufacturing pay rolls, today stand at only 38 per cent of their 1929 level in identical plants of 202 companies covered by an Iron Age survey.

Business Week puts it succinctly: "What happened to May sales happened to pay rolls first."

The great argument of the wage-cutters has been, "cut wages so business will revive." They have gone so far as to say, "cut wages and business WILL revive."

Cut Wages, Kill Business.

Cold-as-ice statistics now prove that the truth is: "Cut wages and business goes to hell."

The average weekly wage of employed workers in some 25 industries reporting to the National Industrial Confertnce board is but $17.58, a drop of 5 per cent from March.

Not only have the burst of unemployment and the new low level of wages cut hard into sales, which must again back up into lowered factory production and more unemployment, but these factors have brought about two other striking results: 1—Decrease in life insurance sales; 2—withdrawals of savings from banks.

Early in the depression critics wondered at the growth of savings deposits. That period is well past. Savings deposits are dwindling. The federal reserve bank of Cleveland, probably typical, reports persistent reductions in savings in 27 banks of that district, without interruption since April, 1931. In May this year such deposits were 19 millions less than a year ago, a fall of 15½ per cent.

Must Use Savings.

New York state mutual savings bank reports show that in May withdrawals exceeded deposits by 21 millions.

Wage cuts have been nowhere near the figure set by high finance and what generally is known as Wall Street, but they have been sufficient to eat deep into American consuming power and add months to the depression by the unavoidable slowing up of factory production. Added to this slowing up for want of buying power is the slowing up caused by fear, which has been sufficiently keen to bring about a condition where minimum stocks are carried on all sides.

But the wage cut has been the first and fieriest devil in the inferno of depression, aided and abetted by a partner of perhaps equal stature, the excessive work-hours per week.

An Interpretation

Chapter VI

JESUS' EVALUATION OF LIFE
Part VIII

Ye have heard that it was said by them of old time ... but I say unto you ...

Matt. 5:21-28.

In continuing this week our study of the dangers surrounding the more acceptance of Jesus' assertions regarding His authority and the validity of His message we must remember that throughout His ministry serious charges were being constantly brought against Him. To His contemporaries these charges were indeed very serious and may be grouped under three heads—blasphemy (Mk. 2:7), irreligious conduct (Mk. 2:24) and insanity (Mk. 3:21). In making Jesus pay the extreme penalty for what they declared to be His wrongdoing the leaders of the Jews fully demonstrated they regarded these charges as a life and death matter.

WM. L. MOSS

The average person, at least until he has given the subject particular attention, is hardly aware of the numerous times statements made by Jesus defining His person and His teaching and justifying His acts were made during or shortly following an attack by His enemies and at a time when He was standing with His back to the wall, so to speak, and fighting not to defend His reputation but to preserve His life.

Now, our experience as human beings teaches us that when hard pressed by their enemies men will, almost instinctively it seems, indulge in all manner of wild statements as a part of their defense.

Knowing, as we surely do, that the leaders of the Jewish nation were the aggressors in their conflicts with Jesus, and knowing full well how prone men are to defend themselves with uncontrolled and preposterous statements, especially in respect to their personal or official powers and the authority by which they act, it is good judgment and not groundless doubts that prompts to to study further the nature of Jesus' teaching before finally passing on whether He was or was not a teacher of universal truths.

In order that we may next week study another phase of the universality of the Master's teaching and that we may get as rapidly as possible to a discussion of a very important saying of His, I think we can safely leave the question of His references to His authority where He left it. To the repeated demand for divine corroboration of His right to teach He was always content to appeal to God as His witness! "My doctrine," said Jesus, "is not mine, but his that sent me. If any man will do his (God's) will, he shall know of the doctrine, whether it be of God, or whether I speak of myself." (John 7:16-17.)

To the good man, the right-thinking man, Jesus is self-evidencing. True, but why is this so—is it true solely because of the personality of Jesus backed by His claims of authority or is it true because of a combination of certain inherent qualities found in both Jesus and His message?

LABOR QUERIES

Q.—Are there union men in the bonus army now in Washington?

A.—Yes, there are unemployed union members in the army, but union men as such are not taking part in the determination of policies.

Q.—Is there relation between the ancient guilds and modern unions?

A.—As far as organic relationship is concerned, there is none, at least where American unions are concerned. There is only the tradition of banding together for mutual protection and advancement.

WHY NOT THE 30-HOUR WEEK NOW?

Using the figures as of March this year, general introduction of the 30-hour week would put all unemployed Americans at work.

No other single measure will do that.

The more unemployment grows the shorter must be the work-week for all if all are returned to work.

Must we go on to further depression and desperation before American industry and its banker bosses realize the necessity for genuine and sweeping remedy?

Eight months ago a 35-hour week would have put all back at work.

If unemployment gains just a little more it will take a 25-hour week to put all at work.

The American Federation of Labor's figures as of March are authentic, based on actual statistical reports of jobs and jobless.

It will not be possible to say "O. K. America" until all Americans are at work and all Americans cannot be given jobs until the work week is reduced so that the total amount of work available is divided in terms of not more than 30 hours of work per week per worker.

What delays this just and fair arrangement? Why cannot American employers see the necessity and do the inevitable?

Let America go to the universal 30-hour week NOW!

Again the Food Budget

If all food budgeteers for charity organizations were to be told to cease and desist the world might be better off.

A fresh case bobs up. The dietician of the Brooklyn Bureau of Charities calculates that $7.55 a week will feed a family of father, mother, two boys 13 and 5, and a girl of 10—a family of five.

Probably the lady is correct. Perhaps they could live and maintain health for less in some communities. "Health" has many definitions and so has decency and so has comfort.

But every such calculation registers upon every employer who thinks in terms of "feeding the animals" and adds to the dirty ammunition with which he shoots at standards of living every time they get above the bare subsistence level.

The Romance of Bata

Death of Thomas Bata, Czecho-Slovakian shoe king, in an airplane crash, has moved newspaper writers to rhapsodize about the romance of his business life.

Born the son of a poor cobbler, Bata rose like a rocket. His big move was to come to America, learn machine shoe production and then to take American machinery to his home land where he added low wages to almost automatic production, exporting to the United States shoes made on American lasts at wages that Americans could not and would not meet.

This is what a lot of newspapers call romance.

Civil Service Serfdom

When civil service employes can be successfully ordered to keep out of politics and make no effort to defeat or elect candidates to political office something is getting mighty rotten.

The customary order has gone out to the rank and file. But federal district attorneys, United States marshals and postmasters can work to their hearts' content for those who gave them their jobs. In fact, they have to work in the political vineyard.

Civil service czars run something very much like a bureaucracy. And another prancing bureaucrat is the comptroller-general.

The civil service order inflicts a status akin to serfdom and is contrary to every logical and constitutional idea of human freedom. It is time bureaucrats got a proper conception of American liberty and were made to practice it.

Greatness in Our Midst

Of late there has been a Niagara of words describing the marvelous qualities of presidential aspirants. A whole group of men have been described as miracle men, able to lead us out of the wilderness of woe.

There seemed something strange about the fact that gentlemen making nominating speeches should be able to bring to national attention so many new facts about the heroic abilities of these candidates, everyone of whom is or recently has been in public office, performing where all could see.

It is passing strange with what tremendous success so many can cover up their miraculous qualities until it comes time for someone to make a nominating speech.

But when that time comes all secrets are bared and we discover to what an astounding extent we have been entertaining greatness unawares.

Grasshoppers and Humans

A scientist has discovered a remarkable similarity between grasshoppers and humanity.

Grasshoppers, he finds, do not start out on mass forays to destroy crops until they are overcrowded. Then they change their dispositions, even their shapes and color, and start out ravaging. Like humans, being too crowded and hungry, they go on the march hunting food.

It is the idea that if the hoppers can be kept from getting too crowded they will not turn into locust scourges and crops will be saved from their mob appetites.

AS THE WORKER SEES HIS WORLD

Bureau of labor statistics reports group life insurance has grown 84 per cent in the last five years.

Farm wages are now reported at the lowest point since 1902. In North Carolina wages for colored farm workers are reported as low as 4 and 5 cents an hour, with whites faring little better.

Congress has postponed two proposed investigations, one aimed at the treasury, one at the federal reserve board.

Formation of an advisory group, known as the Occupational Health council, is announced by Commissioner Smith, state labor department. The council will study occupational health problems, bring the best advice to the department and disseminate occupational disease information.

Farm prices, with livestock leading, moved upward in the first half of July.

What Next!

Long Island, N. Y., fruit growers wrapped their strawberries in cellophane this year and found they thus brought higher prices.

TEXTILE WORKERS WIN STRIKE.

Hillsboro, N. H.—The 130 striking employes of the Hillsboro Woolen mills voted to return to work after the company agreed to restore 50 per cent of a proposed wage cut of 60 per cent.

Old Timers of Times Job Office

(By Courtesy of the Junior Times, "House Organ" of the Morning Paper.)

Pictured above is a group of printers who worked in the Times job room thirty-three years ago, taken from an old photograph furnished The Junior Times by T. J. Davie. Reading from left to right they are:

T. A. Rogers, now city editor of the "big" Times; Aruna Clark, who turned preacher and is now holding a pastorate in north Alabama; J. Spence Stone, deceased; T. J. Davie, now in charge of the composing room of the Hamilton County Herald; Sam Gamble, foreman, now in North Carolina; Charles Guy, deceased, and Col. W. M. ("Bill") Stone, superintendent, deceased.

Col. "Bill" and Spence Stone, brothers, were both musicians as well as printers, and to the former goes the credit for starting Roland Hays, famous negro tenor, on his career. On the back of the photo Mr. Davie had inscribed:

"A TIRED BUNCH"

"Employes of the Times Job Room, Taken After a Hard Day's Work."

The Times job room was the leading establishment of the kind in Chattanooga, doing all the work for the Southern Express company, and besides the regular commercial work, printed The Tradesman, a trade journal owned by Adolph S. Ochs.

The Passing Show

Note and Comment on Things Doing in the March of Events

Louis Bringmann, clinging to an old sea chest, his sole property, had made himself a home on the top landing of the fire escape of the Atlantic theater, in Brooklyn. The theater is not in use.

Fire inspectors found him and ordered the police department to make the wan and tired .60-year-old man move out. The policeman sent to do the job hated it and gave the old man a half dollar.

Immaculate, but aged and hopeless, Louis Bringmann took his chest and his blanket and trudged toward "Tin Mountain," that waterfront city of homes of the beaten men. Once he was a chef in a famous New York hotel. "The past is a turned-over page," he says. "I'm too old even for dish washing; I have no money; my friends are gone."

"Tin Mountain" has a new inhabitant—Tin Mountain with its cynically named Prosperity boulevard.

Solidarity and determination can still win.

What the building trades in New York did, inspired by the Bricklayers, employed by New Jersey Public Service have just done.

These members of the Amalgamated Association of Street and Electric Railway Employes, one of the scrappingest of unions, have just made the big corporation back down on a drastic wage cut and have forced an open wage clause into the contract.

Another fighting New Jersey outfit is found in Trenton, where motion picture operators have for three weeks been fighting a big theater, standing solidly for the safe two men to a booth principle and against a wage cut.

Florida, where politicians learn little and learn that little slowly, is in the throes of another prison camp scandal, one a hideous fatality in one of the terror hot boxes exposed a year ago.

Investigation now is on, but Florida authorities knew all about the prison camp practices long before these two deaths. At least almost everyone else did.

Florida, so alert in many ways, clings to the medieval in dealing with its offenders, many of whom offend only because economic conditions drive them to flout laws under which that or starvation are the alternatives.

There's a lot of talk about "back to the farm." The land is a refuge for many, but it is not a solution of the economic problem. Farm crops are in a state of surplusage. Less silly talk would help a little.

FIVE-DAY WEEK.

New York.—Officials of the New York Central railroad announced the application of the five-dey week to clerical employes not bound by trade union contracts. It was stated that union employes whose contracts call for the six-day week would be furloughed to about 13 per cent of their number.

New York.—The Colgate-Palmolive-Peet company placed its operatives on a five-day week basis with five days pay.

Boston, Mass.—The Somersworth plant of the Dwight Manufacturing company, closed in every department for four weeks, began operations on a five-day week basis.

Green Pledges War On All Racketeering

Report of Investigation by McGrady Before Executive Council Brings Declaration That Movement Must Be Untainted.

Atlantic City, July 21.—A report by Edward F. McGrady, who has for weeks been investigating charges involving conduct of the New York local union of Moving Picture Machine Operators, was this week placed before the executive council of the A. F. of L. here. The charges deal with the conduct of affairs by Local Union President Samuel Kaplan. William C. Elliott, international president, was before the council and promised to give the matter immediate attention.

President Green said, in relation to the question of racketeering:

"When charges were recently made and received widespread circulation in the press concerning alleged acts of members and officers of local unions we decided that these charges involved the honor and the integrity of the federation. We made inquiries and brought the facts adduced to the attention of the officers of the international unions. We expect the responsible international union officers to take prompt action where action is warranted."

NEW YORK SOCIALISTS DEMAND $75,000,000 FOR IDLE RELIEF

Utica, N. Y.—The convention of the socialist party of New York state urged a special session of the New York legislature to make available for immediate unemployment relief $25,000,000 raised through a 50 per cent increase in the income tax and declared that the bond issue this fall for unemployment relief should be $75,000,000 rather than $30,000,000. The convention also decided to organize unemployment leagues through local socialist organizations.

Bituminous Coal Stabilization Is Necessary, Senator Davis Asserts

Pennsylvanian Says Opposition to Davis-Kelly Bill Comes Mainly From Anti-Union Operators—Economic Conditions Make Government Regulation Imperative.

Washington, July 21.—Senator James J. Davis, of Pennsylvania, in an individual report as a member of the subcommittee of the senate committee on mines and mining, made a vigorous defense of the Davis-Kelly bill for the stabilization of the bituminous coal industry. The other members of the subcommittee are Senator D. H. Hatfield, of West Virginia, and Senator Cary Hayden, of Arizona. The subcommittee spent a number of months holding hearings on the Davis-Kelly bill, drafted jointly by Senator Davis and Representative Clyde Kelly, of Pennsylvania.

The principal features of the Davis-Kelly bill are:

The creation of a federal bituminous coal commission, all the expense of which shall be borne by the coal industry.

The requirement that coal mining corporations doing an interstate business shall obtain a federal license.

The provision that licensed corporations may join a selling pool or joint selling agency for the marketing of their product.

The stipulation that employes of coal mines shall have the right of collective bargaining, the right to organize, and the right of assemblage.

Antiunion Operators Vision "Socialism."

Senator Davis in his report said in part:

"By far the largest group of operators who appeared before the committee were from the ununionized fields. In general they opposed all legislation and government interference on the ground that the coal industry, whatever the results might be, had the right to work out its own problems.

"The arguments of the opponents of the measure were not at all convincing. They gave the impression that they were used as an instrument to destroy the bill and at the same time to control their real grounds of opposition. This impression was irresistible for the reason that their constitutional arguments were interspersed with declarations to the effect that the Davis-Kelly bill would 'promote socialism,' 'unionize the coal industry,' and 'Sovietize America.'

It is possible, indeed, that prompt action in the rehabilitation of the bituminous coal industry may be the turning point toward general economic recovery.

Regulation Is Necessary.

"I desire to emphasize the need of regulation of the bituminous coal mining industry. It is essential from the standpoint of operator, mine workers, mining communities, and the general public.

"Outside of the nonunion mining fields, the opinion among operators is in favor of the Davis-Kelly bill, or some effective form of stabilization.

"From my personal conversations with many operators I believe that the industry as a whole is convinced that stabilization and normal conditions within the industry can only be obtained by the federal government acting as an umpire.

"The need for constructive action in the bituminous coal industry, great as it has been for a long period of time, is now doubly great because of the serious condition of our whole economic life.

"No one believes that existing conditions in the bituminous coal industry can be continued without disaster. Bituminous coal is, and long has been, the most disorganized of all our natural resources.

Operators Have Failed.

"The Davis-Kelly bill is no hastily framed piece of legislation. In its main principles it has been under consideration for years. The evils it is designed to correct are well known. The public has been patient to the breaking point. It has granted the industry years of grace to set its house in order and the industry has failed to do so.

"The regulation now proposed is the only way out of an intolerable situation, and now is the time to act.

"We must meet and face the situation as it exists. Through a coal commission acting as an umpire in the public interest and without cost to the government, I believe a great step forward can be taken.

Davis-Kelly Bill Is Constructive.

"The Davis-Kelly bill contemplates nothing more than an opportunity for the operators on the one hand and the miners on the other to work out of the slough of cut-throat competition that is bankrupting the operators, starving the miners, and pauperizing the mining communities.

"It gives them the machinery to work out their problems with a minimum of legislative regulation or government interference, and in a manner consonant with our institutions and traditions, our ideas of property and property rights and the right of collective bargaining, which is universally recognized as the only protection that labor, especially mine labor, has against an incessant wage deflation.

"If the coal operator and the coal miner will accept this program and work together in the interest of all parties concerned, I am confident they will be able to bring this great industry out of the doldrums which now keep it helpless.

"And now is the time of all times to act. It is possible, indeed, that prompt action in the rehabilitation of the bituminous coal industry may be the turning point toward general economic recovery."

Senator Hatfield submitted a report opposing federal regulation of the coal industry. Senator Hayden favored federal regulation, but set out a plan different from the Davis-Kelly bill.

Hoover Urged to Call Industrial Conference to Cut Work Time

Atlantic City, N. J. — President Hoover should promptly convene a national industrial conference to consider the critical aspects of the depression and propose plans to remedy its most distressing features, declared William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor, at the summer meeting of the executive council of the federation here.

"A national conference of leaders of industry and all other employing interests should be called by the president," Mr. Green said, "at which time he should impress upon them not only the economic gravity of the crisis, but their patriotic obligation to meet this emergency as they would in war time or on any other occasions of threatened national disaster."

Ten Million Unemployed.

With over ten million workers totally unemployed and the number increasing every week, Mr. Green believed that the major question coming before the conference would be the universal adjustment of working time to distribute available work among the largest number of employes.

"Such a conference," he said, "could confer the benefit of the shorter work day and work week on all employes on a national basis. Some companies have established the five-day week for their employes already. By this means they divide up all available work among their own employes, but such action by a few companies has no national effect."

"The unemployment emergency is as great as the war emergency. The nation must be saved. If we cannot give our people more work at once, we can divide whatever work there is available among all and so gradually bring the unemployed into the ranks of consumers again and perhaps start the wheels of industry going."

Unemployed Union Members.

Mr. Green pointed out that 23 per cent of the members of the organizations affiliated with the A. F. of L. are unemployed, and that in the building trades the unemployed reach 62 per cent.

He emphasized the necessity of the division of work being national in scope, and said that probably because of constitutional difficulties, it could not be achieved by legislation. But the national industrial conference, which he urged President Hoover to call, could by agreement make the distribution of work effective.

Reconstruction Finance Corporation Fails.

With regard to the Reconstruction Finance corporation, Mr. Green expressed keen disappointment that its activities had not been more helpful in providing work for the jobless. He said the corporation had probably stabilized the banking situation, but unemployment was worse. He believed the masses of the people had not benefited directly from the creation of the corporation, but might have benefited indirectly from the work of the corporation in the interest of the banks.

"Federal funds will have to be made available for the use of relief agencies to meet the acute situation next winter, for conditions at that time will be extremely bad," he added. "Local relief agencies have broken down and many states have exhausted their resources available for relief."

Referring to the recent demonstrations of the unemployed in Detroit and St. Louis, in which a number of persons were killed and many injured, he said responsible leaders were hoping to forestall similar incidents by the prompt use of funds for relief.

BRIDGEMEN ADOPT 4-HOUR DAY

New York.—C. A. Howard, representative of Bridgemen, Ironworkers and Riggers' Local 4, announced that the union had gone on record as favoring the "stagger zigzag" plan of, having one group of men work four hours a day, to be followed by another group working four hours.

Make-Up Man's Fine Sense Of Values Results in "Radical" Sermon

The New York Times recently printed one of the sharpest, bitterest, most effective "radical" sermons I read, says Eliot Harris, special writer in "Labor."

It was a sermon in two parts, both on an important news page. The first part of the sermon said that John D. Rockefeller had just celebrated his 93rd birthday. Rockefeller, according to the Times article, lives in the isolation of a 3,000-acre estate, with barbed wire fences around it, and patroled by nearly 100 armed negro guards.

His slightest whim is law. He seems to have a fear of human beings near him; and preparations are being rushed to house the chauffeurs, gardeners, workmen and most of the house servants outside the estate, where Mr. Rockefeller cannot see or hear them.

Houses of neighbors are being purchased, first to paint them green, so that Rockefeller may not see them among the trees; then to be torn down.

A children's home is near enough that voices and laughter sometimes reach the Rockefeller mansion when the wind is right, and negotiations are being pushed to buy that.

On the same page, right under Rockefeller's uninteresting picture, was one of the best little "human interest" stories that any American newspaper ever printed. It was the story of Louis Bringmann, once a hotel chef, but now "too old even to wash dishes." He has no money, no job, no friends—at least, none who is able to help him.

But he still has that curious ingenuity which cooks and sailors share with frontiersmen, and he made himself a nest on the top landing of the fire escape on an unused theater by weaving cardboard into the grillwork. Over his nest he put up a sign:

"Please be kind enough not to destroy or take anything away from this resting place. I am out of work and this is all I have. I have no money and I can't find a job, so please leave me alone. I'll appreciate your kind consideration and

THANK YOU."

He was making out, keeping himself and his nest immaculately clean the while, until the fire inspector discovered him and sent a policeman to evict him. The policeman, hating himself for the job, gave the old man the message and a half dollar, and saw him plod slowly away to a part of the water front where out-of-works have built a "jungle."

I am still wondering whether the "make-up" man on the Times knew what he was about when he put those two stories together. And I wish the reporter who wrote the second one would take some cheering news to Mr. Bringmann. Old man Rockefeller says that the depression will pass. Mr. Bringmann will be glad to know that.

Hosiery Workers Plan Campaign Of Organization

Convention Appropriates $18,000 to Begin Pennsylvania - New Jersey Battle to Win and Hold "Decent Union Conditions."

Philadelphia, Pa., July 21.—Immediately the American Federation of Full Fashioned Hosiery Workers' union will embark on an aggressive organization campaign in Reading, open-shop hosiery center of the country, as the result of action taken by the biennial convention here.

The drive was ordered when the report of the organization committee embodying instructions for the campaign was adopted.

The resolution declared that widespread and aggressive organization is essential to establish and preserve "decent union conditions" and the very existence of the union. It provided for the extension of the organization drive to other towns in Eastern Pennsylvania and Western New Jersey.

It also provided for an initial appropriation of $18,000 for the drive, assistance for the union's organizers by volunteer workers and by extensive propagandization, etc.

Curtailment of the state's labor services was assailed vigorously. The delegates also unanimously adopted a resolution demanding repeal of state eviction laws, a moratorium on all realty taxes and mortgage interests against unemployed and part-time workers. This resolution also embodied a provision prohibiting forcible collection of rents and was transmitted to Gov. Pinchot and the members of the state legislature now in special session at Harrisburg. The union also was instructed to place the rent and tax moratorium before the state federation of labor for inclusion in its demands to the special session at the joint hearing on the federation's program Tuesday afternoon.

The convention also reaffirmed the union's stand for unemployment insurance.

SEZ WHICH

By H. F. B.

Editor Labor World:

I am writing today for a little information, if you please, concerning proper wearing apparel for this sort of weather. Being a native of Georgia, you know, I am of course accustomed to hot weather—at least in moderate quantity. But when it, like our celebrated Hoover prosperity, piles up in such vast proportions and temperature as this infernal Tennessee weather we've been having for some time, now, it is about to get my goat.

I've discovered that I am at least two and a half degrees cooler at night if I will roll my pajama legs up above my knees and roll the sleeves above my elbows, and it occurrs to me that it would be a good idea for the pajama makers to get out a line of sleeveless jackets and knee-length pants for the suit with wide legs so the air can circulate for summer wear. I'd cut the sleeves and legs of mine off if I had any real hope of being able to buy more this winter. And these I have will still be good then.

And—this gives me a second idea for masculine daytime wear in this sort of weather. It is rather daring, but if the girls (God bless 'em!) can get by with it I don't see why we men folks shouldn't do likewise. Why not wear cheesecloth pants? They'd be a darned sight cooler than the present day custom of long, flowing wool trousers, and it wouldn't hurt our, 'er limbs for the dear women folks to be able to see through those pants any more than—'er—vice versa!

If, among your honored advertisers you have any makers of pajamas, I wish you'd send him a marked copy of this. If he thinks he owes me anything for this valuable suggestion he might send me three suits of those abbreviated pajamas and call it square. I believe that's all I have to say at present. It's too hot to write!

SENATE DEFERS ACTION ON BEER AMENDMENT

Washington.—The senate voted to send the Bingham beer proposal to the judiciary committee. This action ended prohibition discussion for the present session of congress.

Senator Bingham's proposal was to modify the national prohibition act so as to permit the manufacture and sale of beer of 3.45 per cent alcoholic content by volume. He submitted it as an amendment to the home loan bill, but later withdrew it because of parliamentary maneuvering.

Are you sure you are always welcome?

Neighbors may borrow freely from each other and remain friendly so long as each is always careful to return in full measure the things borrowed.

But when you borrow the use of your neighbor's telephone, you are borrowing something you can't return. It may be all right for a while, but eventually the best of neighbors are likely to be annoyed even though they remain friendly.

Think how much better it would be to have a telephone in your own home, where you could use it as often as you pleased without embarrassing yourself or others.

Consider how important telephone service is to the comfort and happiness of the entire family, what it means in added convenience, in emergencies and as a protection. Truly there is nothing that gives so much for so little as telephone service. In fact, the cost is so small that it really doesn't pay to try to do without it.

Go to your Union Meetings

Don't say you are too tired; the weather is bad; or there is too much quibbling and "hot air" to interest me.

Every time you miss a meeting and leave it to the other fellow to look out for your interest, you are doing an injustice both to yourself and your organization.

Your views on especially vital subjects should be represented in discussion and by vote, and the only way for this to be done is for you to be at your union meeting.

You are responsible for the good and welfare of your organization, and non-attendance of union meetings on your part is not excuse enough for you to voice your opinion after a measure has been passed. It is then time for you to concur in what has been done and work in harmony with the officers and other members of your union.

Go to your union meetings regularly and induce others to do the same, because one important thing to remember is the meaning of the slogan:

"United we stand,
Divided we fall."

Labor and the Courts

By GEORGE F. SAMUELS

Written for The Labor World

CHAPTER I

It is vain to suppose that solutions can be attained merely by logic and general propositions of law which nobody disputes.
—Justice Holmes.

WE have been taught to believe "a good citizen" will not criticize our courts regarding adverse labor decisions and yet Chief Justice Cullen, of New York, has said that the "legal inconsistancies and . . . doctrines if asserted in litigations arising under any other subject than labor legislation would meet scant courtesy or consideration" by intelligent citizens.

But why does a man become a "bad" citizen, one whose opinions are detrimental to the best interests of the nation, simply because he criticizes our courts for their decisions in labor cases? Do not thousands of our most intelligent and progressive citizens criticize both court procedure and decisions in cases pertaining to every other phase of life and do they not do this every day of the year and no one thinks of calling them "bad" citizens?

If mere criticism of our courts is a crime, as it has amounted to when friends of labor and labor leaders have criticized certain labor decisions in the past, why wasn't a penitentiary sentence meted out to the New York City newspaper editor who, in a long editorial, assailed the courts of New York state for permitting Vannie Higgins (a once notorious but now dead gangster) to "beat the rap" oftener than once every eighteen months for a period extending over seventeen years? If criticism of our courts is a crime for friends of labor and labor leaders, why wasn't Prof. E. Borchart, of Yale Law school, jailed for recently publishing a book the text of which describes sixty-five cases from late court records in which accused persons were convicted of crimes of which they later were proved absolutely innocent?

BISHOP OLDHAM SEES DIVINE PURPOSE IN THE DEPRESSION

New York.—The Right Rev. G. Ashton Oldham, bishop of the Protestant diocese of Albany, urged the congregation at the Cathedral of St. John the Divine to recognize a divine purpose in the depression, despite the fact that an army of 10,000,000 workers are totally unemployed and living in destitution subject to the relief of public and private charity.

"Christians in these trying times—and there have been worse—should walk through life with a certain poise and with confidence in the knowledge that God is still working to bring good out of evil," he said.

Doctors have proved that an ordinary person retains only one-fifth of what he hears. Which goes to prove that a woman isn't an "ordinary person."

30-HOUR WEEK MUST FOLLOW BIG RELIEF BILL TO END DEPRESSION

If Adopted by Only Half of Industry It Would With Federal Program, Put Seven Million at Work, Cowdin Holds — Sees System Menaced Unless Drastic Action Is Taken.

New York City, July 21.—Speaking over a national hook-up of the Columbia Broadcasting system, J. Cheever Cowdin, treasurer of the recently-closed war against depression campaign, declared that employment for seven million unemployed would follow if, in addition to the relief bill, the 30-hour work-week could be adopted by only 50 per cent of American employers. On the same basis of calculation general adoption of the 30-hour week would practically eliminate unemployment.

Mr. Cowdin is the originator of the self-liquidating program contained in the relief bill, is vice-president of the Bancamerica-Blair corporation and treasurer of the American Legion employment commission.

The address contained a complete analysis of the relief bill and declared that modification of the Volstead act would be a part of a genuine relief program.

High tribute was paid to Senators Robinson, Wagner and Barbour for "qualities of the highest statesmanship, honesty of purpose and unselfishness" and they were pronounced "deserving the nation's gratitude."

Holding that employment for a million and a half could be expected as a result of the relief bill, Mr. Cowdin called this a material help toward recovery, adding, "but I feel confident you will agree with me that an essential prerequisite to any sustained, upward movement in business is the permanent employment of vast additional numbers of those now unemployed."

Must Spread Work.

"I therefore," Mr. Cowdin contiued, "on June 27 addressed the American Legion, the American Federation of Labor and the Association of National Advertisers, who have for months been working unselfishly and effectively to serve our country and its unemployed, and are deserving of your thanks and support.

"I urged upon them, as I now urge upon you, in the most emphatic manner at my disposal, the necessity of a nation-wide movement to spread work, whether it be by means of the so-called stagger system, or the shorter week which, if accomplished by only 50 per cent of employers, would put another five and one-half millions to work. I personally advocate the adoption throughout the land of the 30-hour week with 30 hours pay, with a simultaneous increase of 10 per cent in pay rolls, so that both employers and workers will bear a fair share of the cost of putting the vast majority of those now unemployed back to work. It may result in temporarily increasing red ink figures for many companies, but if we don't, we may have to deal with a more drastic form of red in the near future.

Social Upheaval Possible.

"In my opinion, unless a plan is promptly adopted throughout the country to accomplish these ends, we are apt to have a social and economic upheaval with the gravest results.

"Our entire business and industrial system is on trial, and its willingness or unwillingness to supply employment to those now out of work and suffering will decide the issue. However, my faith in the foresight and courage of American business and American labor remains completely unshaken.

"The figures secured from authoritative sources are that on March 1 of this year there were 10,500,000 people out of work, and 21,500,000 men and women employed, with an average of 45 hours work per week.

Would "Wallop" Depression.

"This indicates that if 50 per cent of all employers of labor will adopt the 30-hour week it will return five million five hundred thousand additional people to gainful pursuits. These, added to the one million five hundred thousand people who will receive employment through the construction of self-liquidating projects, would mean a total of seven million men and women going back on pay rolls—I repeat, seven million men and women going back on pay rolls.

"I leave it to you, ladies and gentlemen, with seven million people back on pay rolls, to make up your own minds as to what that would do to this much talked about depression."

33 Evictions in Textile Strike At Arcadia Mill

Horse Creek Valley Walkout Ended With Apparent Intention of Owners to Keep Agreement.

New York City, July 21.—Declaring that the United Textile Workers' executive board at its meeting here in September will be asked by him to increase its organizing activities in the south, President Thomas F. McMahon has given International Labor News Service a review of the current situation in the southern area.

"The strike in the Horse Creek valley," President McMahon said, "which included the mills of Langley, Clearwater and Bath, S. C., was settled some time ago, with the mill officials publicly proclaiming that no discrimination would take place, and up to this writing, I believe they have lived up to their promise. The Langley mills, where the strike occurred, has not started up as yet, due to lack of orders, or so the company officials state. The other two mills are running.

"The cause of the strike was the changing of styles on one class of work to another, with insufficient price list to meet the new fabric constructions.

"The strike in the Arcadia mills, a few miles from Spartanburg, S. C., was caused by wholesale discrimination because of workers joining our organization, although some weeks prior to the strike Mr. Lignon, the president of the company, declared to John A. Peel, our organizer, that no discriminations would take place. Since the strike started, which, by the way, involves about 350 people, evictions have taken place—33 in number.

"The governor of the state has ordered what the South Carolinians call 'the road police' to strike duty. At the request of the company officials, this was done, and the sheriff of the county has sworn in a lot of deputy sheriffs.

"It is reported that two thugs have likewise been imported into the little community, for the purpose of creating chaos.

"Organizer Peel was arrested on a trumped-up charge. He is now out on $1,500 bail, provided by the president of the Central Labor union of Spartanburg, who was discharged from his work in Spartanburg when it was found out that he had gone bonds for Mr. Peel."

Death Angel Calls Mrs. L. V. Metcalf

Mrs. L. V. Metcalf, 82, mother of M. J. Metcalf, well-known member of Local 43, Plumbers and Steamfitters, passed away Wednesday midnight at the home of her daughter and son-in-law, H. W. Granert, 326 North Boynton Terrace. Mrs. Metcalf had been ill for many months, and her passing was not unexpected.

Mrs. Metcalf was born in Madison county, North Carolina, and had been a resident of Chattanooga for the past twenty-one years. She is survived by one son and four daughteres—M. J. Metcalf, Mrs. H. W. Granert, Mrs. Nancy Taliaferro, Mrs. Bessie Wooten and Mrs. Tilda Sabilla, all of this city, and one brother, John Penley, of Coxey, Ala. Several grandchildren also survive.

Funeral arrangements awaited the arrival of Mr. Penley.

The Labor World speaks for the entire movement in expressing sincerest sympathy to Brother Metcalf and other relatives of the deceased in their dark hour.

N. Y. Garment Union Votes on Big Strike

New York City, July 21.—New York organized garment workers will strike to break the deadlock in negotiations between jobbers and the union.

At a meeting of 10,000 union members called to vote on the strike reds sought to create disorder, hissing Matthew Woll when he arose to speak. Isidore Nagler, chairman of the cloakmakers' joint board, and Woll quieted the meeting, the great majority of which resented the intrusion. One disorderly red went out "on his ear."

"I am publicly announcing my alliance to the cloakmakers as represented by the International Ladies' Garment Workers' union," Mr. Woll began. "This demonstration shows the heart and the mind and the determination of the cloakmakers to be masters of themselves and not to be dictated to by your employers."

Mr. Woll told the garment workers that they were not alone in their demands for a "week work" system instead of the piece work arrangement the employers are seeking to restore. The return of the piece work system, he said, would mean the destruction of the union.

William Green, president of the A. F. of L., scheduled to speak, sent a telegram explaining that he was detained in Atlantic City presiding over a meeting of the executive council of the federation.

What is the objection to union-labeled products?

There would appear to be some objection or else there would be greater general demand for them.

Why not go into this matter now? The time was never more propitious for cooperative effort to popularize union-labeled products. Unionists are usually willing enough to lend aid to efforts to create demand for the label representative of their own craft. Why neglect union-made products of other crafts? Other organized craftsmen are asked to see that your label is on what they purchase. Isn't it only fair to see that their labels are on what you buy?

The union label on products of any description is indisputable evidence the goods were made by union workers, in a union shop and under union conditions. This is the main point in their favor.

By purchasing union-made products with union-earned money unionists are aiding each other. If all union-earned money were spent only for union-made products there would be no enforced idleness among members of organized labor.

Argument is heard that union-labeled products are not easy to obtain. Why aren't they? It is idle to assert that dealers will refuse to stock union-made products if shown sufficient demand exists. Why not create that demand?

Once in a while unionists declare this or that nonunion product is better suited to their taste than union-made goods of a similar kind. Is taste a matter of principle? Isn't it a cultivated sense? Did the founders of organized labor consider taste when formulating the principles upon which the movement is predicated?

No unionist can justify his attitude of noncompliance or indifference unless and until he has exhausted all reasonable efforts to obtain for himself and his home products that bear the symbol of fair labor. There are, perhaps, times when a certain article is unobtainable, but a quest for it may arouse sufficient interest among dealers to make it easy to find the second time inquiry is made.

Labeled hats, shoes, cigarets and other goods are easily obtained in most sections simply because demand for them has been so great dealers have realized the wisdom of stocking them. The average merchant has slight regard for sentiment in business. He wants to handle goods that move. Move the first consignment for him and he will order the second at once.

A demand must first be created. And if organized labor does not create the demand for union-made products, who will?

United and consistent effort to create and maintain a demand for union-made products will lessen unemployment, increase wages and decrease working hours to the glory of the organized labor movement.

CALISTER BILLED FOR LOCAL SPEECH ON MONDAY NIGHT

Announcement is made that the Hon. Hill McAlister, who has been indorsed by the non-partisan political committee of the Tennessee Federation of Labor and the Railroad Brotherhoods for the democratic nomination for governor, will speak Monday night on the courthouse lawn in Chattanooga. Should weather conditions be unfavorable, it was said, the address will be delivered in one of the courtrooms.

A large representation of local trades unionists is expected to hear the issues of the campaign discussed by the silver-tongued Nashvillian.

By DAVID HANLY,
Legislative Chairman, Tennessee Federation of Labor.

Nashville, Tenn., July 28.—The democratic primary to choose a nominee for governor will be held on Thursday, Aug. 4. There are three candidates—Hon. Hill McAlister, of Nashville, former Governor M. R. Patterson, of Memphis, and Erwin S. Pope, of Bledsoe county.

The non-partisan political committee of the Tennessee Federation of Labor has indorsed Mr. McAlister. He has been in public life in this state for several years. He served two terms in the general assembly of Tennessee as a senator from Davidson county in 1911 and 1913. He was recorded as voting favorably on every labor bill that was considered by the senate of the general assembly of Tennessee while he was a member.

Mr. McAlister was state treasurer from 1919 to 1927. He was not a candidate for state treasurer because of the fact that he was a candidate for the democratic nomination for governor in 1926. During his incumbency of the office of treasurer the state has not lost a penny.

Under the Horton administration over six million dollars of state funds were deposited in banks controlled by political friends of Gov. Horton. Most of this great sum of money has been lost by the state.

Because of Mr. McAlister's honesty and by reason of the confidence reposed in him, all sections of the general assembly in 1931 united and elected him state treasurer, which office he now holds.

Labor supported Mr. McAlister for the democratic nomination for governor in 1926 and in 1928. Everything that has happened since that time has justified labor in supporting Mr. McAlister on these previous occasions.

On Monday night in the city of Nashville one of the biggest crowds that ever assembled in the city heard Mr. McAlister present his claims to his citizens in his home town.

One of the candidates against Mr. McAlister is ex-Governor M. R. Patterson. He has had a long army career. While he was governor of this state the state-

PAYS TRIBUTE TO CLEMENTS

Knoxville Labor Paper Eulogizes Republican Candidate for Governnor.

"Just plain Hal, without any frills, fuss or feathers," is the way Progressive Labor, Knoxville, described the candidate for the republican nomination for governor, in an editorial in last week's issue. The old saying that "a prophet is not without honor save in his own country" is belied by the editorial opinion of the Knoxville labor editor, who sketches the private and public record of Mr. Clements from the time he entered the practice of law "as a fledgling lawyer" in that city.

Mr. Clements received the official indorsement of the nonpartisan political committee of the Tennessee Federation of Labor and the Railroad Brotherhoods, his record as a state senator having been 100 per cent. for the masses.

Progressive Labor thinks this about him:

> Sometimes men refrain from giving a movement their approval because the movement at the time is not supposed to be popular. There was a time when it was not thought politic for candates for office to ally themselves with the labor organizations. But when they found that it paid them to have the support of labor, they did not fail to make overtures to the labor organizations for support.
> From his first entrance into the practice of law in Knoxville as a fledgling lawyer, Hal Clements took the side of labor and was its firm, fast friend. When he was chairman of the republican executive committee he ever advised his republican friends in the legislature to support bills favorable to the labor interests. He counseled with the labor leaders in the state. Then when he was elected a member of the state senate he did not change his course, but kept his record clear so far as support of labor bills is concerned.
> If he should be nominated and elected governor of Tennessee we have every reason to believe that he would keep faith with labor and that he would work with them and for them in their endeavors to better the conditions of laboring people in Tennessee and in the nation.
> In addition to being a friend of labor, we know of no person in Tennessee who is more approachable than Hal Clements. To use an old simile, he is "as plain as an old shoe." The humblest citizen in the state will be able to sit down and talk with him and that humblest citizen will be given an attentive hearing and justice will be meted out to him. Hal is just plain Hal, without any frills, fuss or feathers.

Son of W. L. Moss Is Seriously Ill

Advices received by The Labor World Wednesday report the serious illness of Charles Edwin Moss, 11-months-old son of Mr. and Mrs. William L. Moss, of Nashville.

On the advice of Nashville physicians, the little one was taken to the home of Mrs. Moss' parents, at Monteagle, in the hope that the high altitude would help restore him to health.

Mr. Moss was formerly employed on the Chattanooga Times, and is a member of the Typographical union. He is best known to Labor World readers as the author of the weekly sermon which appears on the editorial page of this paper each week.

Many local friends will earnestly hope for the speedy recovery of the little one.

CANDIDATES FOR LEGISLATURE SUBMIT VIEWS ON PROGRAM OF TENNESSEE'S WORKERS

Replies to Questionnaire Mostly Indicate Favorable Attitude.

BUT ONE DECLINES, ANOTHER IGNORES

Report of Nonpartisan Committee, Recommending No Formal Indorsements Be Made, Is Unanimously Adopted.

Report of the nonpartisan political committee of Chattanooga Trades and Labor council featured Monday night's regular session of Central Body, and at the conclusion of general discussion the report and recommendations of the committee were adopted unanimously.

Personal interviews with various candidates and the submission of a questionnaire embodying the legislative program of the Tennessee Federation of Labor and the Railroad Brotherhoods were recounted by the committee, and conclusion reached, after thorough investigation, that no indorsements should be made, but the reply of each legislative aspirant should be published in The Labor World as a matter of information for trades unionists and their friends.

Every candidate in the field returned the questionnaire, with the exception of two, and the replies were, as may be seen in the following, mostly favorable—some qualified, some unqualified.

Frank Moore, candidate for the lower house, submitted a lengthy letter in lieu of the questionnaire, in which the aspirant for legislative honors declared that for him to answer would be a violation of the law.

No reply was received from J. C. Choate.

Answers of the various candidates to the questionnaire, which accompanies this article, were as follows:

FOR THE SENATE

J. Mitt Payne

Nos. 1, 2 and 3, yes. No. 4, will be glad to work to this end. No. 5, yes. No. 6, not at this time; they are operating at a loss. Nos. 7, 8 and 9, yes. No. 10, yes, I will vote for it. Nos. 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, yes. No. 20, I don't think it wise to restrict it to taxpayers. No. 21, yes.

FOR THE LOWER HOUSE.

Henry L. Barger

No. 1, yes; I think there should be some changes in this law. No. 2, yes. No. 3, if this means free text books, I am not in favor of it. My fifteen years of teaching experience has taught me that it is unsound, except for children unable to buy books. No. 4, yes. No. 5, there is a question as to the need for such a law—I would say yes for mill workers and others in the employment of large group employers. No. 6, I am not now in a position to say whether such a law is constitutional in Tennessee. I am in favor of any law that assures good service from public service corporations. No. 7, yes. No. 8, yes. No. 9, yes. No. 10, yes, with proper adjustments. No. 11, yes, absolutely. No. 12, yes. No. 13, yes. No. 14, yes; there is a question as to how far we can go in that direction, but we need legislation on this point. No. 15, yes. No. 16, yes, I also favor school teachers and all others who are and have been real producers. No. 17, yes. No. 18, yes; I assume this question has reference to registration for voting. I think registration in towns and cities should be continued. No. 19, yes. No. 20, yes, with proper qualifications. No. 21, yes.

Chas. H. Bennett

Nos. 1, 2, 3, I do. No. 4, forty-four hours for mill and industrial work and forty-eight hours for clerks, which enables purchasers to buy on Saturday afternoons. No. 5, most certainly do. Nos. 6, 7, 8, I do. No. 9, I do. Should be done immediately. No. 10, I favor either Texas or Pennsylvania law which exempts all wages from garnishment. Nos. 11, 12, 13, I do. No. 14, this legislation is of vital importance and should certainly be enacted at once. No. 15, most certainly am. No. 16, I do. No. 17, the railroads are the largest taxpayers in the state. They also have the largest payrolls. The combined taxes and payrolls of the bus lines amount to practically nothing compared with the railroads. The state has subsidized bus traffic with its high wages at the expense of its tax payers. Our fruit, truck and farming industry is practically paralyzed by the dumping of cheap and inferior produce on our markets brought in by bus transportation from out of the state. Thousands of railway employes and express employes are out of work as a direct result of this bus menace. The most rigid laws must be enacted at once to tax, regulate and control this bus situation. No. 18 and No. 19, yes. Nos. 20 and 21, I do.

George W. Chamlee, Jr.

No. 1, yes. This should have been done long ago. No. 2, yes. No. 3, yes; the benefits of our present local law on this question has proven beyond doubt that it should be extended to the state. No. 4, yes. No. 5, yes. No. 6, yes. I have already voted for a bill with this provision in the past. No. 7, yes. The right of injunction was never intended to be used for the harassing and coercion of our people. No. 8, yes, I have heretofore supported bills which would have cured this situation if they had been passed. No. 9, this should be done, by all means. This small loan law is one that is imposing a dreadful burden on the poor and needy people. No. 10, yes. No. 11, yes. I have supported every labor bill that has been presented to the legislature since I have been a member of that body. No. 12, yes. No. 13, yes. No. 14, yes. I believe that a plan can be worked out that will accomplish this and it should be done. No. 15, I am in accord with all of the labor planks of my national party. I believe that some of the planks should go further in the protection of honest labor than they do. No. 16, yes. I drew and introduced the original bill in the legislature setting the minimum salary for firemen and policemen, and I do not believe they should be reduced. No. 17, yes. I have always favored regulation of this character. No. 18, I do not know whether the general registration should be eliminated or merely cut down; however, the present period is entirely too long, and at least it should be drastically shortened. No. 19, yes. No. 20, yes. This should be carried out in every possible place. I believe that our first duty is to the citizens of our city, county and state. No. 21, yes. This law should be preserved and also amended so as to make it more equitable for the employes.

J. C. Choate.

No answer.

Sarah R. Frazier

No. 1, yes. No. 2, yes. No. 3, yes. No. 4, yes. No. 5, yes. No. 6, not only favor that, but I voted for such measure in 1927. No. 7, great care should be used in issuance of injunctions in all cases, but this can be worked out, no doubt. No. 8, yes. No. 9, yes. No. 10, yes. No. 11, yes. No. 12, yes. No. 13, yes. No. 14, I favor a bill against loss by failure of banks, if bill is drawn in proper form; depends on provisions of bill. No. 15, yes. No. 16, I most assuredly do. No. 17, I favor such a law. No. 18, I favor anything that cuts the expenses of the state. No. 19, I do. No. 20, I favor a law providing same for all citizens. No. 21, yes.

Eugene Merriam

No. 1, am open for any progressive chage. "Yes" to all other questions.

Frank Moore

Declined to answer.

Ed Robinson

"Yes" to all questions except No. 10, no answer.

Harold S. Smith

No. 1, yes. No. 2, very much so. No. 3, I should think this would be proper. I know of no objections, but confess I am not informed on the subject. No. 4, positively yes. No. 5, I certainly do. No. 6, in addition to the employment consideration from a safety standpoint as well. Being in the automobile business, I have always objected to the blocking of traffic because of long stops. No. 7, most certainly. No. 8, absolutely. No. 9, most emphatically. The legalizing of such a rate is little short of criminal. No. 10, I certainly do. No. 11, yes. No. 12, with the exception of so-called office help. I think during rush seasons these employes should put in extra hours the same as is done in any business house or bank. No. 13, yes. No. 14, it is a crime that such legislation has not already been passed. Some kind of insurance should be provided so depositors would be protected regardless of the cause of failure. No. 15, most certainly. No.

Office-Seekers Invited To Address Workers Next Tuesday Night

RAIL UNIONS DENY RUMOR

Resent Story That Legislative Ticket Has Been Indorsed by Them.

"None of the various railroad unions, so far as I am informed, has indorsed any legislative ticket," said Tom F. Hall, one of the best-known and most active railroaders in Chattanooga, in denying a widespread report that an organization composed of officials and employes of local roads had picked three legislative candidates to support, and that all members of the various unions connected with the railroads were pledged to abide this alleged decision.

"Self-appointed spokesmen for the organizations," Mr. Hall said, "have apparently taken it upon themselves to 'inform' the public as to how union men intend to vote in the legislative race.

"According to the rumors, the organization formed for the purpose of protecting the railroads' rights against unfair competition held a meeting recently and 'decided' that a certain three would be supported for the legislature. So far as I am able to learn, not one shopcraft member was present at the alleged meeting.

"Resentment at this inaccurate rumor, therefore, is pretty general, and many of the union officials regret the rather embarrassing position in which they have been placed. Many of the shopcraft union men are members of the protective organization, and all are, of course, in sympathy with any effort to protect the railroads against unfair competition. But if and when any indorsements are made we would at least like to be consulted about the matter.

"Chattanooga Trades and Labor council Monday night decided unanimously against any legislative indorsements, and Lodge 1450, Railroad Machinists, at the regular meeting Thursday night approved that policy.

"We want the public to know our position, and would appreciate a statement to this effect in The Labor World."

"CHEAP LABOR" STORY DENIED

A flurry of excitement was caused this week by an Associated Press story in Sunday's Chattanooga Times, quoting R. H. Baker, state commissioner of highways, as stating 10,000 men would be employed on road work in Tennessee under the federal relief loan bill, at a minimum wage of 75 cents per day.

Queried by Chattanooga Trades and Labor council, however, for confirmation of the story, the state official denied flatly he had made such statement, and declared his stand had been to require a minimum of 25 cents per hour on contracts financed with the proposed $11,600,000 loan.

On the strength of the Times story, Commissioner Baker was put "on the spot" at regular meeting of Central Body Monday night, and the executive board was instructed to wire immediately asking if the published statement were true. Accordingly, Secretary Cuthbert wired him as follows:

> Local daily press quotes you as stating laborers on road work under federal allotment will be paid 75 cents per day. Please advise immediately if correctly quoted.

Commissioner Baker wired:

> In reply to your telegram. Local daily press entirely in error as to payment of labor on roads under federal allotment, as I have made no statement with regard to wages, except to require a minimum of 25 cents per hour in contracts financed with emergency aid."

And that's that.

All Candidates Expected to Lay Claims for Votes Before Labor.

NO FAVORITISM WILL BE SHOWN

Each and Every One to Be Given Respectful Hearing by Local Trades Unionists — Perry to Introduce Speakers.

All candidates for office in the election and primaries of next Thursday—national, state and county—are invited to appear before members of organized labor on next Tuesday night at Central Labor hall, 729½ Market street, and lay their claims for suffrage of the workers before an audience there.

The open invitation to candidates is a set policy of Chattanooga Trades and Labor council, the labor body having initiated the plan several years ago, and the meetings having become increasingly popular.

Seldom does a candidate ignore the opportunity to address the workers at these meetings, and it is believed they will "answer roll call" some 100 per cent at the session Tuesday night. It was originally intended to honor the office-seekers on Monday evening, but the meeting was postponed because of the fact that the Hon. Hill McAlister is scheduled for an address at the courthouse on that date.

As a matter of fact, it has been the custom to turn one regular meeting of Central Body over to the candidates some two or three weeks prior to each election, but an unusual amount of important business has faced the labor representatives in their sessions for the past few weeks, and they were forced to select a date other than regular meeting night for the political gathering.

No heckling will be allowed, of course, and no restrictions will be placed on any candidate, and they may "view with alarm" or "point with pride" to their respective hearts' content. A time limit, however, will be necessary, an equal allotment being given to all, the length of which will depend upon the number of speakers present.

George W. Perry, president of Chattanooga Trades and Labor council, will preside, and will introduce the guests as their names are drawn from a hat.

The meeting will begin promptly at 8 o'clock.

Friends to Honor Joe Bonowitz

Arrangements are being made to honor Joe Bonowitz, popular center fielder of the Chattanooga baseball club, Thursday, Aug. 4. The Y. M. H. A. is sponsoring this day in cooperation with Joe Engel.

Bonowitz has made a great number of friends in the short time that he has been with the local club. His early baseball training was with the Columbus, Ohio, Y. M. H. A. Since graduating from college he has played class "A" baseball, and has never played in a lower class league than the Southern.

The Y. M. H. A. have great hopes of keeping Joe here for the winter months as physical instructor. It is for this reason that they want to honor Joe Bonowitz on this day. There will be a special section for all Bonowitz boosters and a reserved seat will be given free to all making a subscription.

The committee on arrangements is headed by Phil I. Angel, of Chattanooga Typographical union No. 89.

The Social Ideals of Jesus of Nazareth

An Interpretation

Written for The Labor World
By WILLIAM L. MOSS

Chapter VI

JESUS' EVALUATION OF LIFE

Part IX

When Jesus had ended these sayings the people were astonished at his doctrine: for he taught them as one having authority.

Matt. 7, 28, 29

In the seventh chapter of Matthew's gospel we are told that "Jesus went about all Galilee, teaching in their synagogues, and preaching the gospel of the Kingdom."

WM. L. MOSS

What was the general nature of this "gospel," or message, the Master was preaching on His walking tours, which at this time centered about the northern district of Palestine but which later were to extend the length and breadth of the land?

In the fewest words at my command, Jesus was teaching the people concerning duty, life, moral conduct, social relationship. Summed up briefly, He taught there is but one sure way to treat our fellowman, and that is to treat him as a human being because we are all human. "The universal blunder of the world," said Phillips Brooks, "is in thinking that there are certain persons put into the world to govern and certain others to obey." The curse of this blunder is that it helps destroy the spirit of love on earth. In other words, men strive to divide humanity into two distinct classes; Jesus would gather them all, not into one class, but into the same brotherhood of love and service.

The Master realized this brotherhood could not exist unless humility, unselfishness, sanity, optimism and a wholesome, alive interest in life were men's chief characteristics. Accordingly He went forth preaching a way of life and not a rule-of-thumb code of ethics.

The heart of His message was not that the transgressor is damned, but "blessed are the pure in heart, for they shall see God."

Thus love, working in and through men, and not the contenued threat of cruel punishment or the harsh pressure of iron law is to move and guide all men if they are to be real and perfect men. Only love can make men pure in heart.

His summary of how our personalities were to appear to other men is, "Let your light so shine before men that they may see your good works and glorify your Father which is in heaven." It is he alone who loves who can by his life and work glorify his heavenly Father, for only like can glorify like, and since God is love, only love glorifies the Father.

AS THE WORKER SEES HIS WORLD

The North German Lloyd Steamship company plans to build a 1,020-foot, three-deck pier at the foot of Canal street, New York, at a cost of $650,000.

Vigilante Mining association plans to ask the Reconstruction Finance corporation or some other government agency for a revolving fund of $30,000,000 to stimulate gold mining and production on a profit sharing basis.

Allis-Chalmers Manufacturing company has received a $100,000 order from the Near East Development company for tractors and trailers. Similar equipment for Mississippi levee construction work has been bought from this company for the same amount.

The Louisville, Ky., plant of Puritan Cordage mills is employing twice as many men as in normal times. Three eight-hour shifts are working.

Bids were asked July 21 for general contract covering the erection of an 18-story capitol at Bismarck, N. D. This is a $2,000,000 project.

Sears, Roebuck's farm implement plant is working day and night and is behind in filling orders for certain units.

"Players Well Bestowed"

Hamlet said to Polonius, said he: "My lord, will you see the players well bestowed."

He meant that the players should be well cared for, adding, sagely, "after your death you were better have a bad epitaph than their ill report while you live."

The players are well bestowed. They may be worried, but while they hold their jobs they are right merrily well bestowed. Good beds and good provender and much else, withal.

The players of the House and of the Senate, betimes seeking to wend their way home to fresh engagements on the hustings, though they may wear wrinkles in their brows, are well enough bestowed pending the ides of November.

There was no Hamlet to say grand lines about them as they made their plans for the meetings with the home folks. But that is their affair.

* * * *

The main idea with most of the members—the players of Washington—is that they keep their jobs intact and that amid the ravages of the coming winter they and as many of their relatives as can be berthed on the pay roll, may be, like the players of that other day, right well bestowed.

If to most others they are "the abstract and brief chronicles of the time," they are, to themselves, just about the most serious business in the world.

* * * *

Ah, well, let us not begrudge them their keep, even if it is more generous than some of them have ever known. We, too, need our players.

We need, moreover, that serious and forthright service that even the drollest and dullest among them must sometimes perform, even unwittingly.

We do not malign our Congress of players. We defend them as a true representation of a great people, but a people who cannot spend all their time trying to be great or even in living up to the greatness that we know to be inherent and to rise to meet every emergency.

* * * *

There are times when our Congress reminds us of Kipling's "Boots," when the legislators go plodding with an awesome determination and persistence after some fine objective.

And times, dear Polonious, when they forget their measured tread and romp after nonsense and worse without any thought of discipline or decency.

But after all, these players are our very shadow, our very reflection, and we do ill and foolish to expect them to rise above the level of the sea out of which they swam to the safety of the great Port of Pay Rolls.

* * * *

Yea, gentlemen, yea, ladies, see that they are well bestowed, for some of them will never get back, save as lame ducks for a fleeting snuggle in the old nest.

Some of them will get right properly smacked in the beezer before the snows fall again to lay their blanket of purity over a stricken countryside.

And it is fitting that they should get this inglorious and inelegant sock, for many of them have played so fantastically that they well deserve the hook.

But by and large, it is our Congress, it as we make it and therefore, with all our determination for improvement, let us not mark too severly with post-term punishment the derelictions which any fairly good prophet could have foretold.

Industry Faces Its Test

Any true revival of prosperity and any lasting tenure of prosperity, once the revival comes, must depend upon conditions within industry and whoever forgets that fact forgets the main factor in the reckoning.

President Green, discussing relief at the executive council meeting in Atlantic City, said: "The government doesn't own industry."

Everybody knows the government doesn't own industry, but almost everybody is just now prone to forget the implications of the statement.

* * * *

The United States remains a nation based upon and committed to private ownership and control.

That happens to be the fact.

Aside from the utilities field government has little or nothing to say about industry.

The great bankers of Wall Street have a great deal more to say about industrial policies than Uncle Sam has to say about them.

* * * *

The point to this—and what President Green clearly had in mind—is that while there are certain things the government can do and must do, the main job of maintaining prosperity comes back to industry itself.

To that end and knowing the source of much of our present misery, labor demands that industry at once inaugurate the 30-hour week everywhere.

* * * *

All that the government can do will not fully restore nor long maintain any great degree of prosperity as long as industry allows the old maladjustments to remain untouched.

* * * *

The main maladjustments are and have been in relation to hours and wages.

Repeatedly it has been shown that wages were too low and that the drain-off in various forms of profit was too high.

No social order could long stand such a drain of its vital fluid.

Repeatedly it has been shown that workers are and have been working too many hours a week.

The situation is obvious—it needs no proof in figures.

* * * *

Future confidence in the system of private ownership will be largely determined by the ability and willingness of industry to bring about the drastic and sweeping readjustments now needed.

Failure of industry to fulfill the requirements will surely drive millions of men and women against their inclinations to demand further encroachment on business by government.

* * * *

The fact that any other social order now known would bring worse penalties and harsher conditions will make little difference to the millions who are denied any measure of justice under our own private ownership. They see their own plight and little else—and who can blame them.

It is clear that there must be a return to work or there will be a sweeping rush to attack industry through political action. There has been many a jump from the frying pan to the fire. Everyone knows how hot the frying pan is; few stop to think the fire may be hotter.

The path industry must pursue is clear. Where is leadership in industry that will force the pace and lead the way? Thus far it seems lacking, but it cannot long remain so in safety.

What Next!

In the strange mental condition called idioglossia, the victims talk special languages of their own, which no one else can understand.

This condition, writes Dr. E. E. Free in his Week's Science (New York), may explain the many stories of miraculous occasions on which people spoke in unknown tongues. Two varieties are described in a recent report by Mr. A. G. Morison, of the health department of the city of Bristol, England.

An old Indian went into a bank to borrow some money.

Banker—What can you put up for security; that is, how many ponies do you have?

Old Indian—Got 100 ponies.

Six months later the old Indian came in with a very large roll of bills and paid the note. As he turned to leave, the banker said:

Banker—We let you have money when you needed it, now why don't you deposit your extra money with us?

Old Indian (grunting)—All right. How many ponies you got?

The Passing Show

Note and Comment on Things Doing in the March of Events

Violence has come in packages larger than usual in recent days. At a federal dam construction job at Marseilles, Ill., eighteen were injured and 128 jailed when union workmen sought to stand for their rights.

In Illinois mining districts there has been violence and there has been violence in Ohio.

The worse conditions become the more violence there will be and it requires no marvel of prophecy to make that statement.

* * *

At High Point, N. C., where much organizing work was done during the famous Danville textile strike, union workers determined that enough was enough and walked out protesting against another wage cut of 25 per cent.

Unionists and non-unionists alike walked out. They closed just about everything in sight, even, so it is reported, cutting power lines where other means failed.

Criminal acts cannot be condoned, but the militancy of the High Point workers is cheering.

Militancy in defense of trade unionism and trade union standards is something America can take in large doses for her welfare.

* * *

In all that was said about the war against depression one helpful factor was generally overlooked. The United States Employment Service, presided over by Trade Unionist John R. Alpine, extended to the camapign its franking privilege and the help of many members of its personnel. This was magnificent work and it counted heavily in bringing about the measure of success gained in the campaign.

* * *

There are signs of betterment. Farm prices are better. Farm journals are written in happier tone.

It may not seem to mean much to the jobless man, but the position of the American dollar in foreign exchange is better. Later that will make its helpful meaning clearer.

Most folks hesitate to cheer when they see cheerful signs, but in any event there are signs. If they are wrong it can't be helped. But we can at least hope they are right and that they mean what ordinarily they would mean.

SEZ WHICH

By H. F. B.

Editor Labor World:

Owing to the fact that I have been forced by this infernal brand of weather we are having of late to drink so much water, my literary genius has become completely waterlogged and refuses to burn, but, thank the Lord! my sense of humor is still hitting on all six! Wherefore I cut the following clipping from last week's Literary Digest, and am sending it to you as a concrete example of our numerous labor problems. I couldn't do better in my own weekly (?) contributions, I'm sure!

Timely additions to the English language come to us from the Philippines. A civil servant of Japanese extraction, the father of sixteen children, figures as the father, also, of new verbal combinations which bid fair to strike a popular note in an era when so many have been "dejobbed" and pine for "rejobulation."

These and other locutions unfolded by "Yours despairfully, Akono Subusu," in a letter to his chief, have made a hit in the official colony in Manila, and have spread to other English-speaking points in the Far East. There seems to be general agreement that "dejobbed" would be a useful word just now. Whether it will ever be sanctioned depends, of course, on the gods and Frank Vizetelly.

Here is Akono Subusu's letter, as quoted by a New York Herald Tribune correspondent under a Manila date line:

"Mr. F. Symonds,
"District Officer,
"Abcokuta:

"Kind sir, on opening this epistle you will beheld the work of a dejobbed person, and a very bewifed and much childrenised gentleman, who was violently dejobbed in a twinkling by your goodself. For heaven's sake, sir, consider this catastrophe as falling on your own head, and remind yourself on walking home at the moon's end to savage wife and sixteen voracious children with your pocket filled with nonexistent pennies and pity my horrible state. When being dejobbed and proceeding with a heart and intestines filled with misery in this den of doom, myself did greedily contemplate culpable homicide, but Him who protected Daniel (poet) safe through the lion's den will protect his servant in his home of evil. As to reason given by yourself esquire for my dejobment the incrimination was laziness.

"NO, SIR. It were possible that myself who has pitched sixteen infant children into this vale of tears can have a lazy atom in his mortal frame, and a sudden departure of eleven pounds has left me on the verge of the abyss of destitution and despair.

"I hope this vision of horror will enrich your dreams this night and good angel will meet and pulverize your heart of nether milestone so that you will awaken and with such alacrity as may be compatable with your personal safety, and will hasten to rejobulate your servant.

"So mote it be, Amen.

"Yours despairfully,
"AKONO SUBUSU."

"Note by District Officer:
"Gentle reader do not sob—
"Akono Subusu has been rejobbed."

ONPARTISAN POLITICAL POLICY TO BE CONTINUED

xecutive Council of Federation Says Experience Confirms Wisdom of Such Action—Party Platforms and Records of Candidates Will Be Studied.

Atlantic City, July 28.—In its eclaration here announcing its de-ermination to adhere to the non-artisan political policy of the Amer-an Federation of Labor in this ear's campaign for the election of president of the United States, e entire membership of the house representatives and one-third of e members of the senate, the ex-ecutive council of the federation ade the following formal state-ent relative to principles and pro-ams:

"The American Federation of La-or has found from experience that the best interests of its entire membership have been protected and conserved through a strict adherence to a nonpartisan political policy.

"This procedure requires that the platforms of the political parties must be compared and the records of candidates for office must be carefully studied and scrutinized.

"When all such political information is made available the individual members of organized labor invariably support candidates for office who are known to be friendly and sympathetic toward the aims and purposes of the American Federation of Labor and who enjoy the confidence and esteem of the members and representatives of organized labor.

"After giving consideration to all these facts the executive council of the American Federation of Labor is of the opinion that the membership of the American Federation of Labor should continue to adhere to its nonpartisan political party during the ensuing political campaign.

"All information regarding platforms, candidates and their records will be compiled by the nonpartisan political committee and submitted to the officers and members of the American Federation of Labor so that they may exercise their political judgment in a way which will be to the individual and collective interest of all working men and women.

"In connection with this very important decision the executive council is taking into consideration the fact that the candidates of the two great political parties for the presidency of the United States will make important pronouncements upon questions of unemployment and labor in their speeches of acceptance.

"We firmly expect that each of them, in these addresses, will make declarations of great significance to labor.

"We anticipate that they will express their opinions regarding the serious economic condition which prevails throughout the nation and will amplify the declarations of the platforms of the political parties relating to labor and labor questions.

"We will await, with very great interest, the expression of each of the candidates, reserving to ourselves a final decision regarding our future policy during the remainder of the campaign.

"In conformity with this declaration and decision of the executive council, the nonpartisan political committee of the American Federation of Labor is instructed to communicate with national and international unions, state federations of labor, central bodies and directly chartered local unions, transmitting to them copies of the platforms of the two political parties and the records of the candidates for the presidency of the United States, together with a copy of this declaration.

"Furthermore, the records of candidates for the United States senate in the different states and candidates for the house of representatives shall be supplied for general distribution throughout the different states and congressional districts."

CHAS. H. BENNETT

for the

Lower House

To the Voters of Hamilton County:

I am sorry I shall not be able to see each one of you before the nominating election of August 4.

You may depend upon my putting in full force and time to carry into execution the following issues:

No more bond issues until tax rates are substantially reduced.

Rigid legislation against interstate truck operators, to protect railroads, their employes, fruit, truck growers and farmers. As the condition now stands, the railroads are being robbed of their business, causing thousands of men to be without work. The fruit and truck growers are being robbed of their markets, and are on the verge of bankruptcy. This great loss of business directly affects every business in our state, to the extent of millions of dollars lost annually. These truck operators spend with our merchants as little as possible, taking away as much as possible, while the highways over which they operate are being maintained by the taxpaying railroads and citizens. The railroad employes spend their money with our own merchants. The friut and truck growers likewise spend their money received from their sales with our merchants.

I will earnestly support any legislation that advantageously and directly affects our citizens.

Your vote and influence will be appreciated.

CHAS. H. BENNETT.

Political Planks Disappoint Labor, Council Reports

Atlantic City Meeting Declares for Nonpartisanship, Names Committee for Campaign Work in National Field.

Atlantic City, July 28.—Naming a nonpartisan political committee to have charge of labor's political work in coming campaign, the Executive Council of the American Federation of Labor, in session here, refused, as forecast, to approve the platform or presidential candidates of either party, issued a score on platforms, and laid plans for intensive campaigns against certain bitterly hostile congressional candidates.

Green Heads Committee.

The nonpartisan political committee is: President William Green, Secretary Frank Morrison, Martin F. Ryan, Matthew Woll and Thomas A. Rickert, the three latter being vice-presidents of the federation. This committee will, as an initial step, furnish political records to unions throughout the country.

President Green said:

"We have compared the platforms of both parties and compared them with our own recommendations. We are consequently disappointed, as neither covered our proposals as fully, completely and definitely as we had expected. The fact that a number of our proposals were not incorporated by either party was also a disappointment.

A statement issued by President Green for the council said that "the American Federation of Labor has found from experience that the best interests of its entire membership have been protected and conserved through a strict adherence to a nonpartisan political policy." It continued:

"The wisdom of such action is clearly apparent when it is considered that the American Federation of Labor is composed of men and women who entertain different political opinions. They are not required to become identified with or to support any political party when they become members of the American Federation of Labor."

The council, President Green said, "will wait with very great interest" the declarations of the presidential candidates, "reserving to ourselves a final decision regarding our future policy."

The Political Score Board

The Executive Council of the American Federation of Labor, meeting at Atlantic City, presented a condensed tabulation of labor demands and the action of the republican and democratic conventions. Here is the score as prepared by the executive council.

Sheriff Charlie Taylor Makes Final Appeal

To My Friends:

In making my final appeal to the members of organized labor and their friends, I ask simply to cite my record in office.

During my administration of the responsible office of Sheriff of Hamilton County, I have endeavored at all times to insure justice to the humblest citizen. I have placed the office on a higher plane, and a large number of deputies have been put on salaries, and the iniquitous practices of "night-hawking" and "fee-grabbing" thus eliminated so far as this office is concerned.

Recognizing the great necessity for economy in the administration of public affairs, I have operated this office at the lowest possible cost to the taxpayers, but I have not lost and will not lose sight of the fact that all employes of the Sheriff's office are entitled to pay commensurate with their service.

I have always been proud of the generous support given me by Organized Labor and their friends, and have always endeavored to merit the confidence thus expressed.

Will appreciate your continued interest, and ask that my friends keep up the fight until the polls close next Thursday night.

Charlie Taylor

TWO BIG WAGE DISPUTES HALT AT CRITICAL POINT

Ladies' Garment Workers Postpone Walkout When Lehmen Arranges Conferences—Typos Ask New Discussions After Rejecting Publishers' Proposal.

New York City, July 28.—Two huge disputes of great magnitude have been postponed and may never materialize.

The International Ladies' Garment Workers' union has withdrawn its strike order pending further negotiations arranged for by Lieut.-Gov. Lehman, who interceded just as all efforts for peace seemed futile. The union is battling against restoration of piece work rates and for limitation of contractors. The issue is held vital to the union and the 27,000 members who would be affected by a cessation of work.

After rejecting publishers' proposals, 593 to 10, Typographical Union No. 6 has asked for new conferences to deal with wage and other issues. A practical deadlock has existed since June 15, when the old contract expired. A meeting of the publishers' scale committee has been summoned to consider the union's request for new sessions.

BORER GETS HIS FREEDOM.

Freedom comes to the corn borer. Because of reduced appropriations U. S. department of agriculture lifted the quarantine effective July 15, leaving restrictions up to states.

AMERICAN FEDERATION FIGHTS "GAG" ON FEDERAL WORKERS

Executive Council Says Civil Service Rule Forbids Expression of Political Opinion. Green Denounces Postmaster General's Stand.

Atlantic City, N. J., July 28.—The Executive Council of the American Federation of Labor made a strong protest against the attempt of the United States civil service commission and Postmaster-General Walter F. Brown to gag several hundred thousand government employes in the expression of their political opinions.

The protest grew out of the reaction of the civil service commission and the postmaster-general to the mailing of a circular letter by W. M. Collins, president of the Railway Mail association, with headquarters at Washington, D. C., to members of the association in Minnesota, where members of the U. S. house of representatives are to be elected in November.

The letter contained the record of congressmen on the economy bill which took over $80,000,000 from the annual wages of government employes, and suggested that it would be "entirely proper" that "you should remember your friends on election day."

Although Mr. Collins is not a government employe, the civil service commission ruled that the letter violated the law and declared that "what an employe may not lawfully do he cannot employ agents or officers or choose other persons to do."

Postmaster-General Brown, under whose jurisdiction the members of the Railway Mail association come, concurred in the declaration of the commission.

In announcing the executive council's action, William Green, president of the A. F. of L., said:

"The executive council holds that despite the announcement of the civil service commission, the officers of the federal organizations have the right to inform their members of the records of the candidates. The fact that these employes are in the government service does not deprive them of their political rights. Such rulings as these caused the repeal of the gag law in August, 1912, which had prevented government employes from communicating with each other regarding acts of congress affecting their interest.

"The civil service commission's ruling strikes at the very fundamentals of the organized labor movement which is based on the right of the workers to select representatives of their own choice who may transmit information to them from time to time on matters of interest to them jointly.

"The Executive Council will not permit without protest and opposition establishment of the principle embodied in this order or its operation against government employes.

"If government employes are penalized on the basis of the civil service ruling we will endeavor to follow two courses. We will call for a congressional investigation to determine if there has been a transgression, and if it is necessary to protect the rights of these employes we will initiate legislation in congress to that effect."

Referring to Postmaster-General Brown's statement based on the civil service ruling, Mr. Green said: "This warning of the postmaster-general is in sharp contrast with the recent activity of Assistant Postmaster-General Glover, who called upon all appointed postmasters to actively support the candidacy of President Hoover."

The executive council expressed the belief that the civil service commission's attempt to gag government employes would affect many thousand persons on the government pay roll, including letter carriers, postal clerks, railway mail clerks, and employes in public printing offices and navy yards. These employes are organized in such unions as the Railway Mail association, the National Federation of Postoffice Clerks, the National Association of Letter Carriers and the National Association of Rural Letter Carriers.

It was also clear to the executive council that if the ruling of the civil service commission were allowed to stand, attempts would be made to apply the gag policy by state and city civil service bodies.

LABOR QUERIES

Q.—Why is "Big Six" Typographical union of New York so called?

A.—Because it is Union No. 6 of the International Typographical union and because it is also one of the largest of American unions. The name is thus descriptive.

Q.—Did the late William J. Burns ever offer to furnish "inside" information about unions?

A.—It happens that he did, at least once. In 1920, when the A. F. of L. was about to open its convention in Montreal business men of that city reported they were being offered a book by canvassers purporting to represent Burns' agency and that this book, at $50 a copy, would reveal all that went on in the convention. Secretary Morrison reported this to the convention, explaining, of course, that all conventions were entirely open and that nobody needed to pay $50 for what he could learn free of charge.

Q.—Was there ever a threat of general strike of phone employes during the World war?

A.—Yes, and Postmaster-General Burleson issued an order that any employe who went out and stayed out twenty-four hours would be discharged by the government. This order he rescinded upon protest by the A. F. of L. This was in 1919. In 1920 the federation asked removal of Burleson from office.

Q.—Who has been delegate to A. F .of L. conventions the most times?

A.—Best information is that Frank Morrison, A. F. of L. secretary, holds the record. Are there other claims?

The Social Ideals of Jesus of Nazareth

An Interpretation

Written for The Labor World
By WILLIAM L. MOSS

Chapter VI
JESUS' EVALUATION OF LIFE
Part IX

When Jesus had ended these sayings the people were astonished at his doctrine: for he taught as one having authority.

Matt. 7 28, 29

In the seventh chapter of Matthew's gospel we are told that "Jesus went about all Galilee, teaching in their synagogues, and preaching the gospel of the Kingdom."

WM. L. MOSS

What was the general nature of this "gospel," or message, the Master was preaching on His walking tours, which at this time centered about the northern district of Palestine but which later were to extend the length and breadth of the land?

In the fewest words at my command, Jesus was teaching the people concerning duty, life, moral conduct, social relationship. Summed up briefly, He taught there is but one sure way to treat our fellowman, and that is to treat him as a human being because we are all human. "The universal blunder of the world," said Phillips Brooks, "is in thinking that there are certain persons put into the world to govern and certain others to obey." The curse of this blunder is that it helps destroy the spirit of love on earth. In other words, men strive to divide humanity into two distinct classes; Jesus would gather them all, not into one class, but into the same brotherhood of love and service.

The Master realized this brotherhood could not exist unless humility, unselfishness, sanity, optimism and a wholesome, alive interest in life were men's chief characteristics. Accordingly He went forth preaching a way of life and not a rule-of-thumb code of ethics.

The heart of His message was not that the transgressor is damned, but "blessed are the pure in heart, for they shall see God."

Thus love, working in and through men, and not the continued threat of cruel punishment or the harsh pressure of iron laws, to move and guide all men if they are to be real and perfect men. Only love can make men pure in heart.

His summary of how our personalities were to appear to other men is, "Let your light so shine before men that they may see your good works and glorify your Father which is in heaven." It is he alone who loves who can by his life and work glorify his heavenly Father, for only like can glorify like, and since God is love, only love glorifies the Father.

AS THE WORKER SEES HIS WORLD

The North German Lloyd Steamship company plans to build a 1,020-foot, three deck pier at the foot of Canal street, New York, at a cost of $650,000.

Vigilante Mining association plans to ask the Reconstruction Finance corporation or some other government agency for a revolving fund of $30,000,000 to stimulate gold mining and production on a profit-sharing basis.

Allis-Chalmers Manufacturing company has received a $100,000 order from the Near East Development company for tractors and trailers. Similar equipment for Mississippi levee construction work has been bought from this company for the same amount.

The Louisville, Ky., plant of Puritan Cordage mills is employing twice as many men as in normal times. Three eight-hour shifts are working.

Bids were asked July 21 for general contract covering the erection of an 18-story capitol at Bismarck, N. D. This is a $2,000,000 project.

Sears, Roebuck's farm implement plant is working day and night and is behind in filling orders for certain units.

"Players Well Bestowed"

Hamlet said to Polonius, said he: "My lord, will you see the players well bestowed."

He meant that the players should be well cared for, adding, sagely, "after your death you were better have a bad epitaph than their ill report while you live."

The players are well bestowed. They may be worried, but while they hold their jobs they are right merrily well bestowed. Good beds and good provender and much else, withal.

The players of the House and of the Senate, betimes seeking to wend their way home to fresh engagements on the hustings, though they may wear wrinkles in their brows, are well enough bestowed pending the ides of November.

There was no Hamlet to say grand lines about them as they made their plans for the meetings with the home folks. But that is their affair.

* * * *

The main idea with most of the members—the players of Washington—is that they keep their jobs intact and that amid the ravages of the coming winter they and as many of their relatives as can be berthed on the pay roll, may be, like the players of that other day, right well bestowed.

If to most others they are "the abstract and brief chronicles of the time," they are, to themselves, just about the most serious business in the world.

* * * *

Ah, well, let us not begrudge them their keep, even if it is more generous than some of them have ever known. We, too, need our players.

We need, moreover, that serious and forthright service that even the drollest and dullest among them must sometimes perform, even unwittingly.

We do not malign our Congress of players. We defend them as a true representation of a great people, but a people who cannot spend all their time trying to be great or even in living up to the greatness that we know to be inherent and to rise to meet every emergency.

* * * *

There are times when our Congress reminds us of Kipling's "Boots," when the legislators go plodding with an awesome determination and persistence after some fine objective.

And times, dear Polonious, when they forget their measured tread and romp after nonsense and worse without any thought of discipline or decency.

But after all, these players are our very shadow, our very reflection, and we do ill and foolish to expect them to rise above the level of the sea out of which they swam to the safety of the great Port of Pay Rolls.

* * * *

Yea, gentlemen, yea, ladies, see that they are well bestowed, for some of them will never get back, save as lame ducks for a fleeting snuggle in the old nest.

Some of them will get right properly smacked in the beezer before the snows fall again to lay their blanket of purity over a stricken countryside.

And it is fitting that they should get this inglorious and inelegant sock, for many of them have played so fantastically that they well deserve the hook.

But by and large, it is our Congress, it as we make it and therefore, with all our determination for improvement, let us not mark too severly with post-term punishment the derelictions which any fairly good prophet could have foretold.

Industry Faces Its Test

Any true revival of prosperity and any lasting tenure of prosperity, once the revival comes, must depend upon conditions within industry and whoever forgets that fact forgets the main factor in the reckoning.

President Green, discussing relief at the executive council meeting in Atlantic City, said: "The government doesn't own industry."

Everybody knows the government doesn't own industry, but almost everybody is just now prone to forget the implications of the statement.

* * * *

The United States remains a nation based upon and committed to private ownership and control.

That happens to be the fact.

Aside from the utilities field government has little or nothing to say about industry.

The great bankers of Wall Street have a great deal more to say about industrial policies than Uncle Sam has to say about them.

* * * *

The point to this—and what President Green clearly had in mind—is that while there are certain things the government can do and must do, the main job of maintaining prosperity comes back to industry itself.

To that end and knowing the source of much of our present misery, labor demands that industry at once inaugurate the 30-hour week everywhere.

* * * *

All that the government can do will not fully restore nor long maintain any great degree of prosperity as long as industry allows the old maladjustments to remain untouched.

* * * *

The main maladjustments are and have been in relation to hours and wages.

Repeatedly it has been shown that wages were too low and that the drain-off in various forms of profit was too high.

No social order could long stand such a drain of its vital fluid.

Repeatedly it has been shown that workers are and have been working too many hours a week.

The situation is obvious—it needs no proof in figures.

* * * *

Future confidence in the system of private ownership will be largely determined by the ability and willingness of industry to bring about the drastic and sweeping readjustments now needed.

Failure of industry to fulfill the requirements will surely drive millions of men and women against their inclinations to demand further encroachment on business by government.

* * * *

The fact that any other social order now known would bring worse penalties and harsher conditions will make little difference to the millions who are denied any measure of justice under our own private ownership. They see their own plight and little else—and who can blame them.

It is clear that there must be a return to work or there will be a sweeping rush to attack industry through political action. There has been many a jump from the frying pan to the fire. Everyone knows how hot the frying pan is; few stop to think the fire may be hotter.

The path industry must pursue is clear. Where is leadership in industry that will force the pace and lead the way? Thus far it seems lacking, but it cannot long remain so in safety.

What Next!

In the strange mental condition called idioglossia, the victims talk special languages of their own, which no one else can understand.

This condition, writes Dr. E. E. Free in his Week's Science (New York), may explain the many stories of miraculous occasions on which people spoke in unknown tongues. Two varieties are described in a recent report by Mr. A. G. Morison, of the health department of the city of Bristol, England.

An old Indian went into a bank to borrow some money.

Banker—What can you put up for security; that is, how many ponies do you have?

Old Indian—Got 100 ponies.

Six months later the old Indian came in with a very large roll of bills and paid the note. As he turned to leave, the banker said:

Banker—We let you have money when you needed it, now why don't you deposit your extra money with us?

Old Indian (grunting)—All right. How many ponies you got?

The Passing Show

Note and Comment on Things Doing in the March of Events

Violence has come in packages larger than usual in recent days. At a federal dam construction job at Marseilles, Ill., eighteen were injured and 128 jailed when union workmen sought to stand for their rights.

In Illinois mining districts there has been violence and there has been violence in Ohio.

The worse conditions become the more violence there will be and it requires no marvel of prophecy to make that statement.

* * *

At High Point, N. C., where much organizing work was done during the famous Danville textile strike, union workers determined that enough was enough and walked out protesting against another wage cut of 25 per cent.

Unionists and non-unionists alike walked out. They closed just about everything in sight, even, so it is reported, cutting power lines where other means failed.

Criminal acts cannot be condoned, but the militancy of the High Point workers is cheering.

Militancy in defense of trade unionism and trade union standards is something America can take in large doses for her welfare.

* * *

In all that was said about the war against depression one helpful factor was generally overlooked. The United States Employment Service, presided over by Trade Unionist John R. Alpine, extended to the camapign its franking privilege and the help of many members of its personnel. This was magnificent work and it counted heavily in bringing about the measure of success gained in the campaign.

* * *

There are signs of betterment. Farm prices are better. Farm journals are written in happier tone.

It may not seem to mean much to the jobless man, but the position of the American dollar in foreign exchange is better. Later that will make its helpful meaning clearer.

Most folks hesitate to cheer when they see cheerful signs, but in any event there are signs. If they are wrong it can't be helped. But we can at least hope they are right and that they mean what ordinarily they would mean.

SEZ WHICH

By H. F. B.

Editor Labor World:

Owing to the fact that I have been forced by this infernal brand of weather we are having of late to drink so much water, my literary genius has become completely waterlogged and refuses to burn, but, thank the Lord! my sense of humor is still hitting on all six! Wherefore I cut the following clipping from last week's Literary Digest, and am sending it to you as a concrete example of our numerous labor problems. I couldn't do better in my own weekly (?) contributions, I'm sure!

Timely additions to the English language come to us from the Philippines. A civil servant of Japanese extraction, the father of sixteen children, figures as the father, also, of new verbal combinations which bid fair to strike a popular note in an era when so many have been "dejobbed" and pine for "rejobulation."

These and other locutions unfolded by "Yours despairfully, Akono Subusu," in a letter to his chief, have made a hit in the official colony in Manila, and have spread to other English-speaking points in the Far East. There seems to be general agreement that "dejobbed" would be a useful word just now. Whether it will ever be sanctioned depends, of course, on the gods and Frank Vizetelly.

Here is Akono Subusu's letter, as quoted by a New York Herald Tribune correspondent under a Manila date line:

"Mr. F. Symonds,
"District Officer,
"Abcokuta:

"Kind sir, on opening this epistle you will beheld the work of a dejobbed person, and a very bewifed and much childrenised gentleman, who was violently dejobbed in a twinkling by your goodself. For heaven's sake, sir, consider this catastrophe as falling on your own head, and remind yourself on walking home at the moon's end to savage wife and sixteen voracious children with your pocket filled with nonexistent pennies and pity my horrible state. When being dejobbed and proceeding with a heart and intestines filled with misery in this den of doom, myself did greedily contemplate culpable homicide, but Him who protected Daniel (poet) safe through the lion's den will protect his servant in his home of evil. As to reason given by yourself esquire for my dejobment the incrimination was laziness.

"NO, SIR. It were possible that myself who has pitched sixteen infant children into this vale of tears can have a lazy atom in his mortal frame, and a sudden departure of eleven pounds has left me on the verge of the abyss of destitution and despair.

"I hope this vision of horror will enrich your dreams this night and good angel will meet and pulverize your heart of nether milestone so that you will awaken and with such alacrity as may be compatable with your personal safety, and will hasten to rejobulate your servant.

"So mote it be, Amen.
"Yours despairfully,
"AKONO SUBUSU."

"Note by District Officer:
"Gentle reader do not sob—
"Akono Subusu has been rejobbed."

ONPARTISAN POLITICAL POLICY TO BE CONTINUED

ecutive Council of Federation Says Experience Confirms Wisdom of Such Action—Party Platforms and Records of Candidates Will Be Studied.

Atlantic City, July 28.—In its laration here announcing its de- rmination to adhere to the non- rtisan political policy of the Amer- n Federation of Labor in this ar's campaign for the election of president of the United States, entire membership of the house representatives and one-third of members of the senate, the ex- utive council of the federation ke the following formal state- nt relative to principles and pro- ure:

"The American Federation of La- has found from experience that the best interests of its entire membership have been protected and conserved through a strict adherence to a nonpartisan political policy.

"This procedure requires that the platforms of the political parties must be compared and the records of candidates for office must be carefully studied and scrutinized.

"When all such political information is made available the individual members of organized labor invariably support candidates for office who are known to be friendly and sympathetic toward the aims and purposes of the American Federation of Labor and who enjoy the confidence and esteem of the members and representatives of organized labor.

"After giving consideration to all these facts the executive council of the American Federation of Labor is of the opinion that the membership of the American Federation of Labor should continue to adhere to its nonpartisan political party during the ensuing political campaign.

"All information regarding platforms, candidates and their records will be compiled by the nonpartisan political committee and submitted to the officers and members of the American Federation of Labor so that they may exercise their political judgment in a way which will be to the individual and collective interest of all working men and women.

"In connection with this very important decision the executive council is taking into consideration the fact that the candidates of the two great political parties for the presidency of the United States will make important pronouncements upon questions of unemployment and labor in their speeches of acceptance.

"We firmly expect that each of them, in these addresses, will make declarations of great significance to labor.

"We anticipate that they will express their opinions regarding the serious economic condition which prevails throughout the nation and will amplify the declarations of the platforms of the political parties relating to labor and labor questions.

"We will await, with very great interest, the expression of each of the candidates, reserving to ourselves a final decision regarding our future policy during the remainder of the campaign.

"In conformity with this declaration and decision of the executive council, the nonpartisan political committee of the American Federation of Labor is instructed to communicate with national and international unions, state federations of labor, central bodies and directly chartered local unions, transmitting to them copies of the platforms of the two political parties and the records of the candidates for the presidency of the United States, together with a copy of this declaration.

"Furthermore, the records of candidates for the United States senate in the different states and candidates for the house of representatives shall be supplied for general distribution throughout the different states and congressional districts."

CHAS. H. BENNETT

for the

Lower House

To the Voters of Hamilton County:

I am sorry I shall not be able to see each one of you before the nominating election of August 4.

You may depend upon my putting in full force and time to carry into execution the following issues:

No more bond issues until tax rates are substantially reduced.

Rigid legislation against interstate truck operators, to protect railroads, their employes, fruit, truck growers and farmers. As the condition now stands, the railroads are being robbed of their business, causing thousands of men to be without work. The fruit and truck growers are being robbed of their markets, and are on the verge of bankruptcy. This great loss of business directly affects every business in our state, to the extent of millions of dollars lost annually. These truck operators spend with our merchants as little as possible, taking away as much as possible, while the highways over which they operate are being maintained by the taxpaying railroads and citizens. The railroad employes spend their money with our own merchants. The friut and truck growers likewise spend their money received from their sales with our merchants.

I will earnestly support any legislation that advantageously and directly affects our citizens.

Your vote and influence will be appreciated.

CHAS. H. BENNETT.

Political Planks Disappoint Labor, Council Reports

Atlantic City Meeting Declares for Nonpartisanship, Names Committee for Campaign Work in National Field.

Atlantic City, July 26.—Naming a nonpartisan political committee to have charge of labor's political work in coming campaign, the Executive Council of the American Federation of Labor, in session here, refused, as forecast, to approve the platform or presidential candidates of either party, issued a score on platforms, and laid plans for intensive campaigns against certain bitterly hostile congressional candidates.

Green Heads Committee.

The nonpartisan political committee is: President William Green, Secretary Frank Morrison, Martin F. Ryan, Matthew Woll and Thomas A. Rickert, the three latter being vice-presidents of the federation. This committee will, as an initial step, furnish political records to unions throughout the country.

President Green said:

"We have compared the platforms of both parties and compared them with our own recommendations. We are extraordinarily disappointed, as neither covered our proposals as fully, completely and definitely as we had expected. The fact that a number of our proposals were not incorporated by either party was also a disappointment.

A statement issued by President Green for the council said that "the American Federation of Labor has found from experience that the best interests of its entire membership have been protected and conserved through a strict adherence to a non-partisan political policy." It continued:

"The wisdom of such action is clearly apparent when it is considered that the American Federation of Labor is composed of men and women who entertain different political opinions. They are not required to become identified with or to support any political party when they become members of the American Federation of Labor."

The council, President Green said, "will wait with very great interest" the declarations of the presidential candidates, "reserving to ourselves a final decision regarding our future policy."

Sheriff Charlie Taylor Makes Final Appeal

To My Friends:

In making my final appeal to the members of organized labor and their friends, I ask simply to cite my record in office.

During my administration of the responsible office of Sheriff of Hamilton County, I have endeavored at all times to insure justice to the humblest citizen. I have placed the office on a higher plane, and a large number of deputies have been put on salaries, and the iniquitous practices of "night-hawking" and "fee-grabbing" thus eliminated so far as this office is concerned.

Recognizing the great necessity for economy in the administration of public affairs, I have operated this office at the lowest possible cost to the taxpayers, but I have not lost and will not lose sight of the fact that all employes of the Sheriff's office are entitled to pay commensurate with their service.

I have always been proud of the generous support given me by Organized Labor and their friends, and have always endeavored to merit the confidence thus expressed.

Will appreciate your continued interest, and ask that my friends keep up the fight until the polls close next Thursday night.

TWO BIG WAGE DISPUTES HALT AT CRITICAL POINT

Ladies' Garment Workers Postpone Walkout When Lehmen Arranges Conferences—Typos Ask New Discussions After Rejecting Publishers' Proposal.

New York City, July 28.—Two huge disputes of great magnitude have been postponed and may never materialise.

The International Ladies' Garment Workers' union has withdrawn its strike order pending further negotiations arranged for by Lieut.-Gov. Lehman, who interceded just as all efforts for peace seemed futile. The union is battling against restoration of piece work rates and for limitation of contractors. The issue is held vital to the union and the 27,000 members who would be affected by a cessation of work.

After rejecting publishers' proposals, 593 to 10, Typographical Union No. 6 has asked for new conferences to deal with wage and other issues. A practical deadlock has existed since June 15, when the old contract expired. A meeting of the publishers' scale committee has been summoned to consider the union's request for new sessions.

AMERICAN FEDERATION FIGHTS "GAG" ON FEDERAL WORKERS

Executive Council Says Civil Service Rule Forbids Expression of Political Opinion. Green Denounces Postmaster General's Stand.

Atlantic City, N. J., July 28.—The Executive Council of the American Federation of Labor made a strong protest against the attempt of the United States civil service commission and Postmaster-General Walter F. Brown to gag several hundred thousand government employes in the expression of their political opinions.

The protest grew out of the reaction of the civil service commission and the postmaster-general to the mailing of a circular letter by W. M. Collins, president of the Railway Mail association, with headquarters at Washington, D. C., to members of the association in Minnesota, where members of the U. S. house of representatives are to be elected in November.

The letter contained the record of congressmen on the economy bill which took over $80,000,000 from the annual wages of government employes, and suggested that it would be "entirely proper" that "you should remember your friends on election day."

Although Mr. Collins is not a government employe, the civil service commission ruled that the letter violated the law and declared that "what an employe may not lawfully do he cannot employ agents or officers or choose other persons to do."

Postmaster-General Brown, under whose jurisdiction the members of the Railway Mail association come, concurred in the declaration of the commission.

In announcing the executive council's action, William Green, president of the A. F. of L., said:

"The executive council holds that despite the announcement of the civil service commission, the officers of the federal organizations have the right to inform their members of the records of the candidates. The fact that these employes are in the government service does not deprive them of their political rights. Such rulings as these caused the repeal of the gag law in August, 1912, which had prevented government employes from communicating with each other regarding acts of congress affecting their interest.

"The civil service commission's ruling strikes at the very fundamentals of the organized labor movement which is based on the right of the workers to select representatives of their own choice who may transmit information to them from time to time on matters of interest to them jointly.

"The Executive Council will not permit without protest and opposition establishment of the principle embodied in this order or its operation against government employes.

"If government employes are penalized on the basis of the civil service ruling we will endeavor to follow two courses. We will call for a congressional investigation to determine if there has been a transgression, and if it is necessary to protect the rights of these employes we will initiate legislation in congress to that effect."

Referring to Postmaster-General Brown's statement based on the civil service ruling, Mr. Green said: "This warning of the postmaster-general is in sharp contrast with the recent activity of Assistant Postmaster-General Glover, who called upon all appointed postmasters to actively support the candidacy of President Hoover."

The executive council expressed the belief that the civil service commission's attempt to gag government employes would affect many thousand persons on the government pay roll, including letter carriers, postal clerks, railway mail clerks, and employes in public printing offices and navy yards. These employes are organized in such unions as the Railway Mail association, the National Federation of Postoffice Clerks, the National Association of Letter Carriers and the National Association of Rural Letter Carriers.

It was also clear to the executive council that if the ruling of the civil service commission were allowed to stand, attempts would be made to apply the gag policy by state and city civil service bodies.

LABOR QUERIES

Q.—Why is "Big Six" Typographical union of New York so called?

A.—Because it is Union No. 6 of the International Typographical union and because it is also one of the largest of American unions. The name is thus descriptive.

Q.—Did the late William J. Burns ever offer to furnish "inside" information about unions?

A.—It happens that he did, at least once. In 1920, when the A. F. of L. was about to open its convention in Montreal business men of that city reported they were being offered a book by canvassers purporting to represent Burns' agency and that this book, at $50 a copy, would reveal all that went on in the convention. Secretary Morrison reported this to the convention, explaining, of course, that all conventions were entirely open and that nobody needed to pay $50 for what he could learn free of charge.

Q.—Was there ever a threat of general strike of phone employes during the World war?

A.—Yes, and Postmaster-General Burleson issued an order that any employe who went out and stayed out twenty-four hours would be discharged by the government. This order he rescinded upon protest by the A. F. of L. This was in 1919. In 1920 the federation asked removal of Burleson from office.

Q.—Who has been delegate to A. F .of L. conventions the most times?

A.—Best information is that Frank Morrison, A. F. of L. secretary, holds the record. Are there other claims?

DISTINGUISHED GUESTS

W. C. BIRTHRIGHT

DAVIL HANLY

Chattanooga was honored last Thursday and Friday by a visit from two distinguished Tennesseans, in the persons of W. C. Birthright and David Hanly, pictured above. The former is now secretary-treasurer of the Journeymen Barbers' International union, with headquarters at Indianapolis, while the latter is legislative chairman of the Tennessee Federation of Labor.

Mr. and Mrs. Birthright and Mr. Hanly attended a session of the directors of the Southern Summer School for Women Workers in North Carolina, Mr. Birthright being a member of the board.

wide prohibition law was passed over his veto.

While he was governor two of his political friends, Col. Duncan B. Cooper and his son, killed Senator E. W. Carmack. They were convicted in the criminal court of Davidson county. The supreme court affirmed the sentence of Col. Cooper and reversed the decision as to his son. Gov. Patterson pardoned Col. Cooper at the penitentiary gate.

Gov. Patterson has the active support of the Horton machine.

The other candidate is Lewis S. Pope. He was in charge of the penal institutions of this state under five governors. He was discharged from the office of commissioner of institutions by Gov. Horton in 1928. He was a candidate for the democratic nomination for governor that year and received 27,000 votes, which was responsible for the defeat of Mr. McAlister and the election of Gov. Horton.

Mr. Pope was a defender of the convict cantract system. He boasted that the system under which the convicts are worked in the penal institutions of Tennessee was the best system ever devised. Under this system all the products of the prisoners are sold on the open market in unfair competition with the products of free labor employed in manufacturing plants.

The American Federation of Labor actively supported the Cooper-Hawes bill which was enacted into law after it was signed by President Coolidge. While this bill was pending in congress Mr. Pope went to Washington and made an argument against the measure before a congressional committee.

The lash was used as a method of punishment during Mr. Pope's control of the penal institutions, and is still used.

All indications point to the nomination of Mr. McAlister on Thursday. When he is inaugurated governor next January there will be a general housecleaning on Capitol Hill in Nashville.

16, not knowing what salaries are being paid, I cannot say. My idea is that all government employes should be paid on the basis of the purchasing power of the American dollar. No. 17, the life of my own business is dependent upon accomplishing such regulations and taxation. Automobile owners and the railroads are both entitled to a square deal and must have it. No. 18, I do not know. I am not informed. If it would mean any economy in administration, I would favor its elimination. No. 19, most positively. No. 20, I do. No. 21, most emphatically.

W. Corry Smith

No. 1, I am in favor of any reasonable amendment, but do not understand how the commission form works. Nos. 2 and 3, yes. No. 4, I favor a reduction in work hours for both men and women. No. 5, yes. No. 6, my position on this would depend upon economic conditions. No. 7, I favor legislation along the lines recently enacted by congress. No. 8, yes. No. 9, no; not until some law is passed that will take the place of it. No. 10, this is a controversial question, and would listen to any reasonable solution. Nos. 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16 and 17, yes. No. 18, question rather vague. I am open for conviction. Nos. 19 and 20, yes. No. 21, yes; and also county employes.

James A. Schoolfield

No. 1, yes. No. 2, yes. No. 3, yes, and get the money that is used in Question No. 18. No. 4, yes. No. 5, yes, in normal times. No. 6, yes. No. 7, yes, very much. No. 8, yes. No. 9, yes; this is the most unjust law that was ever passed by our state. No. 10, I do, because I am in the place to know about this. No. 11, I favor anything that will help labor. Fred W. Sperry

Nos. 1 to 6, inclusive, yes. No. 7, involves the fundamentals of justice and right of not only labor in its varied branches, but every activity of the nation. Therefore I am in favor of any necessary legislation, that labor may come into its rights and just consideration as nature and nature's God proposed should be accorded them, and sponsor legislation to this end. Nos. 8 to 14, inclusive, yes. No. 15, would say that I sponsor and will approve of any labor plank of my party not inimical to the interest and welfare of labor. Laws in controvention involve home and morals thereof. These dethroned or impaired means for our state and nation disaster. No. 16, I do not, nor any other craft of artisans. Such procedure spells disaster to the gardener, the farmer, merchant, etc. No. 17, I do, and would like to state my reasons, but let my affirmation suffice. No. 18 has been a question of much concern to me. Our constitution provides all citizens shall have a right to vote. Our present system cuts many out of this privilege. If said law prevails, the law should be amended so that registration books should be opened ten days prior to and remain open on election day, giving to every citizen ample opportunity to qualify. Thousands of citizens inadvertently overlook registration until election day. Preferentially, I think we should eliminate the registration law. Nos. 19 to 21, inclusive, yes.

GOSSIP FROM SOUTHERN SHOPS

William Bernhart has converted a small portion of his one-acre farm into a fish pond, said to be one of the finest in the Turkey Foot district. These premises are posted, which means keep out, especially Bill Shelton et al.

LABOR DAY PLANS MOVE

New Features Constantly Being Added for Workers' Greatest Celebration.

Plans for the greatest celebration of Labor Day ever attempted by Chattanooga trades unionists were reported this week as "moving nicely." A meeting of all chairmen of subcommittees was held last Sunday morning, and in every instance satisfactory progress was said to have been made.

Perhaps never before in history has there been such enthusiasm in a project of this character, and such general desire for co-operation. As the program-makers meet and plan stellar features of entertainment for the day, the public generally is rallying to the support of the workers, and it is believed that when features now being planned are assured and the public is informed of their nature, an even greater interest will be manifested.

Added to the monster barbecue, some of the features now in the process of developing are a bathing beauty contest to select "Miss Chattanooga," an "old fiddlers contest" and a great display of fireworks in the evening. The ever-popular field contests for men, women and children of all ages is being arranged for.

Senator Kenneth McKellar has tentatively accepted the invitation to be present and deliver an address.

It is announced that the general committee will hold a short meeting Tuesday night at 7 o'clock sharp, prior to the political meeting at Central Labor hall.

Grant Co. Has Bright New Sign

A bright new sign, 3x50 feet, has just been placed across the front of the W. T. Grant company, on Market street, at a cost of $300. Chattanooga Sign Works, 7½ East Seventh street, operated by S. L. Englander, did the job. Mr. Englander is, course, a member of Local 226.

It is reported that the Brushville baseball team lost the game with the Pea Ridge Bearcats last Saturday because their star pitcher ripped his pants and had to go out of the game. A case where a stitch in time would have saved the nine.

BARBERS GAIN MEMBERSHIP IN DARK DAYS

Rolls Increase in Spite of Depression.

BELIEVED RECORD TOPS ALL OTHERS

Quiet Campaign Brings Fine Results for Militant Organization.

Indianapolis, Ind., Aug. 5.—Two months after the inauguration of the new organization policy of the Journeymen Barbers' union, (based on a winter ending campaign), a survey discloses the fact that the organization has made an actual net gain in membership, despite the depression and the continuous onslaught against organized labor over the country through wage cuts and various other anti-union devices.

As far as can be ascertained, the Journeymen Barbers' union is the only organization of workers in the country that is making an actual increase in membership during these dark days.

James C. Shanessy, general president, in a statement to the labor press of America, said his union had started the campaign with 100 per cent organization as its goal.

"The campaign started by the barbers' union is not of the spectacular kind," President Shanessy said in his statement. "We realize what a job we have cut out for ourselves, but intend to keep at it until it is finished. We must walk before we can run, but progress can be made even at walking, and none if we stand still.

"A survey by Secretary-Treasurer C. C. Birthwright shows that two months after we opened our campaign our membership rolls carry an actual net increase over every conceivable sort of handicap. While this increase is not enormous, yet it is an actual gain and not a loss, for which we are appreciative. As far as I am able to ascertain no other international union is duplicating that record at this particular time.

"I believe now is the time to organize. The wage earners of America never have stood more in need of the protection of trade unionism than they do now. The attempts to scuttle wage structures and lengthen hours of labor is a flank attack on the organized workers and should be resisted to the limit. It is a warning that we must be better organized.

"Realizing this, the journeymen barbers decided to take the offensive instead of being put on the defensive. Our membership is wholly enlisted for the great continuous campaign. It is a permanent part of our organization policy.

"I am glad to note that the American Federation of Teachers has engaged in a general organizing campaign to stop pay slashes and disorganization of the teaching profession. The teachers of the country have been badly dealt with. Where can you find a public servant greater than the school teacher? The mentor who trains our boys and girls for the leadership of tomorrow. The teachers deserve the greatest consideration from the public, occupying as they do the most important place in our social scheme.

"The employing world has gone mad in its obsession that wage cuts bring prosperity. No greater fallacy ever existed. Even the president of the United States, after urging employers not to cut wages, has gone out to deflate governmental employes, none of whom are any better paid than they should be. The richest government in the world should not be niggardly toward its employes, it should set the example for consideration of its workers.

"States, counties and cities are making the wage slash 'remedy' to fight. Judges on the bench and other responsible officers of government are being reduced in salaries or are being threatened with reductions. One Illinois city actually put its offices on the auction block and sold them to the lowest 'bidders' regardless of qualifications. This orgy of wage cutting should be stopped. It cannot bring any good to the workers, and surely no good to the business men and merchants. A servant of the people is worthy of his hire. Much of the wage slashing and talk of 'economies' is purely political bunk put out for election purposes, and is entirely selfish. The public should not be fooled by it. It is up to organized labor to fight against these inroads into the earnings of the workers.

"Our union has enlisted in this war for its duration. We will co-operate with all organized labor in the endeavor to get justice for the workers. Our own campaign shows that results will follow the right effort. Organization is what counts. Even with the comparatively small numerical strength of organized labor wonders have been accomplished. What could we do if fully organized?

New York Unions Record Progress In Wage Battle

Stage Hands Nearer Agreement, Printers Accept Arbitration of Increase Proposals, Garment Workers Ratify.

New York City, Aug. 4.—A week of vital development for three important unions has just closed with brighter skies.

Theatrical Protective Union No. 1, stage hands, moved nearer a wage agreement, apparently holding the line against a proposed 33 1/3 reduction proposed by the League of New York Theaters.

The union also opened the door to Sunday performances, but these can begin only after agreement between the stage hands and Actors' Equity.

Typographical Union No. 6 has agreed to wage arbitration with the publishers. A board of five, two chosen by each side and a fifth by these four, will hear the publishers' plea for a reduction and the union's demand for an increase.

6-Hour Day Left Out.

The publishers refused to arbitrate the union's six-hour day demand, but agreed that any publisher might operate on a six-hour basis, using the rate of pay determined by the arbitration board.

President Charles P. Howard, of the I. T. U., acted as spokesman for the local committee in the meeting with the publishers.

Deadlock existed for some weeks, the last meeting having been June 20.

The union wage increase proposal which is to be arbitrated is as follows:

For day work, $1.60 per hour—$60 for five days totaling 37½ hours.

For night work, $1.67 per hour—$62.30 for five nights totaling 37½ hours.

For third shifts, $1.86 per hour—$65 for five days totaling 35 hours.

The agreement provides that if the arbitration board of two publishers and two printers cannot agree within thirteen days on a chairman, the choice shall be made by Harvey J. Kelly, labor representative of the American Newspaper Publishers' association, of Indianapolis, and Mr. Howard. Four days after the chairman is chosen arguments will begin before the board.

Ratify Garment Contract.

The third important development was ratification by a meeting of 1,000 shop chairmen of cloak makers' unions of the agreement entered into between the union officers and the three organizations of employers in the industry, through the instrumentality of Lieut.-Gov. Herbert H. Lehman. David Dubinsky, I. L. G. U. W. president, and Isidore Nagler, general chairman of the joint board, were the speakers.

COAL STRIKE BRINGS SOLDIERS; MEETINGS, PARADES BANNED

Brussels, Belgium.—The government sent a large contingent of soldiers to the coal-mining area around Charleroi because of the serious nature of the miners' strike, which is spreading to other trades. The unrest is accentuated because of growing unemployment.

Thirty strikers and one hundred policemen were injured in clashes in the coal region. Women who hurled stones led battalions in upon the police.

The strike was precipitated by a wage dispute. As soon as the coal strike was well under way it was extended to industrial areas, stopping furnaces, gas and cement plants and electricity and gas works. Transport was halted, and some of the more militant strikers made threats of a march on Brussels.

In an attempt to stop the strike the authorities prohibited processions and meetings in the affected area under penalty of ten years' imprisonment for the participants.

The Voice Of The People

Tennesseans went to the polls Thursday and expressed their preference for their favorite candidates in a large number of major political contests, chief of which, of course, was the gubernatorial race. The democrats, it appears at this writing, have nominated Hon. Hill McAlister, while the republicans chose Hon. John E. McCall, Memphis attorney and leader in American Legion circles. Warm support of ex-service men was perhaps the greatest factor in Mr. McCall's defeat of Hal Clements, Knoxville attorney, whose candidacy was given considerable strength by a splendid record in the state legislature.

One of the most surprising results of the democratic state primary was the utter collapse of the Patterson campaign and the thorough repudiation of the Horton-Lea-Caldwell state machine, the Patterson forces apparently switching at the last hour to the cause of Lewis S. Pope and making it possible for the former commissioner of institutions to run a close race against Mr. McAlister, who had the indorsement of the non-partisan political committee of the Tennessee Federation of Labor and the Railroad Brotherhoods. Had Mr. Pope's public record been such as to bring the labor support to his cause, he would undoubtedly have been the nominee.

In the Third district congressional race labor took no formal issue, both Congressman McReynolds and Judge W. M. Cameron having public records favorable to the masses. The ex-service men's vote here also was probably a big factor in Mr. McReynolds' decisive victory, Mr. Cameron having early in the race declared against payment of the soldiers' bonus, which had the hearty support of the incumbent.

State Senator J. Mitt Payne, who served in the last session of the general assembly with outstanding ability, was nominated for re-election without opposition in either party.

The democratic legislative ticket is headed by Esquire Ed Robinson, whose progressive, businesslike activities as a member of the county court were responsible for his leading the field of ten candidates. Mr. W. Corry Smith, who ran second, is a young lawyer making his first plunge into the political whirl. Mr. Smith is personally popular, and a host of warm friends predict for him a successful career in politics. At this writing third place on the democratic ticket is in doubt between Mr. Frank Moore, also a young lawyer, and Miss Sarah Ruth Frazier, who represented Hamilton county in the legislature of 1927.

The republican legislative ticket, nominated without opposition, consists of Charles H. Bennett, Henry L. Barger and J. C. Choate.

Labor Department Is on 5-Day Week On Doak's Orders

First Government Division to Abolish Saturday Work—Action Follows A. F. of L. Policy and Is Called Good Example.

Washington, Aug. 4.—For the first time in history a government department under a cabinet member goes on the five-day week.

Effective for the balance of the fiscal year the United States labor department will operate five days a week. Observers expect the practice will later be made permanent, if corrective legislation can be had adjusting vacations and certain other matters.

The action of Secretary of Labor W. N. Doak in ordering the five-day week into effect is in line with the position taken by the American Federation of Labor.

Official Order Tells Employes of Plan

Secretary Doak has declared the example of his department would be a good one for all industry to follow. Announcing the change to the five-day week, Secretary Doak said:

"Having in mind the appropriations made available for the present fiscal year, the nature of the work of the department, and all other factors, the departmental staff after a most careful and painstaking survey reached the unanimous conclusion that the department of labor best could meet the reduction of the salaries of the employes required by congress through decreasing the hours of service one additional one-half day each week."

JOBLESS VICTIMIZED BY FAKE EMPLOYMENT SCHEME

St. Petersburg, Fla.—The St. Petersburg Advocate condemned what it called a "hoax" to victimize the unemployed here.

According to the Advocate, Charles N. Raphun, head of the city employment service, announced through the press that he had an order for sixty mechanics. Over 500 jobless workers massed in front of the office to apply for the work. They were referred to the promoter of a race track project. The jobs offered by the promoter consisted of selling race track stock for $1 a share, of which the seller kept 50 cents.

The race track promoter refused to employ union labor, and is alleged to have told the job applicants that when a large amount of the stock had been unloaded on the community they would be given construction work, their wages to be half in cash and half in stock of the company.

29 WOMEN WORKERS ENROLLED AT BARNARD SUMMER SCHOOL

New York.—Miiss Ernestine L. Friedman, director of the Barnard Summer School for Women Workers in Industry, announced that thirty-nine working girls, representing ten major industries, had been enrolled in the school.

Central Labor Hall In Bright New Garb

Local Union Members Point the Way for Market Street Merchants.

Central Labor hall, at 829½ Market street, is now one of the most attractive buildings, outside and inside, on the "main stem," having received during the past few days a brand-new dress consisting of painting, decorating and lettering. The local trades unionists' home stands out among the surrounding buildings, most of which have not known the touch of a craftsman's brush in many years. Above the third-floor windows, entirely across the front, appear the words "Central Labor Hall," and between the third and second stories "Chattanooga Trades and Labor Council and Affiliated Local Unions." Above the entrance way a neat and attractive sign announces to all comers that this is the "Central Labor Hall," and the stairways have been correspondingly brightened.

Paint for the entire job, which consumed fourteen gallons, was contributed by the Gilman Paint company, with the following members of Local 226 donating their services to the cause: Roy Bowen, Carl Evans, George Harrison, G. S. Witt, Dave Jones and C. F. Weidner.

Material and labor for the lettering was a contribution of M. H. Ortwein and H. C. Bradfield, of the Ortwein Sign company, both, of course, members of Local 226.

The entire "job" is a credit to organized labor and to the craftsmen whose fine spirit moved them to give their time and defy an unusual hazard due to what is declared to be a rather uncertain cornice from which scaffolds were suspended.

COAL STABILIZATION BILL ENDORSED BY AFL COUNCIL

Atlantic City, N. J.—The Davis-Kelly bill for the stabilization of the coal industry, which failed of enactment at the recent session of congress, would be kept in the legislative program of the American Federation of Labor and another attempt made to obtain its passage at the December session of congress, declared William Green, president of the federation, at the summer session of the federation's executive council here.

The principal features of the Davis-Kelly bill are:

The creation of a federal bituminous coal commission, all the expense of which shall be borne by the coal industry.

The requirements that coal mining corporations doing an interstate business shall obtain a federal license.

The provision that licensed corporations may join a selling pool or joint selling agency for the marketing of their product.

The stipulation that employes of coal mines shall have the right of collective bargaining, the right to organize, and the right of assemblage.

13,000,000 Jobless Predicted by Green

AFL Executive Council Regrets Failure of Congress to Enact Adequate Relief Measures—Food Riots Visioned.

Atlantic City, N. J., July 28.—The executive council of the American Federation of Labor expressed its keen disappointment because of the failure of congress to enact what labor considered adequate measures to relieve unemployment as well as a constructive agricultural relief bill.

Speaking for the council, William Green, president of the federation, expressed the opinion that the unemployment situation is becoming "increasingly menacing," and that unemployment is growing. He said the federation's experts estimated that there would be 13,000,000 jobless the coming winter as compared with 11,000,000 at present. Last winter the number of jobless was estimated at 7,000,000.

He was certain that the relief demands this winter would be so great as to swamp the resources of local relief agencies.

"Many people who contributed to community chests last winter are now looking for help themselves," he added.

"I do not want to be an alarmist," Mr. Green asserted, "but there are evidences of serious social unrest due to the unemployment situation. The bonus army is an army of unemployed.

"Those who are flocking to Washington are idle men unable to get work. That is a menacing situation because of the possibility of rioting.

"While I do not think there is any danger that constituted authority will be overthrown, the situation is disturbing. Food riots may lead to social disorder."

Charles Edwin Moss Dies at Monteagle

Charles Edwin, 11-months-old son of Mr. and Mrs. William Moss, died Sunday at noon at the home of Mrs. Moss' parents, Mr. and Mrs. Dave Smith, at Monteagle.

Mr. and Mrs. Moss reside at Nashville, where Mr. Moss is a linotype operator on the Nashville Tennessean. The child became ill some weeks ago, and on the advice of physicians was taken to Monteagle. The change, however, proved fruitless, and the little one passed away a few days later.

Funeral services were held Monday morning from the Church of the Holy Comforter on the campus of DuBose Memorial school at Monteagle, Dean Richards and the Rev. E. H. Merriam conducting, and the remains were laid to rest in the family plot at Monteagle cemetery.

The Labor World speaks for a host of local friends in extending to Mr. and Mrs. Moss heartfelt sympathy and condolences in their hour of sorrow.

Unorganized Quit Over Wide Area, Fighting Pay Cut

Scores of Plants Forced Into Idleness in Spontaneous Uprising—Great R. J. Reynolds Plant Puts on Extra Guards.

(By Staff Correspondent.)

High Point, N. C., July 28.—Labor in the giant industries of Piedmont North Carolina may be cheap, as the writers of the nation have long heralded, but it is no longer contented. Two years of frequent reductions in its meager wages have precipitated a rebellion of labor that has stopped the wheels of hundreds of factories in the heart of the industrial Piedmont and is causing sober thought in the executive chambers of the national government.

And the revolt, apparently leaderless and unorganized, is spreading.

The demonstration, which has brought perhaps 50,000 men and women out of the factories where they have been wont to toil long hours for slim pay, has been remarkably free from disorder. The workers themselves have exhibited a good-natured spirit, but they mean business about not going back and about keeping the plants shut until orders for new pay cuts are rescinded.

State Watches Closely.

In the meantime, on the fringe of the scene of revolt stand the minions of law and order and government ready to take a hand should the city authorities send the word.

Extra deputies have been sworn in by sheriffs. An air of suspense pervades official circles.

The protest against wage cuts started among several hundred hosiery workers. The boarders led the walk-out. Many of them are members of the United Textile Workers of America. Tuesday morning found the furniture plants joining the walk-out. Groups of workers entered other industrial concerns during the day and cut off the power so that every plant in High Point is idle.

Whole Region Affected.

The revolt quickly spread to Thomasville, Lexington and Kernersville, where many furniture and woodwork plants are located. Numbers of plants in smaller places all through this section have since joined the walkout. It is regarded as probable that the big industries at Burlington, Greensboro, Durham and Winston-Salem will be involved, as drastic wage cuts have been made in practically all of them within recent weeks. Versions of the stretch-out have been inaugurated in a number of textile mills at Greensboro, Burlington and Durham during recent weeks.

Reynolds Plant Guarded.

At Winston-Salem extensive precautions have been taken by officials of the giant R. J. Reynolds tobacco factories to prevent a walkout of their workers. That the concern expects trouble is indicated by the large number of extra guards on duty.

Communists do not figure in the uprising, which is unparalleled in North Carolina's industrial history, except in the imaginative minds of industrial captains and law enforcement officers. Some of them are becoming greatly alarmed over the part the dreaded "reds" are playing in the general strike against wages that will not support "life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness" even on modest proportions.

The men and women who toil have revolted against wage cuts, and when 50,000 in one locality take that stand something is bound to happen.

Veteran Unionist Goes to Reward

Robert E. Lee, veteran member of Local 226, Painters, and of the Brotherhood of Railway Trainmen, passed away last Sunday at a local hospital, following a long illness. During his active years Mr. Lee took a deep interest in union affairs, and was loyal to the cause of labor, giving freely of his time and talents in the work of his organizations. Besides the widow, two daughters survive, Misses Ruth and Virginia.

Funeral services were held Tuesday afternoon from Woodlawn Baptist church, Rev. W. T. McMahan conducting. Pallbearers were Emmett Fultz, C. F. Weidner, George Durham, A. X. Peffer, E. T. Hinds and J. B. Mahoney.

The Labor World joins other friends in extending sincere condolences to the bereaved relatives.

PRE-SET WAGES, 30-HOUR WEEK ON ROAD WORK

Regulations Issued for Federal Employment.

USE OF CONVICT LABOR TO BE BARRED

Millions of Dollars Will Be Expended Under Emergency Relief Act.

Washington, Aug. 4.—Provisions to to provide the greatest possible amount of employment for local resident workers, a provision barring use of convict labor, a provision for the 30-hour week and a stipulation for pre-determination of wages are contained in instructions just issued by the bureau of public roads to all district engineers who will have charge of federal road work in which millions of dollars will be expended under the emergency relief act. In this connection it is recalled that a bill for pre-determination of wages on federal work generally was vetoed by President Hoover after having been passed by the last session of congress.

The new regulations are of vital importance to every state and set up an entirely new basis of employment relations in road work.

Working of Ruling Outlined.

In a memorandum to district engineers the bureau outlined just how the new regulations will affect the specifications for the work as to the selection of labor, insurance of the maximum development of labor, and other factors.

The memorandum and the amendment to the road construction regulations follow in part:

Rules on Selection of Labor.

District engineers shall examine all advertisements for bids, proposals and contracts submitted for projects under the terms of this act to see that suitable "Special Provisions" have been included as outlined in this memorandum.

1.—Selection of Labor.

Special provisions must be inserted in the contracts designed to insure that the maximum distribution of employment be obtained, that employment be furnished to persons most in need of it, and that preference in employment be given, when they are qualified, to ex-service men with dependents.

Such special provisions must call for the selection of unskilled labor by the contractor from lists furnished by special agencies, where such agencies are available. Such provision must, however, permit the contractor to obtain needed employes elsewhere when such agencies fail to function and to terminate the services of employes deemed by him to be inefficient or unsatisfactory.

Out-of-State Skilled Labor.

The use of clauses designed to forbid the employment of skilled labor not residents of the state in which the work is being done will not be approved.

The use of clauses designed to limit the employment of unskilled labor to residents of the state will be approved, provided such clauses permit the employment of labor not resident in the state, when a sufficient number of satisfactory laborers, residents of the state, is not found to be available.

Where the term "county employment committee" is used herein, other terms may be substituted to indicate other agencies such as state or federal employment bureaus, the Red Cross or other relief organizations, as may be designated by the state.

The following types of special provisions will be required:

The contractor shall employ labor, as far as it is available, from lists furnished by the county employment committee, giving preference in selection from such lists, where qualified, to ex-service men with dependents.

The contractor shall inform the county employment committee of his needs for labor and request a list of names from which he may select his requirements. Should the committee fail o supply such liss within forty-eight hours after the receipt of such request, the contractor shall be free

The Social Ideals of Jesus of Nazareth

An Interpretation

Written for The Labor World
By WILLIAM L. MOSS

Chapter VI

JESUS' EVALUATION OF LIFE

Part X

Religion is a mirror in which is reflected the prevailing social condition.
—Bebel

Jesus was a popular teacher, not the expounder of a scientific teaching. It is the unaffected occasionalism of His teaching, its detached and fragmentary form and the fact that

WM. L. MOSS

He taught without posing as if the future were belonging to Him that gives to His teaching a significance that must not be overlooked in a study of what constitutes His teaching material.

With hardly any effort I could list here repeated instances taken from the four gospels showing that, contrary to the impression advocates of "a large and infinite Christology broad enough to embrace religionally all peoples and finally absorbing all other faiths" seek to establish in people's minds, Jesus did not habitually crave and seek contact with the surging and ever-changing crowd. Nor, when thrown in contact with great crowds of people, was His head ever turned by the presence of mere numbers who gathered to hear Him. His oft-repeated "O ye of little faith" has little if any connection with the acceptance of His announcement of the immediacy of the Kingdom. The words are the form into which the reaction in His keen and discerning mind vocally shaped itself when He realized a vast majority of the great numbers of people who came to hear Him teach, audiences which sometimes numbered as many as four and five thousand souls at a time, came either with the hopes of being fed or came out of sheer curiosity to see the young and popular "rab" from the northern province of Galilee.

In spite of the fact that he was constantly being thronged, Jesus serenely went about the task of fulfilling His mission and was entirely unaffected by the seeming sincere adulation of the multitudes of people who gathered from time to time to hear His voice. Were our present goal different I might point out the tragic elements which interwove themselves into His ministry as it dramatically progressed to its vicarious consummation and which were embodied solely and only in the apparent attachment of the people for the popular Preacher of the Galilean hill country. But we cannot, at least now, turn our attention in that direction.

The only fact that interests us just at this time is that Jesus was primarily thinking of the individual and dealt with men and women as such. Yet in no single instance on record did Jesus seek "clinical material" on which to demonstrate the occurrence of certain predetermined spiritual reactions to a system of teaching He had invented. In giving Himself and the benefits of His inherent powers to individuals with complete disinterestedness as to what the world about Him was thinking, Jesus' life and words reflected the "prevailing social condition" of His day and time. The common people, as they are today, were being deprived of the full enjoyment of life, and individuals, as a consequence, were wrongly interpreting what ought to be their attitude towards one another, for the fight was then, as now, to appropriate the high places for oneself.

What Next!

Glass pipe will now be used in food and chemical plants. A large obstacle to its use was lack of a heat-proof and air-proof joint that could be taken down and put up by non-specialist mechanics without breaking. Such a joint has been devised.

Starvation Relief for Labor

Reports charging almost unbelievable victimization of jobless workers and their families by private and public charity groups are becoming more and more frequent and deserve the serious attention of labor organizations. An illustration of this victimization in Baltimore, Md., is given by Henry F. Broening, editor of the Baltimore Federationist.

The mayor of Baltimore appointed a committee to devise a work program for the jobless. The committee fixed the depressing wage rate of 30 cents an hour. Applications for relief are investigated by the Family Welfare association. Mr. Broening throws the following spotlight on a sample case that reached the Baltimore Federation of Labor:

> "An electrician, with a wife and four small children, as a result of long unemployment was compelled to apply to the Family Welfare association for assistance. He was sent to a job and given three days' work a week at a wage of $2.40 a day.
> "After a few weeks elapsed the charity organization discovered that he had an automobile. He was sent for and told that unless he disposed of the machine he could not secure this employment any longer.
> "The machine in question was a 1928 Chevrolet. It was appraised by a dealer and valued at $40. The dealer refused to buy the car at any figure, and the welfare officials had no purchaser for the car. Notwithstanding all this, the Family Welfare association insisted that he must dispose of the car or get no relief."

From the poignant description of this case by the editor of the Baltimore Federationist it would seem that the policy of the Family Welfare association is that unemployed workers and their dependents are to be denied relief unless they sell or give away every bit of property they have acquired by their own hand work and become veritable paupers in the most complete sense of the term.

This conception of unemployment relief is utterly devoid of that keen sense of humanitarianism which should be the animating spirit of organizations consecrated to the administration of charity.

Undoubtedly the Baltimore idea of absolute pauperization as the test of eligibility for participation in relief funds is also the controlling force in other cities.

This test should be thoroughly challenged by organized labor throughout the United States. City central bodies will perform a meritorious work in the public interest by investigating the administration of relief funds in every community. They should insist that unemployed workers and their families shall not be compelled to sacrifice every element of self-respect in order to secure the necessaries of life in a country that is really surfeited with all the good things that human beings require.

Hoover's Relief Measure

From the standpoint of measuring up to the needs of our more than ten million totally unemployed persons, the federal relief measure approved by the president is disappointing.

The measure authorizes the expenditure of $2,122,000 allocated as follows:

Available for loans to states and municipalities for relief of the unemployed, $300,000,000.

Loans to public corporations to finance self-liquidating projects, $1,500,000,000.

For advances to states under the federal-aid highway, $120,000,000.

For roads and trails in the national parks and forests, $16,000,000.

For public buildings and waterway improvements when the condition of the federal treasury permits, $186,224,000.

To finance these projects the measure increases the borrowing power of the Reconstruction Finance corporation from $2,000,000,000 to $3,800,000,000.

The $192,000,000 authorized for federal construction projects will be planned and executed so leisurely as to make no tangible inroads on the unemployed army.

The $120,000,000 for advances to states for highway construction, if entirely used up, will provide temporary employment for a few thousand.

The authorization of $1,500,000,000 to finance self-liquidating projects, even if it is all taken by public construction corporations, is undeterminable from the viewpoint of jobs. The engineering and other details connected with such projects are accompanied with so many tedious delays that employment afforded by them will necessarily be remote.

For immediate relief to the unemployed there remain the $300,000,000 to be loaned to states and municipalities. Considering the constantly increasing distress in all parts of the country, this sum is little more than a gesture. On the basis of ten million jobless, it would give each of them $30. Already Pennsylvania has asked for a loan of $45,000,000. Long before winter comes the entire $300,000,000 should be allocated and spent. Then the only alternative to permitting millions to hunger and starve will be a special session of congress.

Solving Unemployment by Miracle

Rev. Allen Clay Lambert, pastor of St. Thomas' Lutheran Church in the Bronx, is reported in the New York Times as having referred to unemployment as "the hell of the American" in a sermon on the relationship of Christianity to the present economic crisis in which over ten million adults are denied the right to work for a living for themselves and their families.

In considering the causes of unemployment, Dr. Lambert included lack of standards and uniformity, excessive seasonal production, speculation, bad credits, bad advertising, and a lot of other abstractions usually found in academic dissertations on this subject. Finally he reached labor-displacing machinery.

> "Another cause of unemployment," he said, "is the fact that machines are replacing men. In steel blast furnaces seven men do the work of sixty while the pig iron is being cast, and two men replace one hundred and twenty-six in loading it."

He offered no remedy, and reached the helpless conclusion that "a miracle seems to be the only way out."

Dr. Lambert is mistaken. It requires no miracle, no intervention of divine powers, to settle unemployment.

Our business concerns are controlled by those who own them or their representatives. Those who own and control these concerns also own and control work opportunities.

Over a long period of years these owners and controllers have hired inventors to develop machines with which, as Dr. Lambert truly says, seven men do the work of sixty and two the work of one hundred and twenty-six.

During this period, these owners and controllers compelled the smaller number of employes with machines to work practically the same number of hours per week as the larger number of employes worked without machines. The surplus workers resulting from this numbskull policy were discharged and make up very largely the present army of ten million jobless.

The only effective way to abolish unemployment is to reduce the length of the work week and work day to whatever extent may be necessary to put all the ten million jobless to work. Those who own and control industry have the power to do this, and they are the only group possessing this power.

The only effective way to prevent unemployment in the future is to progressively reduce the length of the work week and work day so as to keep all employes at work. Those who own and control industry also have the power to do this, and they are the only group possessing such power.

This action requires no miracle. It requires nothing but a number of executive orders from the officials of our corporations.

Once the principle of the shorter work week and work day is established by our big corporations, economic sanctions of various sorts may be used to bring recalcitrant employers into line.

No, Dr. Lambert. Miracles are not required to settle the unemployment problem. It can be done, and should be done, by application of heroic doses of everyday commonsense to our system of production and distribution by those who are in executive control.

Sees Light on Wages and Hours

Senator Giovanni Agnelli, head of the huge Fiat car and airplane factories in Turin, Italy, has become a convert to the American Federation of Labor policy that the length of the work week and work day should be reduced in accordance with the output of labor with machinery, and that wages should be increased to provide adequate buying power for the products of mass production. A press dispatch quotes Senator Agnelli as saying:

> "I think no crisis in history has been so far-reaching as the present one. It has stricken the entire world.
> "What should be the exact means of solving this problem? Reduce working hours and increase wages proportionately.
>
> "It is known that any economic crisis lies in the lack of balance between production and consumption—that is, between production and purchasing power.
>
> "It is not hard to see that purchasing power has greatly declined throughout the world.
>
> "So far, technical progress—that is, machinery and rationalization—has been directed with the object of producing the maximum in the shortest possible time and with the minimum of labor, regardless of the resultant unemployment.
> "The formula should be revised thus: Produce the maximum in minimum time, and shorten the working schedule for each man without reducing the number of workers.
> "This move to reduce hours and increase wages should have international action behind it."

The international action suggested by Senator Agnelli should not be hard to realize when there is a unity of opinion among European employers as to the necessity of establishing shorter hours.

For years business men in European countries have established both national and international cartels to control the output of various commodities in order to maintain what they called reasonable prices. Similar cartels could be established to secure the shorter work week and work day.

We would suggest that Senator Agnelli start such a movement. So far, fascist Italy is known in the family of nations for the inauguration of measures for the benefit of labor. If Senator Agnelli should take the lead in a successful European hours reduction policy he might add a bit of creditable lustre to the tarnished picture which Italy under the dictator of Mussolini presents to the world.

The Passing Show

Note and Comment on Things Doing in the March of Events

It would surprise most trade unionists to be told the name of the international banking house behind one of the American railroads most talked of for fairness to labor.

Be that as it may, the proposal, O. K.'d by the I. C. C., to create four big rail systems out of hundreds of roads, grouping them around four leaders, raises cain among railroaders.

Rail unions are fighting hard to protect the interests of workers. Nothing in the consolidation plan as it stands safeguards the workers. There will be plenty of fireworks before the consolidation becomes effective, if ever.

How comes it that representatives of management and investors can toss great enterprises around, looking only to savings of money, looking not at all to safeguarding human beings?

Every possible operating economy would be splendid, if the wage-earners got a proper share of the benefit.

* * *

Pass from railroads to steel. U. S. Steel pays its preferred dividend. The preferred stockholders are preferred, all right.

The workers? Oh, they had their wages cut and thousands have been let out.

Carl Sandburg, poet, sings a folk song about the boll weevil. Each last line is "I'll have a home." The weevil gets his home, though he eats up all the poor cotton worker's product and finally nests right in his shirt. All boll weevils are not in the cotton fields, it seems. Some own preferred stock.

Twenty thousand men are re-employed in New England, several thousand in other sections. Associated Press, systematically hunting re-employment stories, finds these evidences of renewed work.

Meanwhile statistical authorities, like the American Federation of Labor, report untmployment is still growing. Chances all are that returning prosperity will affect business and financial interests long before it gets to the wage-earners in really large numbers.

However, there will be some immediate gain in employment from the beginning of the movement back to prosperity, which may have already begun.

Labor Party Ticket In Pennsylvania Field

Secretary Announces Complete Slate Will Be Filed—Chief Fight to Be on Legislators Who Voted for 'Economy Bill.'

Harrisburg, Pa., July 28.—The labor party of Pennsylvania will go into the general elections in this state with a complete slate of candidates backed by organized labor, according to an announcement issued here today by the executive board of the labor party through its secretary, Charles Oyler. According to present indications, the efforts of the labor party will be largely centered on the election of candidates for the general assembly of Pennsylvania, who will be run in opposition to members of the legislature who voted for the so-called "economy" bill now before the state senate. Secretary Oyler states that the labor party candidates will be announced before the last date for filing the names on the labor slate, which is about seven weeks off.

"Nothing less than outright political war to the death is possible for labor in Pennsylvania, in the opinion of the labor party executive board, as a result of the action of a majority of the members of the legislature this week," the statement by Oyler said.

The Pennsylvania federation of labor has prepared a program which would provide the funds for relief and public works program.

Don't say you are too tired; the weather is bad; or there is too much quibbling and "hot air" to interest me.

Every time you miss a meeting and leave it to the other fellow to look out for your interest, you are doing an injustice both to yourself and your organization.

Your views on especially vital subjects should be represented in discussion and by vote, and the only way for this to be done is for you to be at your union meeting.

You are responsible for the good and welfare of your organization, and non-attendance of union meetings on your part is not excuse enough for you to voice your opinion after a measure has been passed. It is then time for you to concur in what has been done and work in harmony with the officers and other members of your union.

Go to your union meetings regularly and induce others to do the same, because one important thing to remember is the meaning of the slogan:

to employ any available labor, provided, however, that, when qualified, ex-service men with dependents, or other labor living in the county, adjacent counties, or in the state, shall be given preference in employment in the order named.

The contractor may employ such men as are necessary for the supervision of the construction and for the operation of power equipment requiring skilled operators without regard to such lists.

Any laborer found to be incompetent may be discharged, but it will be required that replacement be made from lists furnished by the county employment committee, when such lists are available.

The contractor may be released from the requirement of obtaining labor from local labor lists upon satisfactory evidence of unfair or discriminatory practices in the establishment of the local labor lists.

Rules on Wages and Hours.

II.—Wages, Hours of Employment and Conditions of Employment:

Provisions must be made in the proposal fixing the minimum wages which contractors must pay to both skilled labor and unskilled labor.

Such rates must also be stated in the invitation for bids.

The minimum wages for both skilled and unskilled labor shall be fixed at an hourly rate. In fixing such minimum wages, a minimum may be fixed for each of the various classes of skilled labor, or a single minimum may be fixed to cover all classes of skilled labor. The term, "skilled labor" as used herein, shall be taken to embrace all employes other than unskilled labor, and other than those in executive, administrative and supervisory positions hereinafter defined.

These minimum wages shall be fixed by the state authority, subject to concurrence by the district engineer, but shall not exceed the prevailing wage ordinarily existing for such labor in the locality. The district engineer of the bureau so far as possible will check any wage so fixed by the state for reasonable conformity with wages paid on other federal-aid projects in the vicinity, and base his approval or disapproval of the rate thereon.

SHORTER HOURS CONSIDERED.

Cleveland.—The possibility of congressional action to secure a reduction of work for all employes was considered at a conference of Dr. Howard W. Blake and Isidor Teitelbaum, of New York, the latter representing the National Association of Furniture Manufacturers, and A. F. Whitney, president of the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen.

The group considered a plan to reduce the hours of work on a national basis as an emergency measure to adjust machine power and man power to meet present economic requirements.

Boy Scout Uniforms Made by Union Labor

Sweet-Orr & Co. Employing Members of United Garment Workers of America, Get Big Five-Year Contract.

New York, July 28.—James E. West, chief executive of the Boy Scouts of America, and Stanley A. Sweet, president of Sweet-Orr & Co., Inc., concluded a contract under which Sweet-Orr & Co. will manufacture uniforms, equipment and accessories for the Boy Scouts of America. Members of the United Garment Workers of America will be employed exclusively in making the goods called for by the contract, which involves an annual business of about $1,500,000. The articles will carry the label of the Garment Workers' union.

Sweet-Orr Distributors, Inc., has been formed as a subsidiary wholly owned by Sweet-Orr & Co., to handle all Boy Scout materials.

Five factories will be devoted to making Boy Scout uniforms and equipment, located in Newburg and Wappingers Falls, N. Y.; Philadelphia and Pottstown, Pa., and Joliet, Ill. Workers will have an opportunity to increase their earnings and in a short time additional workers will be put on.

Service will be rendered from three big distributing depots for Boy Scouts products located at Newburgh, N. Y.; Joliet, Ill., and San Francisco, Cal. Each of these three shipping points will serve the nearest of about 2,500 retail dealers on uniforms and accessories, who in turn will cater to 900,000 Boy Scouts and uniformed adults of 600 councils. Sweet-Orr salesmen will act as contact men and will aid in various service capacities.

The Boy Scout uniforms, previous to the signing of the five-year contract with the Sweet-Orr firm, were manufactured under nonunion conditions.

Stanley A. Sweet, president of Sweet-Orr & Co., thanked William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor, and his associates in the A. F. of L., the railroad brotherhoods, and the union label trades department of the A. F. of L. for their loyal support in the promotion of the sale of garments bearing the union label and stated that he was mighty proud to be able to equip the hundreds of thousands of sons of its members with Boy Scout uniforms bearing the union label of the United Garment Workers of America.

He further stated that one of the benefits to be derived by the Boy Scouts is an approximately one-third reduction in prices on uniforms.

Sweet-Orr & Co. have had contractual relations with the United Garment Workers for forty-one years.

AFL COUNCIL OPPOSES SEA SAFETY TREATY

Atlantic City, N. J.—The executive council of the American Federation of Labor adopted a resolution urging President Hoover and the U. S. senate to refrain from ratifying the proposed treaty on safety of life at sea pending in the senate committee on foreign relations.

The council held the effect of such ratification "will be to surrender the rights of congress to enact laws to determine the conditions under which vessels, foreign as well as American, are to be permitted to operate out of American ports and will also have the effect of nullifying certain vital sections of the seamen's act and of the inspection laws."

How Cardui Helps Women

"Mal-nutrition" means that your body is not getting enough to keep it up, so that what it has to do is not done well. You may not be eating enough to keep up the work of the body, or there may be something wrong that keeps you from getting full value from the food you eat.

Because of mal-nutrition, some women have aches and pains every month. Such pains should not be neglected.

Take Cardui to give you a better appetite, to give you more strength from the food you eat—to build up and increase your feeling of well-being. Aches and pains go away as you build up with the help of Cardui.

Work Hours Reduced Despite Depression

Average Week in 1842 Was 83 Hours — Half-Century Sees Cut of Nearly 50 Per Cent.

Washington, July 28.—Economic history shows that although the United States has been forced to stand up under ten major financial panics and depressions in the last ninety-two years, wage-earners have been successful in steadily increasing wage scales and reducing hours of labor in the same period.

The 44-hour week that was in operation generally in 1929 represents a reduction of nearly one-half in the length of the wage-earner's workday. In 1840, the average working week was 81 hours and in 1842 it was 83 hours. To the workman of 1932 this may seem almost incredible. A history of wages and hours of labor from colonial days compiled by the U. S. department of labor shows that common laborers in Massachusetts worked these hours. Some grandfathers of wage-earners of today can remember working more than 70 hours weekly.

In 1851 the work-week was reduced generally throughout the United States to 63 hours. Hours of labor remained above 60 hours weekly until 1893, when the record drops to 59 hours. The 55-hour week began to appear soon after 1900, but it was not until 1907 that the hours were reduced still further to 48 hours.

Green Urges Federal Loans for Schools

A. F. of L. President Says Educational Budget Cuts Are Depriving Children of Education.

Atlantic City, N. J.—William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor, declared the executive council of the federation at its summer session here was giving special attention to educational budgets because of the drastic curtailment of educational activities in many communities. He pointed out that if economy programs that called for the discharge of teachers continued, it would mean the breaking down of the morale of the teaching staffs.

He deplored the failure of some cities to pay teachers for months at a time, and in this connection advocated loans by the reconstruction finance corporation to cities whose boards of education had been unable to raise funds for teachers' salaries. In some cases, he continued, a loan from the government is the only thing that will prevent schools from closing.

"Every child should have an equal opportunity to education," Mr. Green said. "The American Federation of Labor always has fought for the upbuilding of the public school system, as it is the cornerstone of democracy."

AFL WANTS RED CROSS RELIEF GARMENTS MADE BY FREEMEN

Atlantic City, N. J.—The executive council of the American Federation of Labor, in session here, authorized William Green, president of the federation, to confer with John Barton Payne, director of the American Red Cross, relative to plans of that organization to make garments out of the 500,000 bales of cotton purchased by the government in its price stabilization program and donated to the Red Cross to relieve destitute families.

"The executive council," Mr. Green said, "was a bit apprehensive that perhaps the cotton might be fabricated into garments in prisons or mills where wages are low and working conditions bad. This would affect union garment workers who have standard wages.

"I was directed by the executive council to see Mr. Payne and government officials to discuss their plans for the manufacture of garments from cotton purchased for the needy and to prevent them from carrying out their policy, if such a policy is contemplated, of having the goods made in prisons or under sweatshop conditions."

MIAMI PRESSMEN ESTABLISH NEW UNEMPLOYMENT BENEFIT

Miami, Fla.—At its July meeting the Miami Local No. 207 of the Printing Pressmen and Assistants' union authorized the payment of $4 per week to each unemployed single member and $6 per week to each married member. In addition to this benefit all pressmen employed in newspaper plants give at least one day's work a week to some unemployed member.

8-HOUR DAY FOR WORKERS IN PLACE OF WAGE CUT

Jacksonville, Fla.—The Jacksonville city commission reduced the length of the work day for employes of the highways and utilities departments to eight hours in lieu of wage reductions.

In view of the fact that the Jacksonville city code makes illegal the employment of any workers more than eight hours in one day, except in emergencies, organized labor wonders why this action was not taken before.

UNION LABEL

What is the objection to union-labeled products?

There would appear to be some objection or else there would be greater general demand for them.

Why not go into this matter now? The time was never more propitious for cooperative effort to popularize union-labeled products. Unionists are usually willing enough to lend aid to efforts to create demand for the label representative of their own craft. Why neglect union-made products of other crafts? Other organized craftsmen are asked to see that your label is on what they purchase. Isn't it only fair to see that their labels are on what you buy?

The union label on products of any description is indisputable evidence the goods were made by union workers, in a union shop and under union conditions. This is the main point in their favor.

By purchasing union-made products with union-earned money unionists are aiding each other. If all union-earned money were spent only for union-made products there would be no enforced idleness among members of organized labor.

Argument is heard that union-labeled products are not easy to obtain. Why aren't they? It is idle to assert that dealers will refuse to stock union-made products if shown sufficient demand exists. Why not create that demand?

Once in a while unionists declare this or that nonunion product is better suited to their taste than union-made goods of a similar kind. Is taste a matter of principle? Isn't it a cultivated sense? Did the founders of organized labor consider taste when formulating the principles upon which the movement is predicated?

No unionist can justify his attitude of noncompliance or indifference unless and until he has exhausted all reasonable efforts to obtain for himself and his home products that bear the symbol of fair labor. There are, perhaps, times when a certain article is unobtainable, but a quest for it may arouse sufficient interest among dealers to make it easy to find the second time inquiry is made.

Labeled hats, shoes, cigarets and other goods are easily obtained in most sections simply because demand for them has been so great dealers have realized the wisdom of stocking them. The average merchant has slight regard for sentiment in business. He wants to handle goods that move. Move the first consignment for him and he will order the second at once.

A demand must first be created. And if organized labor does not create the demand for union-made products, who will?

United and consistent effort to create and maintain a demand for union-made products will lessen unemployment, increase wages and decrease working hours to the glory of the organized labor movement.

ROPOSED TAX CUT FAILS TO IMPRESS SOME

entral Body Holds Plan Impractical.

OOM FOR ECONOMY IS FREELY ADMITTED

ommittee Instructed to Assemble Data on Schools, Taxes, Etc.

Chattanooga trades unionists are not impressed with the present movement to reduce city taxes 25 per cent., if sentiment expressed by delegates at Monday night's regular session of Central Body properly reflects the attitude of the workers.

In discussion of the question, it was pointed out by speakers that such a drastic reduction under present conditions would be impractical if not impossible if the city is to maintain its necessary institutions and program of progress. While it was agreed by every speaker that there may be room for many economies, it was the contention that a proposed 25 per cent. cut is little short of ridiculous.

Among serious objections to the movement was named the probability that the school term would be seriously curtailed, as well as the number and efficiency of teachers, and one speaker contended that the movement for the reduction is sponsored principally by wealthy tax dodgers who are not interested in public schools because of the fact that their own offspring, if any, are sent to private schools and colleges. It was made plain that any interference with the operation of public schools, in order that some big taxpayer may save a few dollars each year, will be resisted to the utmost by working people of Chattanooga.

The discussion resulted in instructions to the legislative committee to assemble data on the possible results of the proposed reduction and prepare a statement outlining the position of labor in the premises.

The legislative committee was also charged with the duty of investigating condition of the schools and launch a movement for raising some $200,000 to finance repairs which are unquestionably necessary and economical in the long run.

rs. Tucker Thanks rade Union Friends

Mrs. Mamie Gardenhire Tucker, successful candidate for a position on the state democratic executive committee, Thursday asked The Labor World to express her appreciation of the support of local trades unionists, during the following for publication:

Aug. 11, 1932.

To the Members of Organized Labor:

I wish to extend my sincere thanks to each and every one of you for the splendid support given me in my race for committeewoman of the Third Congressional district, and to assure you that your cause will never suffer at my hands.

As the operator of a union printing office since 1926, I have come more or less in contact with members of organized labor, and the friendships and associations gained from that experience were of immeasurable help to me in my campaign. The influence of my trade union friends was evident in every precinct and I am profoundly grateful for the confidence that reposed in me.

If at any time I may be of service to you, do not hesitate to call upon me.

Sincerely yours,
Mrs. Mamie Gardenhire Tucker.

McAlister's Shelby Chairman Defends Memphis Citizenship

Statement Declares "Die-Hards Raising Old Cry of Fraud, Perennial Alibi of Political Defeat"---Says Organization Was Responsible for Great Victory of Nashvillian, and Calls Patterson's Attitude "Poor Sportsmanship."

In the wake of a "mass meeting" said to have been attended by 163 people, including well-known republicans and state employes, called for the purpose of protesting against alleged frauds in the democratic state primary last week, comes a statement from McAlister headquarters in Memphis, which reviews the election and points out some facts in connection with the attempt to have the nomination of Hill McAlister voided and Lewis Pope declared the democratic standard-bearer.

The die-hards are "raising the old cry of fraud, perennial alibi of political defeat," the statement declares, and the citizenship of Memphis and Shelby county is defended against the allegations of "a few disgruntled followers of Patterson and the partisan newspapers."

The statement, signed by L. R. Hawley, chairman of the McAlister Shelby headquarters, makes interesting reading, and is passed on for the information of our readers:

"The daily newspapers in Memphis are dying hard after a strenuous fight against McAlister and are raising the old cry of fraud, perennial alibi of a political defeat.

"However, these newspapers and the people know that every ward in Memphis and every district in Shelby county was thoroughly and systematically organized for weeks in behalf of Mr. McAlister's candidacy. They know that citizens were personally interviewed by ward and district representatives of the McAlister campaig ncommittee and were acquainted with the splendid qualifications of the candidate for whom they worked.

"Thieves make no such preparations to honestly acquire something they intend to steal.

"No less than 588 ward and district meetings were held. Nearly 200 rallies, downtown street corner meetings and radio talks were presented, in which more than 100 voluntary speakers, working night and day, carried Mr. McAlister's message directly to

Overton-Fentress County Miners Hold Line, Says Williams

Effort on the part of mine operators in Fentress and Overton counties, Tennessee, to enforce starvation wages upon workers have not as yet succeeded, although many of the miners' families have been forced to appeal to fellow-trades unionists and sympathetic neighboring farmers to prevent actual hunger, according to Ben Williams, representative in District 19 of the United Mine Workers of America, who was a visitor in Chattanooga this week.

Mr. Williams recalled that recently an agreement with the operators expired, and although even under the contract constant appeals to charity were necessary to keep the miners' families from suffering, the operators demanded a still further wage cut and the imposition of more onerous conditions. The mine workers are said to have concluded that if they must starve to death they might as well be at home with their families instead of piling up profits for their employers while starvation was in process. The mines are closed.

The committee in charge of the situation has issued an appeal for financial aid to brother trades unionists in this territory, in which it is stated they fully realize that most organizations are having troubles of their own in these piping times of prosperity, but calling attention to the fact that the miners of Overton and Fentress counties are battling for the salvation of hundreds of thousands, indirectly, and urging that all possible assistance be given them.

A copy of this appeal which Mr. Williams gave to The Labor World reads as follows:

To the Members of Organized Labor —Greeting:

We are hereby appealing in behalf of the coal miners and their families of Overton and Fentress counties, Tennessee, and urge you to give serious attention to this appeal.

The miners of Crawford, Twinton, Davidson and Wilder are 100 per cent organized into the United Mine Workers of America. This should not be confused with the so-called National Miners union, which is a communistic organization with headquarters in Moscow, Russia.

The Overton and Fentress miners waged a battle in 1931 against the vicious yellow dog contract, and were successful in spite of the opposition, with the result that the so-called "open-shoppers" were routed and a 100 per cent union agreement made with the operators.

This contract expired June 8 of this year, and a new agreement was negotiated with the Briar Hill collieries, satisfactory to both employers and employes, but for some unexplained reason this has never been signed. The Fentress Coal company and the Davidson Coal company refused to consider the same contract, and instead served notice on the miners that a 20 per cent reduction in wages would be put into effect. The miners had previously been forced to accept two cuts—one 15 per cent and one 10 per cent—within a period of six months, with no guarantee of number of days to be worked per week. They acknowledged that

I. J. Gardner Named Production Manager by Morning Paper—Son Also Elevated.

Recognition of the ability of I. J. Gardner, for the past forty years foreman of the composing room of the Chattanooga Times, came on Aug. 1 in the form of a promotion which gives to the "old-timer" the duties and title of production manager of the morning paper, with supervision over five departments—the composing room, stereotype department, mail and press rooms and engraving department.

During the four decades in which Mr. Gardner has had charge of the composing room of the Times, that paper has become generally recognized as one of the most readable and typographically clean publications in the country, and the printing fraternity regards the composing room as among the best with respect to arrangement, equipment and sanitation. I. J. Gardner, Jr., it is announced, will assume the duties of the foremanship vacated by his father.

I. J. Gardner, Sr., is one of the oldest members, in point of service, in Chattanooga Typographical union, having been active in the councils of No. 89 in the early days of that organization when the struggle for a foothold required a cool head, firm determination and a willingness to make any sacrifice for the future of the craft. He served as secretary of No. 89, as well as in other official capacities.

Mr. Gardner enters upon the duties of his new position with the well-wishes of his fellow craftsmen, and The Labor World bespeaks for him a highly successful career in the "official family" of the morning paper.

Another promotion which was announced in connection with the above was the elevation of W. G. Foster to the position of managing editor of the Times. "Bill" has been on the staff of the paper for lo! these many years, and is universally liked by members of the printing fraternity.

Congratulations are the order of the day.

National Short-Week Conference Appears Practically Certain

May Follow Meetings of Small Groups—A. F. of L. Declaration for 30-Hour, 5-Day Unit at Atlantic City "In All Probability" to Be Realized by Presidential Summons to Session.

Washington, Aug. 9.—America is on the eve of a national industrial conference in which labor will have a voice and which will give industry its fullest opportunity to form plans for working out its own way toward stability through universal adoption of a shorter work-week.

At the hour of this writing official announcement of the calling of the conference has not been made, but an authority close to the source of information stated to International Labor News Service that "in all probability" such a conference will be summoned within a few days.

Follows A. F. of L. Plans.

The conference, if summoned as expected, will carry into effect the declaration adopted by the executive council of the American Federation of Labor in its Atlantic City meeting three weeks ago.

Almost immediately following adoption of that declaration, asking the president to summon a national conference for promotion of the shorter work-week, the New England council swung into vigorous action, headed by Gov. Winant, of New Hampshire, and having in its membership a representative of every building trades council of New England as well as representatives of some of the state federations.

More Group Sessions.

Representatives of the New England council came to Washington and conferred with Secretary of Labor Doak and Secretary of Commerce Lamont. These conferences served to open discussion on something leading to a national scale and will be succeeded by other relatively small conferences before the big national conference is held and which should mark a decisive change in national trend.

President Hoover has declared his support of the five-day week and it has been adopted in the department of labor and in some of the independent governmental agencies, though its value has been partly destroyed by a ruling of Comptroller McCarl, whose dictates are beyond the control or modifications of any governmental agency, including the president.

It is regarded as certain that the position of labor in favor of shortening the work-week to create employment and spread buying power will gain immensely by the projected conference.

CALL MEETING OF COMMITTEE MONDAY NIGHT

A meeting of the general Labor Day committee is called for Monday night at Central Labor hall. Paul J. Aymon, chairman, stated Thursday that the program is assuming definite shape, and new features are being added daily.

The great list of stellar attractions planned, he said, requires co-operation of every trades unionist in the city, and Mr. Aymon said any union man, even though he has not been named on the committee, is not only invited but urged to attend the meeting Monday night and lend his co-operation in arranging for the great day.

Zeke Witt Has A Mashed Knee

W. A. "Zeke" Witt, painter, decorator, paperhanger, farmer and master of barbecue, is nursing a badly smashed kneecap at his home somewhere east of Brainerd, and W. R. "Wally" Brown, bricklayer and farmer, is hiding somewhere in the Smoky mountains as a result. According to Zeke, it happened something like this:

Mr. Witt owns an ancient small truck of a popular make, which he uses for hauling ladders, scaffolds, wallpaper, garden truck and kids. This family bus, being somewhat temperamental, suffered an attack of nerves and refused to perform. So Zeke, after mature consideration, called into consultation Wally, a brother trades unionist, and the two planned to make Lizzie go or take her apart and see what made the wheels fail to go 'round. Heading her for a stone wall, Wally took the throttle while Zeke spun the crank. "Put 'er in neutral," yelled Zeke. Wally stepped on the wrong pedal and Zeke was pinned against the wall. "I thought it was a modern automobile," says Wally. "Bricklayers should stick to bricklaying," says Zeke.

Constable-Elect Thanks Friends

W. H. "Bill" Brown, who won the race for constable in the Fourth district at the election last Thursday, requested The Labor World to express his appreciation for interest shown by his trade union friends in the contest.

Mr. Brown, who is a charter member of Local 145, Stage Employes, defeated his opponent by some 200 votes.

LABOR DAY RALLY PLANNED BY SAVANNAH UNIONS

Savannah, Ga. — The Savannah Trades and Labor assembly, following a custom of some years standing, plans a state-wide celebration on Labor Day and has invited all central bodies in Georgia to join them. The governments of Savannah city and county, the chamber of commerce and practically all civic and fraternal organizations are co-operating with the assembly to make the celebration a memorable success.

"Our plans," said A. W. Thiot, secretary of the assembly, "include a monster parade with floats, for which prizes will be offered, and a dinner at the municipal stadium at which all unemployed men and their families will be fed free. Negotiations are also under way to bring a speaker of national reputation here to address the vast crowd we are making preparations to entertain."

BAD LIGHTING COSTLY.

Services of 125,000 workers are lost yearly at a cost to industry of $150,000,000 and an unknown cost to the victims by accidents due to bad lighting, department of labor finds. Less than a quarter of fifty million lights in industry are installed to stop glare and the estimate is that 40 per cent of workers have poor vision as a result.

The Social Ideals of Jesus of Nazareth

An Interpretation

Written for The Labor World
By WILLIAM L. MOSS

Chapter VI
JESUS' EVALUATION OF LIFE
Part XI

[illegible]
—Peabody.

What part should religion have in the affairs of my everyday life?

There has probably never been an age in history since Jesus walked among men which would compare with the present [illegible] in its unwillingness to answer this question either pro or con. The characteristic attitude of our age toward religion—and of course by "religion" refer principally to the Christian faith—is not that of renunciation of all religion, which has marked certain periods of human history in bygone days; nor is it one of deep-rooted zealousness for the cause of Jesus Christ, which in times past gave birth to a very large part of the outward spirit, ideals and working program of the historical and visible Christian church. The present age is marked by an attitude of indifference—an indifference which is neither friendly nor antagonistic, cold nor hot, reproachful nor lauding.

WM. L. MOSS

From a diagnostic standpoint I feel certain I can give you the cause and origin of this loss of desire to commune with God. Slowly, but just as surely [illegible] These have been gradually replaced with a systematic formality, narrowness [illegible] despair.

[illegible] spiritual companionship [illegible] God [illegible] abundance of [illegible] fact, [illegible] day He when Jesus offers to men in His vision of the Father's kingdom! He looked at life from above, saw its great [illegible] and [illegible] to see because of [illegible] narrow breadth [illegible] its relations, causes and effects is part of a Divine plan. From the viewpoint of Jesus' teaching, then, He saw all human life dedicated to follow the will of the Father as the

One far-off, divine event
Toward which the whole of creation moves.

To this end and for the accomplishment of this Divine purpose Jesus went to preach.

What part should religion have in the affairs of my everyday life? "I am come that they might have life, and that they might have it more abundantly," said Jesus. His answer is, in effect, that every part of our everyday life should be touched by religion, for His words just quoted point to no inclusive boundaries nor limitations of time when He is not willing to have spiritual companionship with us.

What Next!

New York's port operations are designed to eliminate the last possible man and operation. Rail to truck to ship transfers are all but automatic. While depression stalks the jobless man machinery adds to his ranks.

DETROIT ON 5-DAY WEEK

All Detroit city employes this week went on a five-day week under a new city ordinance. Earnings are reduced.

An Unemployment Conference

A conference to end unemployment by universal application of the 30-hour week seems assured. There have been some and there will be more preliminary conferences. Labor has been and will be consulted.

This is a prospect of tremendous importance, above all partisan considerations. There will be tremendous obstacles in the way. Some will find their immediate advantage in the long week and they will not find it easy to see into the future. Industries will balk and sputter and ponder their ledgers. The power of persuasion will bring many to the support of the short week. The fear of public condemnation will force others to the same view. One great weakness will be shown at the outset—the weakness of trying to inaugurate a universal program without universal organization.

What retribution employers have brought upon themselves by their blind, stupid and greedy opposition to the unionization of labor!

They are themselves but poorly organized. And here is need for complete organization on every hand.

But the battle must continue. The best must be made of the instruments at hand.

The 30-hour week must be pushed with the same vigor and determination that wins wars. If it be said that perhaps we stand at the threshold of a new economic era, perhaps it is not saying too much. Certainly a national effort to at once reduce the work-week to thirty hours is something the like of which has never been before.

Charity Relief for Jobless

Private charity utterly fails as an adequate method to relieve the distress caused by unemployment.

Although this fact is well known to those familiar with the situation, there are still some who continue to harp on the necessity of local charity organizations taking care of the unemployed and their dependents.

An illustration of the failure of charity is found in a report made to the executive committee of the mayor's employment and relief committee of Wilmington, Del., by Mrs. B. N. Norton, in charge of the issuance of food orders for the committee.

"The item of fuel for cooking and lighting is becoming a far greater problem than heretofore," Mrs. Norton said. "Many families are having to eat delicatessen food due to the absence of any fuel for cooking. Such food is more expensive than prepared in the home, but there is no leeway to increase the grocery order accordingly.

"Until July 16 we adhered to the scale of food relief which we adopted a month ago, and is $1.50 per week for one person, $2.50 for two persons, $3.50 for three persons, up to $5.00 for five persons, when the scale changes, adding 50 cents per person per week up to $7.50, which is the maximum. It now looks as though we must 'cut our cost to fit the cloth' in order to live within present budget allowance.

"This will mean a scaling down of this table probably to one-half. This thought is very depressing to the caseworker in the unit who has to explain to the individual with no income that we know people should not be expected to live on that amount, but when there are so many people in need and only so much money to go round we are forced to apportion it that way. * * *

"It takes more imagination than the average person possesses to realize what it means to be absolutely dependent upon a food rationing program such as we must carry on at the present time. It means that not only is there insufficient food in many cases, but there is no ice to keep the baby's milk from souring, no money to buy the baby a new bottle if he breaks it, or to provide mercurochrome or iodine if Johnny cuts his finger. Many of the common ordinary necessities of life are entirely eliminated."

It was stated that the food orders issued by the relief committee are made possible by weekly contributions from 11,652 families who are endeavoring to maintain the principle that the citizens of Wilmington will provide for the needs of their own jobless and destitute people.

The 11,652 families are probably contributing to the limit of their abilities. But when one reads Mrs. Norton's statement that despite their generosity the rations for the destitute jobless are $5 a week for a family of five, which means "insufficient food in many cases," and "no ice for the baby's milk," while "many of the common ordinary necessities of life are entirely eliminated," it is plain as day that [illegible] relief in Wilmington cannot cope with the situation.

The [illegible] situation in Wilmington is duplicated in every industrial center in the United States. It is a situation that should be promptly corrected.

The [illegible] of destitute jobless and their families throughout the United States must be supported according to decent living standards. To compel them to live on the pitiful rations furnished in Wilmington and similar communities is not a credit to American institutions. It is an insult to the millions of self-respecting, able-bodied workers whom our employers deny the right to earn a living.

Much of the wealth these workers produced in the past is now owned by many of the very people whose business in our industrial system is to accumulate as their own property the wealth produced largely by labor. This unjust accumulation of wealth is a fundamental reason why it should be taken by taxation in every community to whatever extent may be necessary to sustain the jobless and their families decently pntil the employers get enough sense to adopt nationally the five-day week and shorten the work day until all of our eleven million unemployed are put to work and the need for relief funds abolished.

Employer-Controlled Welfare Work

Employer welfare schemes were strongly criticized in a report by the general council of the British Trades Union congress. The council found that in many instances the employers use welfare work as a weapon against organized labor, and reached the general conclusion that it is weakening the unions.

While the council did not object to welfare schemes as such "if they are run in conjunction with trade unionism," it declared that "definite exception should be taken to any tendency to regard these schemes as an alternative to trade unionism."

The report specifically stressed the injurious effects on labor of employer-dominated education, recreation, health work, group insurance, and profit-sharing.

On health work the report pointed out that, as medical treatment becomes more and more highly developed in every separate firm, "it is bound to retard progress towards that unified system of complete and adequate national health service which must be regarded as ideal."

Although admitting that employer-controlled educational and recreative facilities may be beneficial to those for whom they are provided, the council said "their ultimate effect on trade union organization"—and therefore on the workers' power to safeguard and improve their conditions—"is more questionable."

Workers, it was pointed out, "tend to look to the firm as the organization which is holding them together and looking after their interests, instead of the union."

"Sports organization," the report said, "gives the employer a splendid foundation for seducing the workers from their unionist ideals by the insinuation that since employer and employed are good fellows together their real interests are exactly similar."

The council was especially critical of works friendly societies and group insurance. It declared that group insurance is frequently confined to nonunionists and that surrender of trade union membership has been made a condition of forming some works friendly societies.

Profit-sharing and thrift—two outstanding features of employer welfare work—drew specific condemnation from the general council. These, it was stated, have the worst effect on trade union organization, "as it is just this matter of financial security which is bound by its nature to be the greatest ideal of the workers."

"It is obvious," the report pointed out, "that the more financial interest the workers are induced to have in the firm the greater will be their reluctance to endanger in any way the firm's profit-sharing activities."

"Schemes of profit-sharing and co-partnership," the report declared, "tend to keep the workers tied forever to the same firm. The workers in these schemes gain an illusory share of control, plus a small percentage above earnings. They lose in that there would be great pressure to avoid strikes and speed up production, from the surplus of which the company really gets the lion's share, and the ultimate effect on the workers is to impair labor solidarity."

The Reds as Bank Wreckers

However surprising it may be to the United States department of justice or to some of the apologists for communism, it is no surprise that communists have been found out in a whispering campaign to cause bank failures. If anything about it is surprising it is that it hasn't come sooner.

Long ago it was clear that the reds had a program of attacking the credit institutions of the United States and there was reason to assume that the plan also contemplated an attack on the currency itself through a flood of counterfeit money.

There are those who still fail to understand that communism knows no responsibility to any code of ethics known to non-communists. The first obligation of a communist is to wage war on capitalism, and there are no limits to the methods, except that they must succeed. The only crime is to fail.

Whispering campaigns against banks are difficult to trace and hard to stop. President Frank Lee, of the Mt. Vernon Savings bank in Washington, took about the only possible course when he went into print to denounce and challenge whisperers. With a sound bank behind him he felt that the wise thing to do was to drag the whole campaign of slander into the open. Results proved him right.

It will be surprising if the communists do not attempt other desperate and scurrilous methods of attack on the present order. They have no desire to correct it and save it. They are its avowed foes to the death. And yet, while they commit their depredations they expect its protection.

The best defense against communism is sound sense and a real understanding of the danger. If there were half the alertness against the propaganda of communism that there is in its behalf all would be well. But since there is not we may expect more red machinations. The communist machine will balk at no measure that seems likely to succeed in the war to destroy democratic civilization.

AS THE WORKER SEES HIS WORLD

Number of those preparing to be teachers has increased 105 per cent in the last ten years.

Farm prices have gained some, cotton prices have risen a bit and there are some other good signs for the week. Also the index shows a strong rise in price of New York bank stocks.

Paraguay mobilizes, Bolivia mobilizes, shooting has begun in South America's latest outbreak over the Gran Chaco. In a sense it is the Polish question again, Bolivia demanding an outlet to the sea.

Hitler doubles his reichstag strength, but fails to win anything like a majority. German democracy still trembles and the International Federation of Trade Unions calls on all workers to rally to its support.

Ten states supplied nearly 80 per cent of the income tax receipts of the federal government in the fiscal year ended June 30, 1932, according to a statement just issued by the U. S. treasury. Collections totaled $844,200,000 in these states. Receipts in all states aggregated $1,057,900,000.

Car Men Adopt Six-Hour Day

Portland, Ore.—On its own initiative and to forestall plans for layoffs the street car men's union here took a referendum vote on inauguration of the six-hour day. It carried by a heavy majority, whereupon the union opened negotiations with the company, resulting in establishment of a six-hour day.

The company had planned, as an economy measure, to lay off many platform men and inspectors by rerouting and extension of the use of one-man cars.

The shorter day prevents the proposed lay-offs.

LABOR QUERIES

Q.—What was the attitude of labor toward the Ku Klux Klan?

A.—In 1922 and again in 1923 the A. F. of L. convention denounced the klan as an interference with liberty and a menace to the labor movement.

Q.—Is the term "open shop" properly used when used to designate a non-union shop?

A.—It is not. The only proper terms to use are "union shop" and "non-union shop," except that the non-union shop may be designated as an anti-union shop. But "closed" and "open" are customarily misused. Labor does not and cannot close any shop to non union workers. Labor can and does say that if non-union workers are employed the union workers will cease work. If there is any truly closed shop it is the shop whose doors are closed to union men by the owner or owners.

I am enclosing a small goofy pome in this, with a request that you have John Mahoney or John Patty of WDOD set it to music (?). Jazz, of course, that's all the so-called music either of them know, I am afraid. The "electrically transcribed" selections that John Patty broadcasts give me an "inorganic" pain in my neck, that even two doses of his celebrated remedy for "inorganic pains" utterly fail to eradicate! It is very sad and distressing! But, since the "St. Louis Blues" have become a recognized "masterpiece" of music, and George Gersheim is recognized as a "musical genius," I have about lost hope for modern music. But I thank the Lord for Walter Damrosch, Vincent Lorez and some others who broadcast real music! And most fervently do I thank the Lord for radio, so I may "tune out" the junk and find something with music, as well as "rhythm" in it. An African jungle drum corps has plenty of "rhythm", but that's music only to the savage!

And everywhere that Mary went those fleas were sure to show.
They followed her to school of course,

They learned a lot, I must confess,

Glass Industry Reduces Wages

Atlantic City.—Through conference and agreement a 10 per cent wage cut has been ordered into effect in National Glass Manufacturers' association plants. The Glass Bottle Blowers' Association of the United States, in session with the employers here, agreed to the new pay status. Automatic machine department workers will take a slightly heavier cut. The conference indorsed modification of the Volstead act.

WAGE RATE RESTORED

India Tire and Rubber at Akron has increased pay of 400 factory workers and 50 office workers 20 per cent. This restores the rate as it stood prior to a cut in January.

HIGH POINT STRIKE ENDS IN VICTORY FOR WORKERS

Joint Committee Reaches Amicable Agreement and Spontaneous Walkout of 6,000 Piedmont Workers Ends—Program Calls for Further Inquiry and Final Review of Rates—Walkouts in Other Mills.

(By Staff Correspondent.)

High Point, N. C., Aug. 9.—The wheels are turning again in twenty-three of this city's hosiery mills. A compromise settlement was reached when Gov. O. Max Gardner dashed in here from Raleigh to act in the role of mediator. Approximately 6,000 workers who staged a spontaneous rebellion two weeks ago in protest of sharp wage cuts went back to their machines Monday morning.

The 620 men and women who are wont to toil in the Adams-Millis full fashioned hosiery mill here have been unable to get a satisfactory settlement out of the numerous conferences they have held with officials of that plant. They are out on strike and indicate their intention of staying out until severe wage cut orders issued several weeks ago are rescinded.

Fight for Living Wage.

The fight for "a living wage" is still in progress at the Highland Cotton mill, which is part of the series of textile plants owned and operated by the Adams-Millis interests. The poles are about as near together as the workers and management appear to be this week, and no early settlement is in sight.

Walkouts of workers in industrial plants of this section are of almost daily occurrence as the "cheap" labor of Piedmont North Carolina is asked to become even cheaper. Many points are affected and interest and concern over the prospect of the apparently unorganized but nevertheless determined uprising of southern labor against low wages has assumed national proportions. It is believed that anxiety over the effect a prolonged strike of the thousand hosiery mill operatives of this city would have in inspiring other wage protest demonstrations precipitated Gov. Gardner's sudden part in the strike here.

Protest Is Peaceful.

The spontaneous rebellion against cheap wages and further drastic cuts in wages that have long been too meager has been conspicuous for the absence of disorder. It has also been impressive because of the determination and unity of the striking operatives in almost every instance.

A storm of protest and condemnation has followed the sending of the bulk of the highway patrol force to the strike area to preserve order. Organized labor groups of the state have been engaged for days in lodging formal protests with government officials. Editorial criticism has been sufficiently vigorous to attract more than passing attention. A political bomb shell has been exploded in the political arena. Its repercussions will probably cost E. B. Jeffress, chairman of the recently created North Carolina highway commission, the nomination for governor in 1936. The Greensboro publisher has long cherished an ambition to take up his residence in the executive mansion, and the present administration has indicated its willingness to aid and abet the Jeffress candidacy.

Danger in Armed Force.

But the sending of the "patterrollers" to High Point to break a strike when they are needed to police the traffic of North Carolina's several million dollar road system means breakers ahead for the "man who would be king." Labor will have plenty of support in its protest. Tar Heel citizens see dangers in the concentration of authority in an armed and trained state highway patrol organization that may be ordered in to police men and women who have violated no law.

Salisbury, N. C.—Employes, some 300 of them, staged a walkout in protest against drastic wage cuts at the Salisbury Cotton mill here recently. It was learned that the cuts amounted in some instances to 50 per cent. Claude S. Morris is general manager of the mill, one of the group belonging to the Cone interests of Greensboro.

Printers' Wage To Arbitration

Cincinnati.—Arbitration will be the next step in the newspaper printers' wage situation here. Union No. 3 and the publishers have been deadlocked since May 1, publishers asking a 10 per cent cut, the union standing for a $3 weekly raise and reduced hours. It is expected arbitrators will be chosen soon.

14 States Vote Down Lame Ducks

Washington.—With West Virginia and Pennsylvania the latest to ratify, the Norris constitutional amendment to end lame duck sessions of congress has now been ratified by fourteen states. Thirty-six states must ratify to write the amendment into the constitution.

HOLLYWOOD PLANE PILOTS ORGANIZE FOR PROTECTION

Atlantic City, N. J.—Airplane pilots employed by the Hollywood motion picture studios, assistant directors and script clerks, scenic artists and costumers and a group of allied employes informed the executive council of the American Federation of Labor in session here that they had formed a strong organization and asked the federation's assistance in negotiating contracts governing their crafts.

It was also reported that the "stunt" men employed by the studios were organizing a union and that they planned to ask for a charter direct from the federation.

One of their grievances was reported to be that "outsiders" had invaded their field with offers to risk their necks in staged automobile accidents and thrilling "leaps for life" in airplanes for a mere $5 a stunt.

Chattanooga Valley Masons Planning Great Program for Aug. 18

The Masons of the Chattanooga valley are planning an old-fashioned basket picnic to be held at Lake Winnepesaukah Aug. 18, from 1 p.m. to nine, or later. Committees report that the attendance will be far in excess of the one held last year.

The picnic committee has a very fine program worked out, and the prize committee, headed by George Fletcher, reports a large number of prizes already for the entertainment committee, headed by Alex Rankin, and the program committee, whose chairman for Tennessee is Frank Meacham, and for Georgia, Thomas D. Ridley and Sergeant E. Thomas. There are some very valuable prizes to be awarded, especially the grand or attendance prize.

The refreshment committee, headed by Homer Carr, reports something that will be of interest to most every one. They will have several hundred watermelons cooled for several days before the picnic, and it will be a real watermelon cutting. This will take place between 6 and 9 o'clock.

The contests between Miss Georgia and Miss Tennessee, in interest of the widows' and orphans' homes of the two states, will be something a little different from the usual contests along this line. Sergeant E. Thomas, of Georgia, and Floyd Haggard, of Tennessee, have this feature in charge and anticipate it to be a big success.

There will be amusement for every one, and there are something like fifteen different amusements at Lake Winnepesaukah, which will have prizes for the best scores on that day, and the games and contests to be put on by the entertainment committee.

The committees are urging every one who possibly can to come at 1 p.m. and those who cannot be there at 1 to make arrangements to be there at 6 with a large basket of eats.

The picnic is being sponsored by the Chattanooga Valley club for Masons only, and is an organization composed of Master Masons of north Georgia, north Alabama and Tennessee. They have done much good already to bring about a closer fellowship among the different lodges in the Chattanooga valley, and are working for the good of all the Masonic fraternities throughout this section. It is a permanent organizaiton and its main purpose is charity relief work. They are at this time sponsoring the Lookout-Masonic Charity Baseball Game and Field day, to be held at Engel Stadium Sept. 12.

The Chattanooga Valley club committee, assisted by Joe Engel and Secretary Emerson, have plans laid now for a real entertainment on Sept. 12. There will be a number of prizes awarded on that day and an attendance prize of an automobile to the holder of the lucky number.

QUICKER, BETTER RELIEF from use of Black-Draught

"I have taken Black-Draught, off and on when needed, for twenty-five years, for it is easy to take," writes Mr. George T. Wharton, of Petersburg, Va. "I take it for constipation and when I have that dull, tired feeling. I take it for colds and other complaints where a good laxative is needed, and I believe it gives me quicker and better relief than any other medicine I know. It certainly has been a help to me."

coal prices would be no cheaper on the market.

Even under the union agreement the miners have not been able to make living wages, and have been compelled to live by aid from neighboring farmers and Red Cross flour. Low wages, fewer and fewer days' employment, company stores, the companies' "take offs" for doctors' bills, hospital, death funds and other things have made it so it is impossible for them to live under existing conditions, and they refused to accept the cut and were virtually locked out. The miners are now idle.

Now, brothers, we know that in these deplorable times nearly every craft is having trouble of its own, but these loyal union miners in Overton and Fentress counties are like a lost battalion fighting for their rights, and indirectly for the very lives of miners in Tennessee and southeastern Kentucky. A victory for them will be a victory for every miner in the southland. They are the only 100 per cent union miners in Tennessee, and aside from a few small companies in western Kentucky are the only 100 per cent organization south of the Ohio river.

They are appealing to you for funds, and any help, no matter how small, will be appreciated by them and their families.

ANTHRACITE MINERS HAVE HELPED JOBLESS MEMBERS

Hazelton, Pa., Aug. 9.—Relief measures for the unemployed in this sector of the hard coal field are not entirely dependent on the outcome of the special legislative session, now in progress at Harrisburg. Local agencies have been at work for almost two years caring for the families of idle workers.

In the front of this movement was the United Mine Workers of America district organization in District No. 7, with headquarters in this city. As early as February, 1930, this branch of organized labor had foreseen the gathering storm due to idle time. Men employed at one closed colliery were provided for at that time by means of a 50 cents per month levy on the men who still had work. From that source over $20,000 was distributed in the calendar year of 1931.

Late in the fall of that same year the miners of the Hazelton region combined with the welfare agencies of the field in a community effort that raised over $100,000. Of this sum over $40,000 was contributed by the mines division of the community drive organization. It represented for the most part pay wage contributions by men who still had work at the mines.

Work Eases Situation.

Early in the present year there came the legislative enactment in the form of $10,000,000 for relief from state funds. This money is now nearing an end. Its distribution, however, has been so allocated as to care for the bulk of suffering families in this field until the end of October and possibly the end of November. The recent spurt in anthracite production has put many men back to work, and for a month, at least, they can be taken off the relief distributions and the way made for families who have applications in with the organization directing the state distribution. In the meantime continued levies from miners still at work permit the officials of that organization to tide over the gap with relief orders from the district special fund set up in this manner.

In connection with this statement of the status in the Hazelton field, the recent declaration of District President Michael Hartneady, of District No. 7, U. M. W. of A., made at a legislative hearing in Harrisburg, takes on new significance. At that hearing the leader of the miners, who acted to care for their fellows in the fashion outlined, declared that when the day came that the men of this city and vicinity could not get relief they would take the food from the stores. His statement was predicated on failure of relief measures as now operating.

At his office here President Hartneady, who has had the glare of publicity focused on him as a result of his Harrisburg statement, discussed the situation. "It was no idle boast on my part," he declared. "I have been variously misquoted and misrepresented in this matter. I did not threaten to march at once on the food stores of our community. In this field today, I feel there is not a single family starving. They will not be permitted to starve. Union and community united before the state acted. Now the state money is coming in promptly. When it looked like an empty treasury for us the state, a few days after I made this statement, forwarded the final Talbot fund to our county. The county commissioners sent it on to our local board quickly. And the total was much higher than all calculations previous had made for us.

"Of course I do not claim that the threat caused such prompt or generous action. But to my friends in the organized labor movement in the state, and outside of the state, I want it made clear that my declaration of taking food, after due inventory by the storekeeper, was not one of mere violence. I clearly stated at the time, although it was not so quoted, that I would personally lead such a move against food stores when all other efforts at getting relief had failed. And that will be the last resort on our part here. But as surely as every agency fails us, and people here want food, we will get it for them."

the people of Memphis and Shelby county.

"Thieves do not invite their prospective victims to gather in public places, in the glare of calcium lights, to be pleaded with through loud speakers, or to remain in their homes and listen to imporutnities over the radio, tog ive to Mr. McAlister votes which they expected to steal for him anyway.

"These newspapers and the people know that the McAlister campaign committee and E. H. Crump, personally, spent considerable money for paid advertisements (the only newspaper publicity available to Mr. McAlister), and for banners, cards, stickers, bands, hurdy-gurdies, picture show slides, etc., in order to keep Mr. McAlister's name and the things for which he stands before the people.

"Thieves do not spend a nickel to acquire what they expect to steal.

"These newspapers and the people know that McAlister headquarters enrolled in Memphis and Shelby county 10,000 women to support Mr. McAlister; that the Young Men's McAlister club was organized with a membership of 2,375; that the Young Ladies' McAlister club was formed, with a membership of 712; that the "Over 50" McAlister club, composed exclusively of men voters who are exempt from poll tax payment, was organized, with a membership of 6,250; that 80 per cent of the farmers, merchants and dairymen out in the county declared for McAlister.

"Thieves do not organize special groups of prospective victims as a preliminary to stealing something from them.

"These newspapers and the people know that there was registered at McAlister headquarters the names of 1,702 ex-service men who endorsed McAlister's candidacy; that practically all of the labor organizations and railroad brotherhoods, in meeting assembled, endorsed him; and, last but by no means least, that the lawyers of Memphis, in a ratio of approximately two and one-half to one, declared their preference for McAlister over Judge Patterson, in a signed statement.

"None of these groups or classes would hardly be expected to align themselves with thieves.

"Thieves don't work. Why should they?

"Judge Patterson did not carry a single precinct in the city of Memphis and only carried nine counties in the entire state. He even lost the precinct in which he lived, and in which not a single negro voted.

"His local manager lost his home precinct, in which not a single negro voted.

"The two men who direct the policy of the Commercial Appeal, Gus Fitzhugh and John Flippin, lost their home precincts, no negroes voting.

"Instead of getting out and working and attempting to form an organization, the Patterson people in Shelby county spent their entire time on street corners and in their own headquarters, talking about fraud in order to set up an alibi in advance for the few votes they were going to get.

"The people of this community know ex-governor Patterson and know his record. They did not want him to be governor again, and very emphatically said so with their votes.

"There are no better people in the world than there are in Memphis and Shelby county, and they would rise en masse against fraudulent tactics if they felt they had been perpetrated, as is now being claimed by a few disgruntled followers of Patterson and the partisan newspapers, after a rehearsal of some two or three weeks.

"The election could be held over again next Thursday and McAlister would get an even larger vote, for many of Patterson's own supporters are disgusted with his poor exhibition of sportsmanship and they are openly saying so.

"As for Pope, the very negligible vote which he received in Shelby coutny was to be expected, since he had no organization whatsoever, no work was done in his behalf, and, as a matter of fact, not a single sign or card bearing his name was in evidence in the city or county throughout the campaign."

ILLINOIS GETS THREE MILLION DOLLAR FEDERAL RELIEF LOAN

Washington.—The board of directors of the Reconstruction Finance corporation loaned $3,000,000 to the state of Illinois to be used in furnishing "relief and work relief to the needy and distressed and relieving hardships resulting from unemployment."

This was the first advance loan made under the Hoover relief bill which authorized loans totaling $300,000,000 to states and municipalities. The Reconstruction Finance corporation charges 3 per cent interest.

Gov. Emmerson, of Illinois, had asked for a loan of $10,000,000. Senator James Hamilton Lewis, of Illinois, expressed regret because the loan had been scaled down to $3,000,000. This sum, he said, would meet the needs of the destitute in his state for not longer than one month.

It costs no more in effort or money to secure UNION GOODS and SERVICE, if you demand and insist on them.

Begin Taking Cardui Today If You Suffer Like This Lady Did

"WHEN I was a girl, I began taking Cardui," writes Mrs. Maggie Stanfield, of Crandall, Ga. "I was very irregular for twelve months. Nothing did me very much good until my mother began to give me this medicine. Then I got all right, stout and well.

"After I was married, I was in bad health. I began taking Cardui again. I was troubled with my back a lot. Was awfully restless. I could not sleep well. I just weighed 90 pounds when I began taking Cardui. I improved rapidly. Before long I weighed 126 pounds. I felt fine. I was able to do a good day's work."

Cardui is sold by druggists here.

Here's Spirit That Trimmed Prothro

Doc Prothro's Memphis aggregation of ball tossers, it will be pretty generally admitted hereabouts, have been smothered with horseshoes all year, and ol' Miss Lady Luck has stood faithfully by a fair baseball team and its two pitchers and enabled them to go ahead in the season's series against the best club in the league. But during the present series the jinx has been ingloriously routed, and not the least important factor in the downfall of the Indians has been the spirit shown by Chattanooga fandom.

Witness a sign on the window of the Broadway barber shop Wednesday afternoon: "Closed. Will be back after we beat Memphis." And "we" did.

UNION LABEL

What is the objection to union-labeled products?

There would appear to be some objection or else there would be greater general demand for them.

Why not go into this matter now? The time was never more propitious for cooperative effort to popularize union-labeled products. Unionists are usually willing enough to lend aid to efforts to create demand for the label representative of their own craft. Why neglect union-made products of other crafts? Other organized craftsmen are asked to see that your label is on what they purchase. Isn't it only fair to see that their labels are on what you buy?

The union label on products of any description is indisputable evidence the goods were made by union workers, in a union shop and under union conditions. This is the main point in their favor.

By purchasing union-made products with union-earned money unionists are aiding each other. If all union-earned money were spent only for union-made products there would be no enforced idleness among members of organized labor.

Argument is heard that union-labeled products are not easy to obtain. Why aren't they? It is idle to assert that dealers will refuse to stock union-made products if shown sufficient demand exists. Why not create that demand?

Once in a while unionists declare this or that nonunion product is better suited to their taste than union-made goods of a similar kind. Is taste a matter of principle? Isn't it a cultivated sense? Did the founders of organized labor consider taste when formulating the principles upon which the movement is predicated?

No unionist can justify his attitude of noncompliance or indifference unless and until he has exhausted all reasonable efforts to obtain for himself and his home products that bear the symbol of fair labor. There are, perhaps, times when a certain article is unobtainable, but a quest for it may arouse sufficient interest among dealers to make it easy to find the second time inquiry is made.

Labeled hats, shoes, cigarets and other goods are easily obtained in most sections, simply because demand for them has been so great dealers have realized the wisdom of stocking them. The average merchant has slight regard for sentiment in business. He wants to handle goods that move. Move the first consignment for him and he will order the second at once.

A demand must first be created. And if organized labor does not create the demand for union-made products, who will?

United and consistent effort to create and maintain a demand for union-made products will lessen unemployment, increase wages and decrease working hours to the glory of the organized labor movement.

BLUFF CITY LABOR BODY RAPS KICKERS

Declares Shelby Primary Honest and Fair.

CALLS CRY OF FRAUD UNFAIR AND UNTRUE

"Inspired Propaganda Broadcast by Handful of Disgruntled Politicians."

That the cry of fraud in the democratic gubernatorial primary in Shelby county is "unfair and untrue," and that "this inspired propaganda has been broadcast by a handful of disgruntled politicians and office-seekers who know that the election was honest and fair," is the charge made by the nonpartisan political committee of Memphis Trades and Labor council in a strong resolution adopted last Monday and addressed to the union men of Tennessee.

The resolution declares that in every polling place in the city the election was held honestly, fairly and squarely, and that no irregularities and no illegal practice of any kind was had.

The alleged propaganda is condemned, and confidence is reaffirmed in the Hon. Hill McAlister, who rightfully and honorably was nominated for governor."

The resolution follows:

Whereas, the Tennessee State Nonpartisan Political club representing the Tennessee Federation of Labor endorsed the candidacy of the Hon. Hill McAlister for governor in the state democratic primary because his record on matters of labor were fair; and,

Whereas, the Memphis Nonpartisan political club representing the Memphis Trades and Labor council, which is composed of representatives of forty different trade unions of the city of Memphis and Shelby county, also endorsed the candidacy of the Hon. Hill McAlister for governor in the state democratic primary for the same reasons; and,

Whereas, as this committee has observed with a great deal of surprise the unfair and untrue reports in the local daily press concerning the conduct of the democratic primary election held in Shelby county, Tennessee, on Aug. 4, 1932; and,

Whereas, this committee is of the opinion that the propaganda contained in the local press concerning the conduct of said primary election was intended for the sole purpose of biasing and prejudicing the minds of voter people who read said papers in the rural sections of Tennessee where said papers have circulation; and,

Whereas, from the committee's observation, and from reports received from members of the labor organizations who say that in every polling place in the city of Memphis, and Shelby county, Tennessee, throughout the day of Aug. 4, 1932, said election was held honestly and fairly and squarely, that no disturbance was had, no irregularities and no illegal practice of any kind was had; be it therefore

Resolved, That the Nonpartisan Political club of Memphis and Shelby county, Tennessee, go on record, here and now, as condemning the inspired propaganda contained in the local press relative to the primary election held on Aug. 4, 1932, that this propaganda has been broadcast by a handful of disgruntled politicians and office-seekers who know that the election held on Aug. 4, 1932, was honest and fair, but with the aid of a willing press assisted in broadcasting false propaganda to the citizenry of Tennessee outside of Shelby county; be further

Resolved, That the committee reaffirm its confidence in the Hon. Hill McAlister for governor of Tennessee, who rightfully and honorably was nominated the democratic candidate for governor in the democratic primary held on Aug. 4, 1932.

(Signed) SAM D. CAMPBELL, Chairman.
JOSEPH HENKEL, Secretary.

This resolution adopted Aug. 14, 1932.

MOORE ANSWERS LABOR QUERIES

Legislative Nominee Finds It Not Illegal to State Position on Public Questions.

Frank W. Moore, one of the three successful candidates for the democratic nomination for the lower house of the state general assembly, Thursday sent in the questionnaire submitted by the nonpartisan political committee of Chattanooga Trades and Labor council prior to the primary of August 4.

Mr. Moore was one of two candidates who failed to answer, holding that for him to do so would be a violation of state laws. However, he states that he now finds he was mistaken, and answers all questions "Yes," with the exception of that relating to abolishing of one-man cars, qualifying this only as follows: "Yes, providing the traffic is sufficiently heavy to merit the employment of more than one man." Also, to the query "Do you favor a law providing that all employes of either state, county or city be taxpayers and citizens of such government?" Mr. Moore said "Yes; said employes should be citizens, but need not necessarily be a property owner, because he will be a taxpayer if he is a citizen, whether his taxes be direct or indirect."

The letter accompanying the questionnaire and explaining Mr. Moore's position follows:

"Editor, The Labor World:

"Some time before the democratic primary a questionnaire was handed me by the nonpartisan committee of Chattanooga Trades and Labor council, and through a misunderstanding of the legal effect of answering said questionnaire, instead of answering same I wrote a letter stating my position as respects labor and its problems.

"Since then I have been informed that it would be perfectly all right for any candidate to answer such a questionnaire, therefore I am enclosing a signed questionnaire answered by me.

"Yours very truly,
"FRANK W. MOORE."

J. C. Choate, one of the republican nominees, ignored the questionnaire.

Union Carpenter Meets Tragic Fate

H. T. Ervin, veteran member of Local 74, Carpenters, met a tragic fate recently when he was run over and killed by an N., C. & St. L. train at Dalton, Ga.

Mr. Ervin did not have any known relatives, but had many friends that will mourn his loss. He was 48 years old. He was born in Newbern, N. C., and was a member of the Methodist church in that city. He joined the Carpenters' union at St. Albans, W. Va., on April 20, 1918, and later became affiliated with Local 74, in which organization he was a faithful worker.

Funeral services were held at Dalton, directed by the Rev. Mr. McCann.

The Labor World joins with hundreds of friends in expressing sincere regret at the tragic death of Brother Ervin.

DEATH OF J. C. SKEMP.

Los Gatos, Cal.—J. C. Skemp, secretary-treasurer for many years of the Brotherhood of Painters, Decorators and Paperhangers of America, whose headquarters are at Lafayette, Ind., died at his home on a prune ranch near Los Gatos, where he has been located since retiring from office about eleven years ago.

Mr. Skemp was born in Bilston, Eng., and came to the United States when 19 years old. He located in San Francisco, where he resided when elected secretary-treasurer of his international, holding the position until failing health caused his resignation. He was about 68 years of age.

During his activity as an officer of the Painters Brotherhood, Mr. Skemp was regarded as one of the outstanding men in the labor movement and was frequently a delegate from the brotherhood to the conventions of the American Federation of Labor. At the time of his death he was a member of San Francisco Painters' Local No. 19, but because of his poor health had taken no active part in union work for a number of years.

He is survived by his widow, Mrs. Meta Skemp, and a son, Walter, residing at Willoughby, Ohio.

Interest in Labor Day Program Increases as Great Day Nears

Committee of Sixty Continues Plans for "Chattanooga's Greatest Celebration"—Bathing Beauty Contest, Barbecue, Old Fiddlers and Other Features Sure to Attract Thousands to City Park—Prizes to Be on Display.

EXCUSE IT, PLEASE!

A most regrettable error in last week's issue of The Labor World has made the editor a target for the ire of several local trades unionists. In listing names of members of the general Labor Day committee some of the hardest workers were omitted.

To date the following omissions have been called to the attention of the editor: A. C. Kamin, A. L. Surrett, W. D. Canada, R. L. Malone, F. H. May, A. E. Butler, Roy Lee, Frank Krug, Leo Lee, E. L. Blair.

The error was caused by the use of a list which had been revised, and the editor hereby offers humble apologies to the brothers whose names were left out.

Public interest in the purpose of Chattanooga Trades and Labor council to make of this year's Labor Day celebration the greatest in the history of the city showed a decided upturn during the past week, and the committee of sixty which has charge of arrangements confidently expects to entertain a crowd of ten or twelve thousand at Warner Park on the great day.

Interest in the contest for the selection of "Miss Chattanooga" is expected to become keen when the prizes are placed on display. First prize, a beautiful cup valued at around $40, will be exhibited in the show windows at Edwards & LeBron's Market street store Saturday morning. This, together with nine other prizes, will be on display in the lobby of the Tivoli theater for one week before Labor Day. Mayor E. D. Bass will present each prize on the Tivoli stage on Wednesday, Sept. 7, at 9 p.m.

Contestants may enter by filling out the coupon in this paper, or in the dailies, and mailing to A. C. Kamin, 310 West Eighth street.

Entries for the "old fiddlers' contest" are now being called for, and the committee expects that within the week a large number will be enrolled for this ever-popular feature, which will be held in the evening of Labor Day.

Other features are being worked out as rapidly as possible, and the committee is announcing each only after complete and final arrangements are made. A largely-attended meeting of the general committee last Monday evening attested to the fact that a day of genuine entertainment is in store for thousands of local citizens, as well as many hundreds who are expected to take advantage of cheap excursion rates offered by the railroads for the day.

A meeting of subcommittee chairmen is called for Sunday morning at 10 o'clock, at The Labor World office, at which time further details of the big program will be worked out.

Right to Job Sacred, Friends' Message Says

Any Form of Industry That Destroys Human Personality Condemned—People More Important Than Things.

Guilford College, N. C., Aug. 18.—Any form of industry or any system of international relations which destroys human personality by denying employment to those who would work for an honest livelihood is un-Christian, declares a message from the Ianada and Genesee yearly meeting of Friends to the 235th annual session of the North Carolina yearly meeting of the Religious Society of Friends.

The message from Canadian Friends was singled out from a group of some eighteen such messages for especial comment by a committee appointed to peruse the documents and present a summary to the business sessions which extended throughout the past week. The passage quoted reads as follows:

"We have brought before us anew the competition in armaments of the nations in their endeavor to find security from possible enemies. We have tried to realize something of the present conditions, especially in large cities, where thousands of our unemployed fellow-citizens, in growing despair and restlessness, seek the opportunity to do useful work. We recognize that any form of industry and any system of international relations which is thus destructive of human personality is un-Christian. Holding, as we do, that everyone is a recipient of a spark of the Divine, we insist that things are not as important as people."

BRITISH LABOR LEADERS HIT HIGHER FOOD PRICES

Ottawa, Can.—John Bromley, an official industrial adviser of the British delegation at the imperial economic conference here, filed with the delegation a notice that the true purpose of the conference would be defeated by the Canadian program, the acceptance of which would increase the cost of living throughout Great Britain by raising food prices.

Mr. Bromley is chairman of the British Trades Union congress general council. He and Charles M. Citrine, secretary of the general council, are looking after the interests of British labor in matters that come before the conference.

Letter Carriers to Hold Annual Picnic

Annual picnic-outing for members of the local branch of Letter Carriers will be held at Lake Winnepesaukah Saturday, under direction of the ladies' auxiliary of the organization.

It is announced that the carriers' band will be on hand to entertain the families and friends of the "mailmen," and the ladies will provide plenty of "eats."

The festivities will begin at 4 o'clock, and a member of the carriers' body stated Thursday that "all the men have to furnish is gas for transportation."

Mrs. W. M. Jones is president of the auxiliary, and Mrs. J. L. Turner is secretary.

Express Sympathy For a Brother

Local 43, Plumbers and Steamfitters, has adopted the following expression of sympathy for M. J. Metcalf, whose mother passed away recently:

"Whereas, it has pleased our Heavenly Father to call to her last reward the beloved mother of our brother, M. J. Metcalf; and,

"Whereas, this local has the deepest of brotherly love and regard for Brother Metcalf, and sympathize with him deeply in his bereavement, and feel the deepest regret at his loss:

"Be it resolved, that this local hereby expresses to Brother Metcalf and his family our deep sympathy in the loss of his mother; and

"Be it further resolved, that a copy of this resolution be spread upon our minutes, a copy sent to Brother Metcalf, and a copy sent to the Labor World for publication.

AUDITORS FIND BROKERS' EMPLOYE SHORT $695,000

New York.—George D. Phelan, for twenty years a minor employe of J. S. Bache & Co., brokers, was released on $20,000 bond after admitting, it was stated, that during the last thirteen years he had stolen $695,000 from the company.

Phelan was in charge of the concern's $1,000,000 petty cash fund. It was alleged that during the thirteen years he deceived auditors in their regular examinations of the concern's books by maintaining a balance on his books accounting for the stolen money. It is too bad that the auditors did not occasionally examine the cash as well as the books.

Cost of Living Is Down 20% in 3-Year Period

Department of Labor Tabulation Shows Food, Clothing and Rent as Chief Items on Which Tabulation Is Based.

Washington, Aug. 18.—The cost of living has declined 20 per cent in the last three years, considering the United States as a whole, according to price data just compiled by the U. S. department of labor.

The compilation deals with the period since June, 1929, when industrial activity began to slacken and just before the collapse of security prices. It means that the average family now need spend only 80 cents to obtain those necessities that cost 100 cents three years ago.

The chief factors in the general cost of living as it is studied by the labor department are food, clothing and rent. Since 1929, food has declined 55 per cent, clothing 20 per cent, and rent 20 per cent.

The rate of decline in the general cost of living shows a difference according to the locality studied. The decline in Detroit is reported as 27 per cent or more than in any other city. The smallest decline reported is 17 per cent, reported for Portland, Me. New York and several other cities show a drop of 18 per cent.

In twelve cities, food prices were reported as below the prewar level. These cities and the percentage of decline below 1913 food price level follow: Baltimore, 1 per cent; Boston, 4.8 per cent; Cleveland, 6.4 per cent; Detroit, 7.7 per cent; Houston, 7.5 per cent; Jacksonville, 10.7 per cent; Los Angeles, 12 per cent; Mobile, 10 per cent; Norfolk, 0.3 per cent; Portland, Ore., 6.9 per cent; Savannah, 18.1 per cent, and Seattle, 3.1 per cent.

LEGION HUNT FOR JOBS FOUND WORK FOR MILLION

Atlantic City, N. J.—Matthew Woll, who represented the American Federation of Labor in the War Against Depression campaign recently completed by the American Legion, the Association of National Advertisers and the A. F. of L., reported that the campaign had been a success in so far as it had resulted in obtaining 1,000,000 temporary or permanent jobs. However, he said, it could have been a much greater success had the original object been attained, to have 1,000,000 employers each take on one additional worker.

CITIZENS HONOR RADIO ARTIST

WDOD Announcer Proves Popularity in Competition With Big-League Artists.

ELMER ZILCH

Many folks believe all radio announcers should be shot at sunrise. Others, however, more temperate and less bloodthirsty, have suggested merely colonization on some desert island, at least for those who never attempt to croon or sing.

But Chattanooga, through station WDOD, has developed a star who, according to the number of votes sent to the Sporting News in its popularity contest, is making a bid for "big league" honors, last reports showing Arch McDonald running among the first four in a nationwide poll to determine the fans' idea of the best announcer in the business. Mr. McDonald, by his intense loyalty to the Lookouts, and his inimitable broadcasting of out-of-town games, has made thousands of friends throughout the territory, who are responding with fine spirit in the effort to honor the Chattanoogan, and incidentally to give this city considerable advertising.

Sporting News, a weekly devoted exclusively to baseball and published at St. Louis, prints each week a coupon which may be clipped, filled out and returned, recording the preference of the reader in the nationwide contest. Mr. McDonald is now said to be some 500 votes ahead of the fifth entry in the standing, and close on the heels of those in front; all of which is quite a distinction when it is recalled that leading announcers of the large cities are competing for the prize and honor.

Having made heavy gains during the last weeks of the contest, it is rumored that Arch may demand a split season and a play-off with the winner, but this may only be determined if and when it develops that the Chattanoogan is not first. Amen.

Plans for "Arch McDonald day" at Engel stadium Aug. 28, when the "wildly fan" will be honored again, include the presentation of an automobile in appreciation of the announcer's loyalty to the baseball club and the Chattanooga fans.

The Labor World is authorized to announce that Arch, should he win the Sporting News' contest, will positively not obey that occasional impulse to break into alleged song while engaged in his daily task. Amen.

The coupon in this week's issue of the baseball weekly counts for twenty votes. It may be had from any newsdealer.

MEXICAN JOBLESS PLAN MARCH ON MEXICO CITY FOR RELIEF

Tampico, Mexico.—The "hunger congress" of the jobless during its week's session here decided to march on Mexico City to demand unemployment relief.

The plan is to picket the chamber of deputies when it meets in September. Leaders reported that the movement had received support throughout Mexico and that there would be a concerted march on the capital from all parts of the country.

JURISDICTION DISPUTE HEARD BY AFL EXECUTIVE COUNCIL

Atlantic City, N. J.—Considerable time was spent by the executive council of the American Federation of Labor at its summer session here in discussing a jurisdictional dispute between the United Brotherhood of Carpenters and the International Association of Machinists. Each union claims jurisdiction over the work of millwrights, who formerly handled wooden building accessories which are now mainly metal.

HOPELESS ARMY OF UNEMPLOYED ROAMS NATION

Homeless, Jobless Men Keep Moving.

"RIDING THE RODS" BAFFLES RAILROADS

Disease Takes Growing Toll as Communities Pass Victims Along.

Chicago, Aug. 18.—America is faced with a transient jobless problem such as it has never known.

Hundreds of thousands of unemployed and homeless men are roving the country.

An astounding number of these nomads of unemployment are boys and young men.

Joblessness, failure of local relief work, poverty—these are mainly the forces driving this great army to the roads. But they take to the brake beams more often than to the roads.

Kansas City reports that in May more than 1,500 men and boys daily passed through the freight yards there.

Road Ejects Thousands.

In eight months the Southern Pacific ejected 416,915 members of this new wandering horde.

Disease is reported running higher and this will be aggravated by cold weather.

Dr. A. W. McMillen, associate professor of the Graduate School of Social Service Administration, University of Chicago, has just assembled a vast amount of information on the roving unemployed, with the assistance of staff workers in the U. S. children's bureau.

Communities are adding to the roving problem by "passing on" all transients. They have no place to stop, so they keep going.

The earlier tramp was a seasoned and seasonal worker. This modern army is not of the old type. Many have high school and college educations, and they are not veterans of the road. They are newcomers.

Tide Flows with Seasons.

Last winter the tide flowed southward. This spring it flowed northward and westward. This fall it will begin the southward movement again. No figures are available or known as to totals, but in many cases railroads report such numbers of itinerant travelers as to leave the roads helpless. It is a case of a continuous army on the march in numbers sufficient to command transportation.

Towns on the route of the Southern Pacific reported the daily passing of an average of 200 during last winter and spring and they expect greater numbers this fall. As greater numbers move toward the southern states so also great numbers move into Texas and to California. Yuma, Ariz., on the S. P. line, fed approximately 300,000 at its soup kitchen from November 1 to March 15, 1932. Other towns report varying numbers, all indicating that one of the world's greatest roving movements has been under way and probably will gain in size this winter.

Most communities allow such travelers to remain no more than 24 hours, after which they must move along to burden another town, ceaselessly bumming their way along, many of them never again to fit back into useful, industrious society. Cast out they become outcasts. From being unemployed they become unemployable.

NEW YORK EMBARKS ON CITY OPERATION OF 12-MILE SUBWAY

New York.—The City of New York will embark on municipal operation of municipally constructed subways on Sept. 6, when the board of transportation will open the 12-mile line on Eighth avenue between Chambers street and 207th street. It will require 1,400 employes to operate the subway.

The Social Ideals of Jesus of Nazareth

An Interpretation

Written for The Labor World
By WILLIAM L. MOSS

Chapter VI

JESUS' EVALUATION OF LIFE

Part XII

Have ye founded your thrones and altars there
On the bodies and souls of living men?
And think ye that humane hall endures
Which shuts the noble but pushes the poor?
With gates of silver and bars of gold
Ye have fenced in the sleet from your Father's fold
I have heard in the night the sound of their tears
In heaven these many hundred years.

—Lowell

When Jesus said, "I am come that they might have life, and that they might have it more abundantly," He was in no sense referring to anything He had said concerning the Kingdom of God. In the Kingdom as the Master saw it as a possibility and as He preached it as a reality then existing in the lives and hearts of men and women who had "forsaken all" and followed Him either in spirit or deed, His own person had its distinct and all-important place.

WM. L. MOSS

Yet this saying of His just quoted had vastly more personal connotations wrapped up in it than can be said of anything He ever uttered in regards to the Kingdom. There is a great temptation for us in our thinking to think of the Kingdom as more of a thing of intellectual belief and mere allegiance with a religious denomination of our own choice (or perhaps the choice of our forebears!) than to think of the Kingdom as Jesus intended it to be, i. e., as a visible social force centered about the Father in heaven as its invisible Head. Hence, the Christian, who ponders as his daily life is [illegible] puts Jesus ever before him as his Leader and Counsellor can hardly [illegible] anything Jesus said as having no reference to the Kingdom. [illegible], the Christian says, that the Master who Himself just preached concerning the Kingdom and to it gave His life for it would say anything which cannot be interpreted as having bearing on the Kingdom.

He did.

In His words quoted above Jesus formulated the inner meaning and purpose of His personal life on earth. As He felt about it, He was here for social restoration and moral uplift. The individual soul was too precious, too valuable, too sacred to be lost. Jesus, personally, was unwilling that any human being who came to Him for help should turn away ungranted if what was asked was within His power to grant. And we must remember that His powers were great!

Jesus' deep interest in the worthiness of human personality is demonstrated to us [illegible] as such, apart from [illegible] consideration of their accomplishments or station in life.

LABOR QUERIES

Q.—When was the first Pan-American labor conference held?

A.—At Laredo, Tex., Nov. 13, 14, 15, 16, 1918, in this meeting the Pan-American Federation of Labor was formed. The next meeting was in New York City, July 7, 1919.

Q.—Does American labor approve fixing wages by law?

A.—In 1921 the A. F. of F. convention declared: "We believe that the fixing by statue of the wages of adult male workers in private employment is unsound and dangerous." —Page 325, Proceedings.

Q.—Is six-hour day agitation new?

A.—By no means. Labor is foresighted. The miners have just made public a six-hour day resolution of several years ago. In 1919 the A. F. of L. convention declared that many unions doubtless soon would demand the six-hour day and the executive council was directed to assist all such organizations.

A Thought for Labor Day

Labor Day is "just around the corner," and in spite of the fact that the nation is passing through its greatest economic crisis, the organized workers in many localities are preparing to observe the day in various forms of general celebration.

In Chattanooga, perhaps, the greatest celebration of Labor's day in years will mark Sept. 5; certainly never before has there been a finer spirit among the workers themselves, nor a stronger determination to make the day's observance successful and outstanding, and every indication is that our citizenship of all groups will join on that occasion with the workers in an all-day program of entertainment.

This day, set apart in the United States, Alaska and Canada, is in honor of all labor, but especially the organized workers, who were instrumental in having legislation enacted proclaiming a day honoring the brain and the brawn of the nation.

In most places Labor Lay is observed on the first Monday in September, but in New Orleans the day is observed on the fourth Saturday in November, and in North Carolina on the first Thursday in September.

Labor Day is legalized by congressional action for the District of Columbia, and in a number of states the legislatures have enacted the necessary legislation to make it a legal holiday.

The custom of observing Labor Day had its origin in a labor demonstration held by the Knights of Labor in 1882, and from this beginning until the present time the day has been observed in a manner decided by the local unions and the Labor Day committees which are appointed for this purpose.

The celebration of Labor Day should be one mixed with fun, pleasure and amusement, yet the organized workers should pause during the day and give thought to the many battles, suffering, the abuse and the many hardships that were endured by those few brave pioneers who not so many years ago had the spirit to break from bondage and proclaim the worker as worthy of his hire.

One does not have to go back very far into history before he finds that the workers were at a great disadvantage. Coming later, we find that these workers united and freed themselves and then later by a united action we find the workers freeing themselves from the unjust and unfair treatment of the idle classes by having legislation enacted giving to the workers the rights that the Creator intended that all men should have.

The fight of the working man from the beginning of time has been a hard one, but with his numbers and with a united action he has been able to come from the very bottom to the uppermost rung of the ladder.

So in the annual celebration of Labor Day, if one will but pause for a few moments during the activities we accept as our given rights, the realization will urge itself that every advantage, every right and every gain that has been made for the workers was secured only after a struggle of those who pioneered the way for the present labor movement.

A serious thought for every organized worker on Labor Day could be: "Am I doing my part to advance the cause of unionism for the next generation; am I true to my trust, and am I as good a union man as were those who pioneered the way only a few short years ago?"

In this connection, it might be well for local trades unionists to realize now that there is much work to be done in preparation for the big event in Chattanooga. There is a particular job for each and every one to do, and it is not fair to leave the entire task to a "faithful few." While arrangements for the great program are well in hand at this time, there is yet much detail to be worked out, and, most important of all, perhaps, it will require a small army of workers to insure smooth running of the events at the park on Labor Day.

Those who volunteer for service to the cause on this one great day will be assured of a feeling of satisfaction and duty well done when the celebration is over. Enlist now; call Paul J. Aymon, at 2-7069, or 6-7562, and just say, "My services are available for Labor Day."

Railroads and Railroad Wages

Railroads have been given the fullest possible co-operation by the employes of railroads. In February the railroad unions agreed to accept a 10 per cent wage reduction, for which the roads were to use every means of spreading work. But work has not increased. Rail employes decrease in number.

Now the railroads are talking about a further reduction. This time they will proceed—if at all—under the terms of the railroad labor law, which provides for negotiation, conciliation, arbitration and a presidential fact-finding body. The railroads are not in their present predicament because of wages, but because of several other reasons, outstanding among which is a structure of financing beyond what "the traffic will bear."

For decades the roads absorbed one set of obligations by creating another and usually larger set. The time has come when that custom doesn't work. In other words the roads are at the end of the line. That rail executives seek now to visit upon the workers the penalty for the sins of a long line of railroad exploiters indicates clearly, if fresh indications are needed, the utter lack of logic used by rail executives and their utter inability to see humanity as a primary concern.

In this it may be said that railroads are not exceptional, but at the moment they furnish the outstanding example. Some day and somehow the overload of financing, as it is politely called, will have to be got rid of. There are other elements in the railroad equation, but this one remains one of the biggest and perhaps the root evil of them all. As for labor, it has never had enough and for many years to come it will not have enough.

Unemployment Insurance

The members of a committee appointed by the clergy of Newcastle, England, to consider the question of unemployment and the operation of the means test indorsed the claim of visiting clergy that in the home of unemployed men the mothers are suffering from undernourishment, particularly in families where there are several children.

The means test is a scheme applied by the British government under which the entire income from all sources of a family some of whose members are without work is considered in determining the amount of unemployment relief.

The committee declared that "even as a bare maintenance level, standard benefit is failing to maintain families adequately. Debt, and fear of increasing debt, inability to replace clothing, boots and cooking utensils, are adding to the danger of undernourishment by creating irritable mentality."

Jobless Suffer, Politicians Jangle

The politicians who control the legislature of Pennsylvania have refused to make any tangible appropriation for the relief of the hundreds of thousands of jobless in that state. But the credit of the state is good. So state officials asked for a loan of $10,000,000 from the Reconstruction Finance corporation, which congress authorized to loan $300,000,000 to states and municipalities to relieve unemployment distress.

The Reconstruction Finance corporation refused the loan on the ground that Pennsylvania authorities had not done as much as they should to mitigate the destitution of their own jobless.

At a special session of the Pennsylvania legislature late last year, Gov. Pinchot asked for a state relief fund of $127,000,000, to be used partly for direct relief and partly for public works and road construction. The politicians who controlled the legislature killed the Pinchot program. Now the Reconstruction Finance corporation refuses to loan Pennsylvania any of the $300,000,000 which congress allocated for the relief of the jobless.

In the meantime, seventy thousand families in Philadelphia alone are subsisting on starvation food orders worth about $4 a week and the unemployment distress is increasing all over the state.

Between the politicians in Harrisburg and the penny-pinchers who control the Reconstruction Finance corporation the destitute jobless are being ground down further and further.

It is admitted that thousands of the jobless in Pennsylvania are suffering from the slow death that comes from semi-starvation. Pennsylvania officials did not ask for a gift of $10,000,000. They asked for a loan of that amount to relieve this distress. There is no doubt of Pennsylvania's ability to pay its debts.

The legislature and the politicians who control it may be delinquent. The citizens of that state will settle with them.

But with the wan faces of hundreds of thousands of suffering men, women and children in front of them appealing for food and clothing that life may be preserved, it would seem as though the Reconstruction Finance corporation could have mixed a little humanity with its cold commercialism and advanced the $10,000,000.

More Unemployment

(An editorial in the Philadelphia Public Ledger.)

The monthly tabulation of unemployment presented by Mr. Green, head of the American Federation of Labor, shows 11,023,000 persons out of work. This estimate is based on government and trade union figures.

About 1,300,000 workers in industry were laid off between January and June, but temporary jobs on farms took care of 760,000.

The increase in unemployment since the first of the year is the most disquieting feature.

Mr. Green takes occasion to renew his advocacy of shorter work hours as a permanent means of aiding employment as well as an emergency measure.

He estimates that at present there is only thirty hours a week for each able-bodied person in this country.

Without doubt he has pointed out the first and most practical approach to the solution of this problem.

The available work must be equitably apportioned and this cannot be done too soon.

The Passing Show

Note and Comment on Things Doing in the March of Events

Signs of better times are in the air, the birds are singing and east of Suez a man can get a drink.

The bankers are banking, there are still Model T's cranking and racketeers are getting ready for Sunday school.

Pretty soon there will be laurel wreaths around the necks of all good stock salesmen and chickens will be facing the calamity of having to berth two to a pot.

Better times are coming and don't anybody forget that.

The thing we are not yet quite sure of, Cicero, is how fast.

* * *

We may be fairly sure that the dawn of prosperity is not going to be one of those bang, bang dawns that come up like thunder outa China.

Rather looks like the impending dawn of prosperity, if any, would come sneaking up on us, perhaps to bite us in the heel.

Well, better a dawn that comes sneaking and takes us by surprise than no dawn at all.

Truth is this depression is getting tiresome. There are a lot of belts that haven't got any more holes in them and a lot of shoes that can't be taken back for more half soles.

It's about time for prosperity to show signs of life. The strange thing is that prosperity does seem to be showing signs of life. If some can't be quite sure whether the flickering signs are the last quivers before rigor mortis or the first signs before a game of leap frog it's hard to blame them.

But be of good cheer anyhow. There are signs.

The game now is to watch carefully and see what happens to the signs.

Nobody with any sense wants to be a professional prophet of despair, and it will be plenty good to let up on the blues songs and swing into the glad strains of Halleluja—if you spell it that way.

The proof of this is that more folks read Will Rogers than read the writings of the Gloomy Dean—and more know where he lives.

We probably are right on the verge of prosperity, reckoning time in its longer reaches.

But don't rush out and buy a fur coat on the strength of that statement.

Even if prosperity has started in for a spell of serious prospering, it will be next year before most folks get the good news in the form of pay checks.

That's fast, as history is written, slow as folks live.

But be that as it may, it is refreshing to talk about prosperity. Somewhat like talking about the return of good liquor.

The only difference is that prohibition gave thousands the thrill of adventure in getting their stuff surreptitiously, while depression only gave them a headache and an empty gizzard.

Signs of prosperity are in the air and the good old Associated Press digs up a column a day about factories reopening somewhere.

Well, if prosperity is returning that's the time to see that no more wages are cut.

Under the spreading chestnut tree the village smithy stands, while the smith—a mighty man was he—whangs away on an empty anvil. But just around the corner, ladies and gentlemen, if you'll step up close, comes prosperity popping gaily on all eight. That'll be a sight for the mighty smith, won't it now!

Yes, ladies and gentlemen, it's probably coming around some corner or other and when it comes we'll have to rassle with it and spread it around so that everybody gets a slice.

AS THE WORKER SEES HIS WORLD

During the last week in July 30,000 workers were re-employed in factories.

For every $2,000,000 spent on road building, work is provided for 5,000 men.

Chicago local, Stereotypers, has accepted a wage cut. New scale is $47 a week for day work, $49 for night work. Old scale was $51.84 for day work, $54 for night work. Hours remain the same, 48 for days, 45 for nights.

A film, "Black Diamonds," being shown at the Regal theater, London, was written by a miner, Charles Hanmer, was made by him and acted solely by miners. "The real thing," says Industrial News.

B. E. F. officials, back in Washington, charge federal secret service men with instigating the riot which preceded calling of troops for eviction of bonus marchers.

W. Z. Foster, red leader, was fined $20 at Lawrence, Mass., on a charge of obstructing traffic, to which he pleaded not guilty.

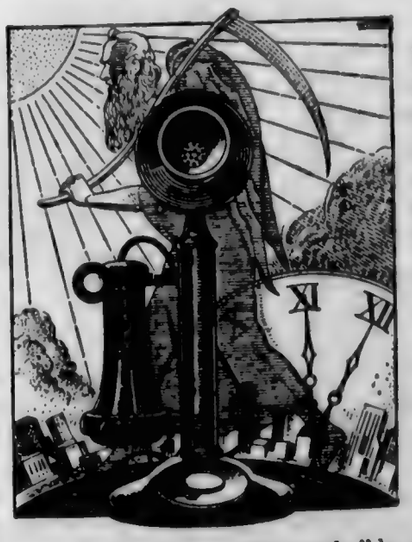
THE MASTER OF TIME



WHEN time is a controlling element in business transactions, it is frequently the telephone that saves the day

Recently, a Chicago school text book publisher notified his printer in Kingsport, Tennessee, that he wished to submit samples of a new set of text books to West Virginia state officials and that they had only two days in which to print and deliver the books in Charleston, West Virginia. Details were quickly worked out by long distance telephone and the job finished by noon of the day the books were due in Charleston.

But that was too late to get the books there by automobile, so permission was obtained by long distance telephone from the publisher's representative in Charleston to hire an aeroplane. The Bristol airport was immediately called by long distance telephone and a plane ordered sent to Kingsport. The plane arrived in Charleston with the books at two o'clock P. M., two hours before the entries closed.

E. W. Palmer, president of the Kingsport Press, Inc., the concern that did this work, states that his Company uses long distance constantly in selling, buying and collecting. "Frequently," he says, an account that has lagged behind in payments can be brought back to normal by a long distance telephone call, whereas a letter might easily have the reverse effect."

There is no other form of communication so quick and at the same time so satisfactory and cheap as telephoning. And because your voice is you over the telephone, it is possible to get as good results by telephone as by a face-to-face contact.

GREEN URGES FIGHT ON RAIL WAGE CUT AND ALL OTHER PAY SLASHES

A. F. of L. President Tells Hotel Workers' Convention the 5-Day Week and 6-Hour Day Must Be Adopted to Provide Work for Jobless.

Boston, Aug. 18.—William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor, in an address before the convention of the Hotel and Restaurant Employes and Beverage Dispensers' International Alliance, declared that railroad employes should refuse to accept a 15 per cent wage reduction, which it was understood the railroad executives would demand, and should fight the cut to a finish.

He insisted that the five-day week and six-hour day policy, endorsed by the A. F. of L., must be adopted nationally to steady the economic structure.

Wage Cutting Opposed.

"The entire policy of the American Federation of Labor has been against the reduction of wages during the depression," he said, "and the Federation takes its stand now against a cut in the pay of railroad employes.

"It called for the creation of the five-day week on a national basis and upon President Hoover to summon the leaders of labor and the industries to meet in conference and adopt a constructive program to restore buying power and end the depression. The American Federation of Labor will hold its ranks against the destructivt policy of wage cutting."

Unemployment Situation.

Discussing the unemployment situation President Green said that he had noticed some spots of local improvement and he felt inspired by hope, but that there is no evidence of general and substantial improvement. He quoted the latest government report that industries had laid off 1,300,000 employes between January and June.

The textile industries show some improvement, he said.

"I want to declare," said Mr. Green, "that in the three years of distress the American Federation of Labor has offered a program, which, if adopted now, would soon show improvement."

Summarizing this program, he spoke of the protest against the wage-cutting policy of the industries, which he declared to be short-sighted in that it destroyed the power to buy goods. He touched upon the greater use of machinery which received an impetus after the war, and said he regretted it only because it threw men out of work and put all the savings in the pockets of the employers.

"It is not desirable that the factories should be dismantled of their machinery and the power disconnected and the workers put back on hand labor," he said, "for it is well to go forward, but the industries should divide the profits with labor.

"If with the use of this machinery we can produce enough in five days a week, then give us five days."

The memorial will be unveiled in Washington in October, 1933.

ABOR DEMANDS FULL INE-MONTHS SESSION OR ALL CITY SCHOOLS

fficials Told Workers Will Resist Efforts of Large Taxpayers to Shorten Term---Calls Movement to Interfere With Educational Institutions "Expensive Economy."

ur working people must not be ed to sacrifice our children in or- to save the wealthy a few dol- ," declares a resolution adopted day night by Central Body, in st against the proposed short- g of the coming term of Chatta- a public schools.

Organized labor made the first ts to create what is known as the public school system of ucating the children of the so- d "common people." The althy class of citizens can af- d, and in many instances do, d their children to private schools, which is their privilege if they so desire.

The education of our youth is one of the very first duties of the taxpayers, and any sort of endeavor to injure or hamper this process of producing an educated and enlightened future generation has been and will always be the target of the most vigorous attack by organized labor.

The Chattanooga Trades and Labor council fully realizes the necessity of reducing unnecessary expenses. However, the proposed plan of shortening the public school term must not be—weeks or months of education lost now to our children cannot be re-replaced. It is too expensive an economy. To shorten school term may enable the wealthy to reduce theier tax rate—their children will continue to go to the private school—but our working people must not be forced to sacrifice our children in order to save the wealthy a few dollars.

Therefore, in regular session held Monday, Aug. 22, 1932, the Chattanooga Trades and Labor council has instructed me to appear before you and express our protest and determination to protect our children, which is a prime trait of the human race, and to call on you not to shorten the public school term, no matter if the tax rate never be reduced.

Final Arrangements for Great Labor Day Program to Be Made At Meeting Sunday Morning

Final arrangements for the great Labor Day program to be staged at Warner park on Sept. 5 will be made Sunday morning, when the committee of sixty will meet at 10 o'clock, at the park, to outline definitely the features and the time and location for the various attractions.

Approximately 100 local trades unionists Monday night responded to the call for a general rally in support of the program, and an enthusiastic spirit was general among those present. Many volunteered for whatever service might be required, and the smooth running of the affair is assured.

Chairmen of sub-committees reported in every instance their work well in hand, and while final arrangements for certain features had not yet been completed, a decidedly attractive all-day program has already been prepared. The barbecue, it was announced, will be ready to serve at 10 a.m., and plans are to provide plenty of the luscious delicacies which go with the meal to feed hungry folks until 10 p.m., if necessary.

A. C. Kamin, chairman of the beauty contest, announced that entry blanks are being received in every mail, and prospects are that more than half a hundred will be in the competition for the many valuable prizes to be offered. Management of the Tivoli theater is co-operating with the committee, and the prizes will be placed on display in the lobby of the Broad street playhouse beginning Saturday morning. Mayor Bass will make the presentation speech on the Tivoli stage on Wednesday following Labor Day, at 9 p.m.

Judges for the contest, which will be decided shortly after the Lookout-Smoky double-header at Engel stadium is completed, will be Arch McDonald, of Station WDOD; Joe Bonowitz, centerfielder for the Lookouts; C. H. Link, photographer; Tommy Kane, physical instructor; N. Key Hart, of the Chattanooga Times, and Houser Massey, of the Chattanooga News.

"Old fiddlers" are also showing an active interest in the contest for cash prizes, Mr. Kamin reported, and a number of entries have already been received for this popular feature.

The athletic and field contests will probably be staged in the early afternoon, and the night program will be concluded with a display of fireworks. Dancing will also be available for lovers of that sport, with one of the best orchestras in Chattanooga furnishing the music. Regular park concessions will be augmented by a number of carnival features, and it is planned to provide thrills and pleasure every hour in the day for the thousands of Chattanoogans and out-of-town visitors.

The committee meeting Sunday morning will be held in the grandstand at Warner park, and will be presided over by General Chairman Paul J. Aymon.

NEW REPORTS SHOW DEPRESSION'S LINES SLOWLY WEAKENING

Department of Labor Finds Employment Growth---Survey Indicates 25 Million Dependents, But Many, Including A. F. of L., Foresee Improvements.

Washington, Aug. 25.—With "Whither do we go?" the most momentous question of the hour, this week brought together a series of reports, forecasts and analyses new in type and in themselves pointing to industrial change.

The United States employment service reported for July "the first really notable industrial expansion of the year."

The American Federation of Labor reports little if any change and point to rising textile employment as seasonal and expected.

Fortune Magazine, New York, reports its own survey and foresees 25,000,000 Americans as objects of charity this winter, on the basis of an unemployment volume of 11,000,000, an estimate which the American Federation of Labor holds is at least extremely conservative.

The Fortune survey holds that relief programs have been "wasteful and uneconomic," which nobody denies, but the American Federation of Labor statistical division holds that, under the circumstances, relief has been remarkable for effectiveness.

Bottom Is Reached.

The American Federation of Labor thinks there is a good deal of "bosh" about reports of any great gain in employment, but it throws a bombshell at those who live by the purchasing power of the masses with figures that show the average relief provided for victims of unemployment to be only one-fiftieth of their former wage earning power!

However, the federation statistical authorities believe that quite possibly "the bottom has been reached" and that some advancement may be looked for, providing upsets elsewhere in the world do not kick back at American industry with new disturbing effect. Among such possibilities are the German political situation and the new British Empire trade agreement, but in relation to these two little harmful effect on America is expected by these statistical authorities.

Rays of Hope Seen.

Consequently, some hope is seen in the immediate future, though by no means enough to rid the nation of its terrific unemployment burden this winter, a burden which unbiased authorities seem willing to estimate as more than 11,000,000.

The Business Week, one of the accepted authorities, would be optimistic if it could find business generally willing to believe that better times are possible. "Skepticism and inertia" of business itself is held forth as one of the greatest obstacles to the success of re-employment plans in the making.

The Business Week holds the president's program one which "embodies at least a definite, consistent, systematic and positive policy to promote business recovery" and that for the first time in two years business recovery seems possible.

Roasts Business Men.

This same publication roundly roasts those who are unwilling to see in recent market advances any sign of recovery. On this point it says: "There is something at once amusing and saddening in the embarrassment and annoyance which the recent rise in security and commodity markets and reversal of business sentiment has brought to some of our more bilious scribes, who have been insisting that no recovery is possible or proper until the deflation of everything is quite completed and the castor-oil bottle drained to the last drop. To the man in the street, and especially in the street, the cocksure conceit of the academic mind and its somewhat naive indifference to the obvious influence of human instincts in economic affairs must be amusing enough. At the same time it is saddening that there should be at this advanced stage of social development such a solid vested interest in human misery and despair that every effort and every hope of improvement must be met with moralistic condemnation or snooty skepticism by these crabbed economic oracles.

"It is surely convincing testimony to the innocence or openmindedness of American business that it supports these wet-blankets so generously and reads the dour forebodings of these grumbling grouches with such great respect. The American business man is indeed as much a glutton for gloom as he is an enthusiast for optimism. This is part of the paradox of his nature, as this depression has repeatedly demonstrated."

Hope continues to find outlet in the forthcoming national industrial conferences which are forecasted to aim, among other things, at a general shortening of the work-week and a spread of employment.

Building May Increase.

Building permits fell for both private and United States government work. While the July figures represented decreases from June, the government program was above the July program of a year ago. The total showed a drop of 29 per cent from July, 1931, in dollars and cents represented. However, great activity is possible in the New York building field soon if financing can be had from the Reconstruction Finance corporation.

But the fall in this field was coincident with some other improvements and with a possibly significant strengthening of the dollar in the world market, a factor which has a bearing on credit, one of the things sadly needed for business recovery and employment gains in industry.

All factors considered, the outlook has brightened, though no authority is willing to risk a prediction as to its possible speed of advance and some remain unconvinced that any recovery is in evidence.

Deflation Is Excessive.

The A. F. of L. and others hold that in many directions deflation has been excessive. As there was a false peak of prosperity, so, it is held, there has been created a false bottom of depression, out of which business must begin to climb.

On the basis of all reports it seems evident that a new phase of the situation has been reached, the panic stage well passed, as the A. F. of L. pointed out nearly a month ago and a new set of factors created on which forecasts hereafter must be made.

Wages Must Be Raised To Restore Prosperity

Lansbury Says British Government's Economy Policy Means Starvation for Masses—Urges Industry for Social Service.

London, Eng.—Mr. George Lansbury, leader of the labor opposition in the house of commons, charged the government with having increased the number of unemployed to nearly 3,000,000 by its policy of tariffs and economies. He insisted that the major method to bring about prosperity was labor's plan to raise wages instead of lowering them.

In the administration of poor law relief, Mr. Lansbury declared, applicants and their dependents were being driven down into the pit of destitution.

The government had not only put the burden of unemployment on the shoulders of the family, but it had also pushed off hundreds of thousands of cases on the local authorities.

He pointed out that the position of the trade of the country had grown worse. The number of the unemployed was intensified and the misery and suffering of the people had largely increased since the present government had been in office.

The government's policy of economy meant starving the people, he added. Every time they cut down a man's wages they reduced his spending power. Instead of reducing wages they should increase wages.

There was an abundance of everything that men and women needed for their daily sustenance—too much coal, too much cotton, too much wool, too much everything. The masses of the unemployed could have been put to good useful work at proper wages.

He believed the government ought to set up immediately a board composed of persons not imbued with the idea of profit making, but charged with the principle that they were to reorganize industry on the basis of social service.

British labor would never support any sort of rationalization except that which was done under public control and which first of all provided for the people who were to be squeezed out.

In conclusion, Mr. Lansbury said he believed the British parliament and the British nation, if it really believed the Gospel and really believed the maxim, "Do unto others as ye would be done unto," could lead the world in a great campaign. If they had the will, they could do it. They had got to work not merely for themselves, but in the service of one another, none of them asking more from the world than they were prepared to give back.

Fulfilment.

Man wants but little here below,
The poets still profess,
And, taking things as they are now,
He's getting less and less.

Perry and Turner Are Recommended For County Posts

Central Body Also Deplores Contested Nomination of Hon. Hill McAlister.

George W. Perry and Tom Turner were recommended by Chattanooga Trades and Labor council, in regular session Monday night, to Sheriff-Elect John K. Tate for positions on the staff of the incoming administration.

Mr. Perry, who is president of the council, was put forward as the labor boody's choice for chief deputy, while Mr. Turner was offered for the position of chancery court deputy. Both are members of the local Barbers' union, and each has a splendid record of service to organized labor.

The body went on record unanimously as opposed to the effort of "defeated candidates who cannot have their way" to nullify the "mandates of the people" in contesting the nomination of Hon. Hill McAlister by Tennessee democrats as a candidate for governor.

Action was taken in the form of a letter addressed to the state democratic executive committee, which follows:

"On Aug. 4, 1932, the democratic voters of the state of Tennessee went to the polls and voiced their approval of the Hon. Hill McAlister as their nominee for the governor of the state of Tennessee.

"Since that time the defeated candidates have tried and are trying to move heaven and earth in an attempt to nullify the mandates of the democratic party and to award the election to Lewis Pope.

"Since organized labor regards the ballot as their main defense against oppression, we are not content to see that defense dissolved by those defeated candidates who cannot have their way.

"Therefore, we, the Chattanooga Trades and Labor council, in regular meeting, call upon you and urge that the vote of the people be heard and not be deliberately nullified. The frantic hiring and firing of state officials in the past ten days is prima facie evidence of political wire-pulling to this end."

Photo-Engravers Pay $2,085,408 Benefits

Jobless Union Members Received $1,665,826 in Last Year, With Large Amounts for Sick, Death and Other Benefits.

New York.—"The International Photo-Engravers' Union of North America and its subordinate local unions provided benefits amounting to $2,085,408.30 during its fiscal year commencing June 1, 1931, and ending May 1, 1932," declared Edward J. Volz, president of the union, in his annual report made public at the union headquarters here.

"This record," Mr. Volz said, "is all the more remarkable when considering that this organization numbers only some 9,000 journeymen members, of whom 32.7 per cent were unemployed, 45.2 per cent employed but part time, making a total of 77.9 per cent directly affected by existing business conditions and leaving but 22.1 per cent employed on a full-time basis during the year.

"The lives of all members are insured by the international union in the amount of $1,000 by a group policy with the Union Labor Life Insurance company, which also protects against total permanent disability. Strike and lockout benefits of $25 per week, tuberculosis benefits of $15 per week, and a funeral benefit of $200 are also provided.

"Unemployment benefits which are provided by local unions range from $5 to $25 per week. Assessments to meet this obligation have ranged to as high as $16 per week in some cities during the past year.

"Many local unions also provide additional life insurance, sick benefits and funeral expenses."

Mr. Volz gave the following classified statement of benefits paid during the year:

Local Benefits.

Unemployment benefits	$1,665,826.72
Sick benefits	21,528.14
Death benefits	29,988.49

DEFLATION" FLATTENS HALF OF U. S. INDUSTRY

New York City, Aug. 25.—merican industry is 62.5 per nt deflated and "ready to go ead", while 33.8 per cent faces flation and only 3.7 per cent "is ely to remain in a depressed ne," says Standard Statistics.

Lines that Standard Statistics gards as "thoroughly deflated," ady for industrial recovery are: griculture, automobiles and rs, chemicals, food products, reign trade, machinery, miscelneous manufacturing, oil, retail de, silk goods, sugar, tobaccos d utilities.

Lines that "face further deflation" are given as: Agricultural machinery, apparel, auto tires and rubber, banks, building, cotton goods, drugs and medicines, electric equipment, household products, metals, leather and shoes, printing and publishing, railroads, rayon goods and steel.

Standard Statistics says the following are "likely to remain depressed, or be slowest to share in a broad upturn": Aircraft, coal and coke, office equipment, paper, radio, shipping and shipbuilding, theaters and motion pictures, and woolen goods.

n March Their Pickets Two by Two, And Carry a Sign, But That Must Do

New York City, Aug. 25.—How ny seeds in a watermelon? w many pennies in the keg? And, how many pickets to a cket line?

One New York judge undertns to say.

Judge William Harmon Black, county supreme court, has just ed that members of Typoaphical union No. 6, on strike ainst La Prensa, Spanish lanage daily, may picket the plant o at a time and no more.

Judge Black says the pickets y carry signs 30 by 30 inches, th the words: "The owner of La ensa has refused to employ on help at union wages."

Pickets are ordered to keep oving and not to "intimidate."

The decision was on an applicaon for injunction. The judge ld no further "relief" was warnted the petitioner at this time.

The strike was called when La ensa ordered a wage cut.

"YOU SAID IT!"

In the slang of the day trade unionists can say to Harvey A. Wooster, "Mister, you said it."

Wooster, director of Massachusetts employment stabilization, holds that wage-earners, with the possible exception of the higher paid skilled workers, never were paid wages high enough to meet a decent standard of living and save "for a rainy day."

He found that while the minimum living cost for a family of four in 1927 ranged from $1,453 to $1,627 in different parts of the state, the average pay of men in manufacturing was only $1,410, and the average for all factory workers was but $1,221. The minimum living cost figures were based on estimates of the national industrial conference board.

LEGION VOTES 7 TO 1 TO FAVOR SHORT WORK-WEEK

Indianapolis, Aug. 25.—First returns from the nationwide poll of 10,600 American Legion posts on the question of supporting the shorter workweek, show a vote of 7 to 1 in favor of the proposal.

National Commander Henry L. Stevens announced the first returns, which come from communities in every state. The legion's poll is taken in support of the American Federation of Labor demand for a shorter workweek as a means of spreading employment.

"Sentiment for the 'flexible' week," Stevens reported, "is not confined to any section or locality, and the farming districts are in favor of it as strongly as the industrial centers. Sentiment in the big cities is overwhelmingly in favor of it."

Entered as Second-Class Matter April 30, 1916, at the Postoffice at Chattanooga, Tenn., under the Act of March 3, 1879. Acceptance for in Section 1103, Act of October 3, 1917, authorized January 10, 1921.

FRIDAY, AUGUST 26, 1932.

A SHAMEFUL PRACTICE.

Incidents of contractors on government projects endeavoring to take advantage of jobless workers by offering "starvation" wages to hungry and desperate men have been altogether too numerous, and to fair-minded people the practice has become nothing short of shameful.

The present government works program was initiated and planned largely as a measure of relief in the greatest crisis, perhaps, which has ever faced the nation, one purpose being to restore in part the purchasing power of the American worker, and to relieve hunger and suffering which has come to be more and more widespread.

Some contractors, it appears, quickly sensed the opportunity to "clean up" on the federal program at the expense of workers, long unemployed, who were just hungry enough to work for whatever wage was offered.

Progressive members of congress and officials of the American Federation of Labor, however, foreseeing the probability that such would be the case, passed legislation intended to safeguard the interests of the helpless workers, and this was strongly approved by President Hoover. In spite of these regulations, however, government agencies and labor forces have been compelled to battle continuously to insure a "fair deal" for these who were supposed to be the greatest beneficiaries of the building program.

As might have been expected, also, some newspapers have arisen to the occasion and defended the would-be profiteers, but in most cases the safeguards have proved effective, and contractors have been estopped from carrying out their plans for unfair profits at the expense of the helpless.

In Chattanooga, unfortunately, although the successful bidder for the general contract to build a million-dollar postoffice is one of the fairest firms in the United States, a dispute arose with the first sub-contractor on the job when the excavation work was started. The Carter Construction company announced its purpose of paying a wage scale of 20 cents per hour, and of using common labor on the erection and painting of fences surrounding the big project. The United States employment service and later the secretary of labor himself was appealed to, and a conciliator was sent into Chattanooga to endeavor to adjust the matter. After conferences with all parties concerned it was believed an agreement had been reached which would remove the possibility of further dispute.

Recently Mr. L. Bert Lowe, manager of the local United States employment service, has charged the Carter company with violation of the agreement and of government regulations with respect to the building program. Officials of the Carter company, in turn, have charged the employment office with favoritism to organized labor, and an apparent effort to embarrass the local management has failed to "get started." Mr. Lowe has been backed by his superiors, and appears not at all to be ruffled by the attempts to place him "on the spot."

Mr. Lowe has announced his purpose of demanding that the regulations be lived up to, in spite of the criticism leveled at his office, and in this purpose he will have the wholehearted support of all fair-minded citizens of Chattanooga.

WOULD SPEED HOUSING.

Special sessions of state legislatures should be called at once to promote slump clearance and low cost housing, it is declared by Robert D. Kohn, of the American Institute of Architects, who is heading a nation-wide movement to eliminate the lethargy and the misunderstanding which is said to exist regarding the use of federal funds under the emergency relief and construction act of 1932. With financial aid provided by an anonymous donor, speakers will be sent to address meetings of the institute's chapters throughout the country in an effort to combat conditions which, he asserted, threaten to prevent the betterment contemplated by congress in the work-relief provisions of the emergency act.

OPPOSES JAMES M. BECK.

President Green, of the A. F. of L., has written Secretary Frank Burch, of the Philadelphia Central Labor union, expressing the hope that Congressman James M. Beck will be defeated. President Green cites Beck's hostility to the anti-injunction bill.

Mr. Hoover's Error

In his speech accepting the Republican nomination for the office of President of the United States, President Hoover referred to the "unprecedented measures" taken by him to meet the conditions created by the stock market crash of 1929, in harmony with the "eternal principles of our nation." The President said:

> "It was in accordance with these principles that in the first stage of the depression I called the leaders of business and of labor and agriculture to meet with me and induced them, by their own initiative, to organize against panic with all its devastating destruction; to uphold wages until the cost of living was adjusted; to spread existing employment through shortened hours; and to advance construction work, public and private, against future need."

In November, 1929, the conference to which the President refers was held at the White House. At the conclusion of the conference the President issued the following statement to the press:

> "The President was authorized by the employers who were present at this morning's conference to state on their individual behalf that they will not initiate any movement for wage reduction, and it was their strong recommendation that this attitude should be pursued by the country as a whole. They considered that aside from the human considerations involved, the consuming power of the country will thereby be maintained.
> "The President was also authorized by the representatives of Labor to state that in their individual views and that as their strong recommendation to the country as a whole that no movements beyond those already in negotiation should be initiated for increase of wages and that every cooperation should be given by Labor to industry in the handling of its problems. The purpose of these declarations is to give assurance that conflicts should not occur during the present situation which will affect the continuity of work and thus to maintain stability of employment."

There is nothing in this 1929 agreement indicating that the maintenance of wages was to be predicated on the cost of living. In his statement made at the time the President said the employers stated "that they will not initiate any movement for wage reduction, and it was their strong recommendation that this attitude be pursued in the country as a whole."

In the opinion of representatives of organized labor who attended the conference, the agreement not to reduce wages was positive and was not coupled with any proviso about holding off wage reductions until living costs were reduced.

The employers agreed that they would "not initiate any movement for wage reduction." The agreement contained no cost-of-living qualifications. Had it contained such a qualification it is absolutely sure that organized labor would not have agreed to refrain from initiating wage increase movements.

Nonpartisan Political Party Wins

The sweeping victories won by Mrs. Hattie W. Caraway, of Missouri, and Senator Alben W. Barkley, of Kentucky, in the Democratic primaries of those two states to nominate candidates for election to the United States Senate is a tribute to the effectiveness of the nonpartisan poiltical policy of the American Federation of Labor.

The A. F. of L. supported both Senator Caraway and Senator Barkley and urged organized labor in each state to use every effort to secure their nomination.

The American Federation of Labor did not ask whether Senator Caraway was a Republican or a Democrat. It did not ask whether Senator Barkley was a Republican or a Democrat. The sole question asked was, What was the record of each of them in the United States Senate relative to measures which organized labor regarded as vital to the interests of the masses? In both cases, the records were favorable.

With the record of Senator Caraway before him, William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor, sent a letter to organized labor of Arkansas urging the support of her in the primary. In that letter he said:

> "The American Federation of Labor unhesitatingly endorses the election of Mrs. Hattie Caraway. During the short time she has been a member of the Senate she has proved herself to be steadfast in her support of remedial legislation.
>
> "Her experience with national and international legislation has made it possible for her to vote intelligently on all matters pertaining to labor and the people.
> "Mrs. Caraway was one of the strongest supporters of the Norris-LaGuardia anti-injunction bill.
> "When an effort was made to incorporate the sales tax in the revenue bill she not only voted against removing taxes from the well-to-do to place the burden on those least able to bear it, but she used her influence to secure other votes against the proposal."

On the question of Senator Barkley's candidacy, Mr. Green also made a report to organized labor of Kentucky, in which he said:

> "During his term in the United States Senate he has been of incalculable benefit to labor and the people. Every measure in which the American Federation of Labor was interested he has supported wholeheartedly.
> "He was instrumental in bringing to the attention of the Senate the injunctions issued by federal judges, and he fought for the anti-injunction bill when it was up for action. He favored all increases in wages, shortening of the work day and work week, and restriction of immigration."

On the basis of this record, organized labor of Kentucky was urged to support Senator Barkley.

The A. F. of L. congratulates Senator Caraway and Senator Barkley on their sweeping victories in the primaries. It feels sure that the votes on election day will confirm the primary vote.

Farmers, Too, Can Strike

Iowa farmers have been showing the country what a strike can be like when there is desperate determination to win.

It took all that forty deputies and police could do to prevent a raid on stockyards at Sioux City. Farmers have been patrolling roads, stopping milk, except for hospitals.

The farmers in this case call their strike a vacation. Perhaps they are of the type that finds a real fight enjoyable. In any event here is another example of resistance to robbery. What these men want is the same thing wage earners want—a decent living and a chance to earn it by honest effort.

Thirty Hours on Federal-Aid Highways

Secretary of Agriculture Arthur M. Hyde has allocated to the various states the $120,000,000 appropriated by Congress for the construction of federal-aid highways during the fiscal year ending July 1, 1933. The amount is an emergency appropriation to provide employment for the jobless. The states accepting their allocation must add an equal amount either by taxation or loans.

Congress included in the law appropriating the $120,000,000 a number of protective provisions for the workers recommended by organized labor. The 30-hour week is mandatory for all employes on the projects except those holding executive, administrative and supervisory positions. The direct employment of convict labor is prohibited.

State highway departments or other state agencies administering the funds are required to determine minimum rates of wages for skilled and unskilled labor previous to advertising for bids and the wage scales must be included in bids for the work. Preference for jobs must be given to ex-service men with dependents where they are qualified.

These labor provisions are a striking illustration of the assistance which Congress may give in fixing work standards. In making appropriations, Congress has the right to include such general limitations as in its judgment the public interest demands.

It is organized labor's business to see to it that men and women are elected to both the Senate and the House of Representatives who are imbued with the patriotic idea that the interests of the laboring masses are always in the public interest.

With such a Congress, labor protective provisions in federal statutes may be very effectively used to maintain and enlarge the living standards of all those who work. It should also be pointed out that the labor protective provisions in the federal-aid highway law may be included in state laws regulating state construction work and in municipal ordinances regulating municipal work.

Just Another Conference?

Is the Presidential conference called for August 26 to be "just another conference"? Many, reading the call and observing the personnel, will say that is the outlook.

It may be that something in the way of stimulation can be gained from bringing together a group of business and financial leaders and "hammering out of them"—as someone has put it—a certain amount of employment.

But the permanent gain required can be got best out of organizing for the creation of definite conditions which will be sound at the bottom.

Mere hammering some gain out of existing chaos may be temporary gain, but it is not that permanent gain through correction which the nation must in the end secure.

There will be no disposition to quarrel with any move that may produce improvement, but that need not and cannot prevent the wish that permanent programs might be called into action to take the place of what may not unfairly be likened to hypodermic injections. Therefore, it is ardently hoped that the President will plan further conferences that will get nearer the grass roots and bring a stable and enduring program for the nation's industry. There seems to be reason to believe such a program may be followed.

California Convicts Wage Rate Violator

The California State Division of Labor Statistics and Law Enforcement is to be congratulated on the vigor with which it enforces the eight-hour law and the prevailing wage rate law.

Complaints were made against J. E. Branagh, the general contractor handling the construction of the Veterans' Memorial building at Santa Cruz. T. A. Reardon, chief of the State Division of Labor Statistics and Law Enforcement, investigated the complaint. Five of Reardon's employes and former employes testified, and timebooks, payroll books and canceled pay checks were examined.

At the conclusion of the investigation Reardon found Branagh guilty of thirty-two violations of the eight-hour law and fifty violations of the prevailing wage rate law. Fines totaling $1,800 were assessed against Branagh and the Santa Cruz supervisors instructed to withhold payments on the construction contract for that amount.

The eight-hour law and the prevailing wage rate law were sponsored by the organized labor movement in California. It is encouraging to see tangible evidence that the state intends to enforce them vigorously.

Last issue of The Labor World carried an article on the front page and a picture of Arch The Great McDonald. In this said article was something about shooting crooning radio announcers. Well, he did burst forth Monday night of this week and I hope you will please excuse him for that as along about the seventh or eighth inning the Great McDonald passed out as did the writer of this article and he then started crooning all about old percentage, and percentage is a wonderful thing as long as it is on our side. Amen.

Molders Declare for Jobless Insurance

The last meeting of the executive board of the International Molders' Union of North America declared for unemployment insurance.

After pointing out that the union had never expressed itself on this question, Robert T. McCoy, editor of the International Molders' Journal, makes this announcement of the executive board's decision:

> "Following a thorough discussion of the question, the executive board, with the concurrence of the other officers, committed the International Molders' Union of North America to the policy of favoring unemployment insurance by legislation, thus making it mandatory that its future delegates to American Federation of Labor conventions support the principle of compulsory unemployment insurance."

Commenting on the growing sentiment in favor of unemployment insurance among trade union organizations, Mr. McCoy adds:

> "Be that as it may, the fact remains that unemployment insurance is no cure for unemployment. Yet we feel quite sure that when it comes to employers choosing between unemployment insurance, a palliative, on the one hand, and the payment of adequate wages and the shortening of hours, a cure, on the other hand, they unhesitatingly will choose unemployment insurance."

Mr. McCoy is right when he says that unemployment insurance is not a cure for unemployment. The benefits which jobless workers receive in countries with unemployment insurance are not sufficient to provide a decent living. They are barely enough to keep them from starvation.

The executive council of the American Federation of Labor has declared in favor of unemployment insurance. At the same time the federation is mobilizing the strength of organized labor and other progressive forces in favor of reducing the length of the work week and work day to whatever extent may be necessary to provide jobs for all. With the establishment of this policy the need for unemployment insurance would end.

American labor looks on unemployment insurance as a necessary temporary expedient to be applied until the employers become sensible enough to adopt labor's slogan of a job for every worker. Unless this is done, and speedily, liberty for labor in the United States will be a mere paper liberty.

He had suffered distress after meals, but by taking Thedford's Black-Draught he was relieved of this trouble, writes Mr. Jess Higgins, of Dawsonville, Ga.

"I had sour stomach and gas," Mr. Higgins explains, "and often I would have bilious spells. I read about Thedford's Black-Draught and began to take it. It relieved me of this trouble. I keep it all the time now. I consider it a fine medicine. I take a pinch of Black-Draught after meals when I need it. It helps to prevent sick headache and to keep the system in good order."

Now you can get Black-Draught in the form of a SYRUP, for Children.

NET LOSS OF 27 PER CENT FOR WORKERS STILL ON JOB

Terrific Blow at Labor's Standards Shown in Report of National Industrial Conference Board—Wages Down to Average of $16.24 Per Week, Fall 43.4%.

New York City, Aug. 25.—How the workers have had to "take it on the chin" is partly revealed in an industrial conference board report which shows that the purchasing power enclosed in the average weekly pay envelope in manufacturing industry had fallen 27 per cent up to June, 1932. This is merely the penalty inflicted upon those who had jobs. Those who had no jobs, of course, lost all purchasing power.

The report shows that in June, 1929, the average weekly pay in manufacturing industry was $28.69. In June this year it had slumped down to $16.24, a fall of 43.4 per cent. That purchasing power didn't fall that far was because commodity prices dropped 22.3 per cent, the report holds, making the net loss in purchasing power of 27 per cent.

The same report holds that in June this year the average hours of work per week stood at 32.7, as against 48.6 in June, 1929. The board's June employment index stood 48.2 per cent below June, 1929.

The national industrial conference board is an association of employers' associations.

BAYONET ALTERNATIVE TO BREAD IS FORECAST

Pennsylvania Labor Accuses Legislature of Hypocrisy and Failure to Meet Plain Issue—Fear for Consequences This Winter Expressed in Blistering Letter.

Harrisburg, Pa., Aug. 25.—In a blistering letter the committee on unemployment relief of the Pennsylvania State Federation of Labor has accused the state legislature of stepping all around the unemployment issue, providing no program. "Bayonets as the alternative to bread" may be the situation this winter, as the result of legislative failure, the committee charges, holding that the attitude of the legislators has been one of hypocrisy.

"Speaking directly for many thousands of those affected," said the letter, "and indirectly for the great mass of the victims of this crisis, as well as for the average citizen of our state who does not stand in need, we charge that your course has been hypocritical throughout.

Hungry Must Be Fed.

"We know, and you should know, that citizens who are hungry must be fed. We know, and you should know, that the taking of their little homes by sheriffs' levies must be stopped.

"We know, and you should know, that citizens who have any means at at all at their command, and those who still have jobs, are willing to join in affording relief. We know, and you should know, that it is not true that the citizens of Pennsylvania are unwilling to pay taxes to save human lives.

"As the elected representatives of the people it is your plain duty to provide for the people the opportunity of doing what the people want done. Thus far you have defiantly thwarted them.

"Upon your shoulders squarely rests the responsibility of providing relief for our citizens who are in distress. You cannot evade that responsibility by attempting to pass the buck to Washington or by robbing Peter to pay Paul."

"Not Yet Too Late."

"It is not yet too late. Although you have already whittled down proposed legislation to almost the vanishing point, there is still time in which you can reclaim the ground which you have allowed to slip from under your feet. This is the solemn obligation that now confronts you.

"We demand and expect action. Unless you do act in a way that is commensurate with the needs of the people we will go to them, upon your record of failure, and insist upon such changes in personnel and in party in our legislative halls as will restore courage and responsibility to government and responsiveness to the will of its citizens.

"We are making this last appeal, not as supplicants, but as citizens of Pennsylvania and as the representatives of an harassed and suffering people, demanding of our servants in the senate and in the house of representatives the enactment of adequate measures of direct relief, and the raising of sufficient revenue to finance them, in order that men, women and children now unable to secure the necessaries of life may be provided for until the regular legislative session convenes.

"The consummation of such a program will not only relieve momentous distress, but will, as well, be an investment in the security of our citizenship and of government itself.

"Act—before it is too late!"

The letter is signed by the committee on unemployment relief of the Pennsylvania Federation of Labor, as follows:

Thomas Kennedy, chairman; P. T. Fagan, Michael Hartneady, James Mark, Charles Emmert, Joseph M. Michie, Mart F. Brennan, John W. Edelman, Clarence Moser, Elmer H. Spahr, N. F. Storm, and by John A. Phillips, president, and James E. Kelley, secretary.

STRIKE CLOSES TWO TEXTILE MILLS IN SALISBURY, N. C.

Salisbury, N. C.—The Rowan Cotton mills here were closed by a walkout of approximately 200 employes who demanded a wage readjustment. On the first day of the trouble most of the day shift walked out and only the spinning room was running at night. The next day so few workers showed up for work that the mill management decided to close down the plant.

Negotiations were still under way looking toward a settlement of the strike at the Salisbury Cotton mills here, where 300 workers struck Aug. 1 for a higher rate of pay. Several prominent citizens were conferring with mill officials and strikers' representatives with a view to ending the strike. The strikers remained firm in their demand for higher wages.

JOBLESS IN PENNSYLVANIA INCREASE TO 1,127,746

Harrisburg, Pa.—The estimated number of persons without jobs in Pennsylvania for May was 1,127,746, or 30 per cent of the total working population, according to a statement issued by the department of labor and industry.

This represents an increase of nearly 71,000 in the ranks of the state's unemployed since the preceding estimate for March, 1932, when the total was placed at 1,056,949, it was stated.

Go to your Union Meetings

Don't say you are too tired; the weather is bad; or there is too much quibbling and "hot air" to interest me.

Every time you miss a meeting and leave it to the other fellow to look out for your interest, you are doing an injustice both to yourself and your organization.

Your views on especially vital subjects should be represented in discussion and by vote, and the only way for this to be done is for you to be at your union meeting.

You are responsible for the good and welfare of your organization, and non-attendance of union meetings on your part is not excuse enough for you to voice your opinion after a measure has been passed. It is then time for you to concur in what has been done and work in harmony with the officers and other members of your union.

Go to your union meetings regularly and induce others to do the same, because one important thing to remember is the meaning of the slogan:

"United we stand, Divided we fall."

"I See by the Papers—"

By HECK

Well, folks, it's been a long time since I told you what I thought about the labor news which appears in our local daily papers. One reason I quit telling you about it was because labor news began to get rather scarce (I wonder if it was because I was commenting on it?), and another reason was that I had other things to attend to. However, ye ed (Bob Cooke) has been giving me Hail Columbia (that's polite for Hell, you know) because I haven't been writing anything for him, so I thought I had better give him something this week, if for no other reason than to keep him quiet. .

You know, mining operations were stopped in southern Illinois last week when 10,000 striking miners marched into that territory protesting against the cut in the already low wages.

Tell me this, Mr. Union Man, would you rather pay 50 cents or a dollar a ton less for your coal, and see your fellow union man forced out of work, or working for starvation wages, than to pay a higher price and see your fellow union man getting a decent wage for his work?

Four hundred miners went to Taylorville, in southern Illinois, and persuaded the miners there to join them in their protest against low wages, and after succeeding in closing down four Peabody mines decided to remain there on picket duty to keep "rats" from working the mines. Rumors were given out by "rat" supporters that the company planned to open one mine under armed guards, but were not confirmed.

President Walker, of the Illinois district of the United Mine Workers of America, calls the strike movement a "fiasco" and "dual to the United Mine Workers of America." He tells the membership that the movement is being sponsored by men who have been repudiated in union elections.

The miners are striking in protest against the reduced wage scale which has been put in force by the mine owners. The former scale was $6.10 and the reduced scale is $5.00. Walker tells his membership that while they are protesting against a $5.00 scale, miners in Kentucky are working for $1.50 a day of ten to eleven hours.

When 10,000 men agree on a subject, why isn't that subject the right subject? Of course, if the opposition can muster more men, then the opposition's side is the right side, for the majority always rules.

Getting back to our main subject, the miners of Illinois seem to think that the new wage scale of $5.00 is inadequate for them to maintain their already low standard of living. They are in a better position to know what it costs them to live than we are, so I say let's agree with them, and back them to the limit.

I, for one, am not going to buy any non-union mined coal this winter if it is possible to secure union-mined coal, even if it does cost me more per ton. How about you, Mr. Union Man?

The Social Ideals of Jesus of Nazareth

An Interpretation

Written for The Labor World
By WILLIAM L. MOSS

Chapter VI
JESUS' EVALUATION OF LIFE
Part XIII

With everything against Him, Jesus treated men as sons of God, and His optimism has had its vindication.

—John Watson.

In connection with our study of the words of Jesus recorded in the latter half of the tenth verse of the tenth chapter of the gospel according to John, "I am come that they might have life, and that they might have it more abundantly," the writer thinks it well to say here that Christian teachers emphasize what Jesus said He could do for men, but seldom go to the trouble of getting below the surface of things by revealing, from a purely historical viewpoint, how He actually looked upon men as individuals. Once the Master's real thoughts about men are understood it becomes clear to us why He could do so much for them if they only were willing for His spirit to guide them, and guide them, as He said Himself, "in all things." Note also that He stressed the fact that the surrender to His will must be complete.

WM. L. MOSS

Let us now study how Jesus looked upon the individual man.

First. Life to Jesus was not a condition imposed upon a mass of hapless beings whose only destiny was to walk the treadmill of their existence until death might come to release them and their suffering souls. He thought of life as a way, an education, an unfolding process, a moral evolution—in other words, a mode of motion. "First the blade of grass," He said on one occasion, "then the ear, after that the full corn in the ear." Thus did His keen observation of nature as revealed to Him by the wheatfields of Palestine teach Him the analogy of the growth of the soul. That is to say, precisely as the law of growth holds good in the realm of nature, so the law of growth operating in human beings in a similar manner shapes character in men.

Jesus, then, did not think of the condition of a life, but of the direction it was going. It takes time for nature to produce a stalk, a tree or a flower. It likewise takes time for God to produce character in a man, but if God's work going on inside the soul of a man is not interfered with any more then we would dare interfere with the work of nature while it is germinating a seed into life underneath the ground, the efforts of the Father, operating through and by the grace and spirit of the Son, will finally be as manifest in a man as a full-grown tree is that has grown from a tiny seed and which stands by the roadside.

I believe that the Parable of the Prodigal Son (Lk. 11-32:15) is the best illustration of Jesus' own living and unconquerable faith in the individual man's moral capacity and soul-worth. As Jesus related the parable, when the Prodigal is stirred to repentance he "comes to himself." Not only has he been lost from the family group but he has lost himself; his self-respect is gone! Returning home he finds the family still there but in reality it is himself whom he finds; he is repentant! Jesus could not conceive of any man falling so low he could not be lifted up.

FORTY-THREE STATES RESTRICT WOMEN'S WORK

Hours of Labor Are Limited in All But Four States, Women's Bureau Says—Hours Per Week Vary from 54 to 60.

Washington, Aug. 18.—Forty-three states now have legal restrictions limiting the number of hours women may work, according to a revised summary of labor legislation for women in the United States made public by the women's bureau of the department of labor.

Four states have no law of any sort regulating the hours of work for women. These are Alabama, Florida, Iowa and West Virginia. The Indiana law limits the hours women may work in manufacturing industries. All other states have definitely restricted the employment of women to a certain number of hours a day or week or have penalized all employment beyond certain specified hours by setting increased rate of pay for overtime.

Eight-Hour Day in Ten States.

The following ten states have set up the eight-hour day for women in certain industries: Arizona, California, Colorado, Kansas, Montana, Nevada, New Mexico, New York, Utah and Washington. The District of Columbia also has the eight-hour limitation.

North Dakota and Wyoming provide a working day of eight and one-half hours in specified industries and occupations.

Nine-Hour Work Day.

Eighteen states—Arkansas, Idaho, Kansas, Louisiana, Maine, Massachusetts, Michigan, Minnesota, Missouri, Nebraska, New Mexico, New York, North Dakota, Ohio, Oklahoma, Oregon, Texas and Wisconsin—limit to nine hours the working day of women in specified industries or occupations. Two of these states—Massachusetts and Oregon—limit the weekly hours to forty-eight. Kansas allows 49½ hours a week in laundries and factories, and 54 hours a week in mercantile establishments.

Ohio and Wisconsin allow 50 working hours a week, New Mexico allows 56 hours, North Dakota 54 hours in mercantile and 58 hours in public housekeeping establishments in towns of under 500 population, Idaho sets no weekly limit, and the remaining states allow 54 hours a week.

Minnesota, though many of its women workers are limited to nine hours a day, includes a greater number under a 10-hour law.

10-Hour Restriction.

In the 10-hour group are found the states of Connecticut, Delaware, Illinois, Kentucky, Maryland, Minnesota, Mississippi, New Jersey, New Mexico, Oregon, Pennsylvania, Rhode Island, South Dakota, Virginia and Wisconsin, fifteen in all. The weekly hours show considerable variation. New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Rhode Island and South Dakota have the shortest limit, fifty-four hours a week.

Connecticut, Delaware and Wisconsin allow 55 hours; Minnesota permits 58 hours; Kentucky, Maryland, Mississippi and New Mexico, 60 hours; Illinois, Oregon and Virginia fix no weekly limit. Three of these states—New Mexico, Oregon and Wisconsin—limit the hours of the majority of their women workers to less than ten a day and include only a few groups in their ten-hour laws.

10¼ to 12 Hours.

In this miscellaneous group of laws are found the states of New Hampshire, permitting a 10¼-hour day and a 54-hour week; Vermont, a 10½-hour day and a 56-hour week; Tennessee, a 10½-hour day and a 57-hour week; North Carolina, an 11-hour day and a 55-hour week in factories and mills, and South Carolina, a 12-hour day and a 60-hour week in mercantile establishments.

Weekly Hour Laws.

Six states—Connecticut, Louisiana, Maine, Minnesota, New York and Oregon—have legislation supplementing the laws regulating both daily and weekly hours and limiting only the weekly hours for certain other industries or occupations. For these weekly limits, Connecticut and Minnesota specify 58 hours; Maine and New York, 54 hours; Louisiana, 60 hours; Oregon, 56 hours in one occupation and 48 hours in another.

POTTERS WAGE SET.

Wages of 6,000 or more pottery workers in the general ware trade took a wage readjustment through conferences between employers and the National Brotherhood of Operative Potters here. The cut is 10 per cent and the manufacturers have agreed to pass it on to the consumer to stimulate buying. The union has agreed, for the same purpose, that the cut shall be effective at once instead of on Oct. 1, when the present contract expires.

UNION LABEL

What is the objection to union-labeled products?

There would appear to be some objection or else there would be greater general demand for them.

Why not go into this matter now? The time was never more propitious for cooperative effort to popularize union-labeled products. Unionists are equally willing enough to lend aid to efforts to create demand for the label representative of their own craft. Why neglect union-made products of other crafts? Other organized craftsmen are asked to see that your label is on what they purchase. Isn't it only fair to see that their labels are on what you buy?

The union label on products of any description is indisputable evidence the goods were made by union workers, in a union shop and under union conditions. This is the main point in their favor.

By purchasing union-made products with union-earned money unionists are aiding each other. If all union-earned money were spent only for union-made products there would be no enforced idleness among members of organized labor.

Argument is heard that union-labeled products are not easy to obtain. Why aren't they? It is idle to assert that dealers will refuse to stock union-made products if shown sufficient demand exists. Why not create that demand?

Once in a while unionists declare this or that nonunion product is better suited to their taste than union-made goods of a similar kind. Is taste a matter of principle? Isn't it a cultivated sense? Did the founders of organized labor consider taste when formulating the principles upon which the movement is predicated?

No unionist can justify his attitude of noncompliance or indifference unless and until he has exhausted all reasonable efforts to obtain for himself and his home products that bear the symbol of fair labor. There are, perhaps, times when a certain article is unobtainable, but a quest for it may arouse sufficient interest among dealers to make it easy to find the second time inquiry is made.

Labeled hats, shoes, cigarets and other goods are easily obtained in most sections simply because demand for them has been so great dealers have realized the wisdom of stocking them. The average merchant has slight regard for sentiment in business. He wants to handle goods that move. Move the first consignment for him and he will order the second at once.

A demand must first be created. And if organized labor does not create the demand for union-made products, who will?

United and consistent effort to create and maintain a demand for union-made products will lessen unemployment, increase wages and decrease working hours to the glory of the organized labor movement.

Besides the committee members, Mr. Aymon said, anyone interested in any way in the celebration is invited to be on hand.

"Chattanooga's greatest Labor Day celebration!"

The above announced goal of the Labor Day committee of Chattanooga Trades and Labor council bids fair to be fully realized on Monday, Sept. 5, when indications are that one of the greatest throngs ever to pass through the gates of Warner park on Labor Day will be on hand to make merry with the workers in observance of the day set aside in honor of those who toil.

A splendid program has been arranged, including features calculated to please the fancy of all comers. There will be nothing elaborate in the nature of entertainment, but it has been the purpose of the committee to provide worthwhile features in every instance, and it is believed the result will be pleasing to the general public.

Chairman Witt, of the barbecue committee, promises to have the feast ready at 10 a.m., and will be prepared to serve the hungry thousands throughout the morning, afternoon and evening.

HARNESS RACES MORNING EVENT.

There will be three heats, and lovers of this sport are promised thrills in this reminder of the days when "the sport of kings" was popular in Chattanooga. This feature of the day's program is a contribution to the Labor Day committee by D. L. Brown, prominent local contractor, and Fay Murphy, dairyman and sports lover, and bids fair to be one of the most thrilling numbers of the entire day.

O'CONNOR, LUSK SPEECHMAKERS.

At 12 noon two Labor Day addresses will be delivered in the grove in the northeast section of the park. John T. O'Connor, mayor of Knoxville and former president of the Tennessee Federation of Labor, and the Hon. Charles W. Lusk, criminal court judge, will be the orators, and those acquainted with these gentlemen will agree that Labor's cause will be well told.

It is planned to conclude the speaking in ample time for baseball fans to reach Engel stadium for the double-header between the Lookouts and Smokies.

ATHLETIC CONTESTS STIR INTEREST.

Committee members have also been besieged with inquiries concerning the athletic and field contests, which will begin at 3 p.m. Entries for these events are expected to number scores,

PRINTERS GIVE $3,551 RELIEF TO UNEMPLOYED

Local Union Provides for Jobless Members.

ASSESSMENTS ARE CHEERFULLY PAID

Keep Members Off Charities by Plan of Paying Out-of-Work Benefits.

By ED CRUMP

"Am I My Brother's Keeper?"

The question above is one for which all union men should have an affirmative answer. In times of stress a good union man will not see his brother member suffer. He will not see his brother member wronged or harmed at any time.

"His Brother's Keeper" is the name of a famous painting made more famous by the International Typographical union when it was selected by that body for the purpose of impressing on union men that they are their brothers' keepers.

The answer of Chattanooga Typographical Union No. 89 to that question is decisively in the affirmative, and its efforts during the past two years to keep its unemployed members from calling on the charities of the city prove this so.

In 1930 the membership felt that it was time they took up arms against Old Man Depression. The first idea was to establish the five-day week, but after considerable thought was devoted to the five-day week it was decided that that was not the proper solution at that time, because of local conditions. It would more than take care of the unemployed machine operators, but the handmen would benefit very little. The five-day week idea was tabled, but not discarded.

Instead, a plan was adopted whereby unemployed members were guaranteed $12 a week, or the difference in earnings and $18. If a member didn't work any during a week, he was paid $12 from the treasury of the union. If he worked one or two days, he was paid the difference between what he earned and $18. This plan has been in operation almost continuously since August of 1930, with slight changes at different times.

No. 89 has spent directly for unemployment relief purposes $3,551.97 since August, 1930, the figures being as follows:

Quarters ending
Oct. 15, 1930	$ 149.18
Jan. 15, 1931	188.34
Apr. 15, 1931	517.50
July 15, 1931	15.00
Oct. 15, 1931	142.50
Jan. 15, 1932	193.50
Apr. 15, 1932	884.45
July 15, 1932	1,039.00
Month ending Aug. 15, 1932	422.50
Total	$3,551.97

This does not include sick relief and donations to travelers and to local members to pay dues, all of which, with the exception of one case, is directly chargeable to the unemployment condition. Neither does it include "loans" granted for the express purpose of removing members from the unemployment relief roll. These items would total about $350.

At different times it has been necessary to put on special assessments of various percentages in order to keep enough money in the treasury to pay unemployment benefits. Each time these assessments have been given good majorities when put to referendum vote. The various assessments have brought in $1,265.55, or $2,286.42 less than has been paid directly to unemployment relief. The difference was made up from the regular dues paid by the membership.

All of this money has been cheerfully paid from the earnings of the more fortunate members of No. 89, which shows that No. 89's answer to the question at the head of this article is decisively "Yes, we are our brothers' keepers!"

A vacation plan which No. 89 recently put into effect allows regulars $15 a week for vacations not exceeding two weeks, with the union controlling the regular's situation. The union then divides the time among the unemployed. Under this plan a two-week vacation gives six substitutes two days work each instead of one substitute twelve days.

Bonita Theater Opens As Non-Union House

Cheap Movie Show Will Attempt Cheap Operation Policy.

DECLARED "UNFAIR" BY CENTRAL BODY

Frank Olmstead, Former Permit Man, Involved in First Fight on Operators' Union Since 1913—Pickets Patrol Vicinity of House — Union Officials Ask Moral Support.

Chattanoogans were treated Friday morning to the spectacle of a "movie war," the first in this city since 1913, when the operators' union was victorious in a short battle with local employers.

The Bonita theater, small house on Market street, near Ninth, was opened and the name of Frank Olmstead, formerly a permit man who had been employed in legal booths, was given as manager, machine operator, etc. It was said that Olmstead plans to operate the picture machines himself, replacing three men who were employed in the booth prior to the last closing of the house. The business management, etc., is also credited to Olmstead.

Officials of Local 259 Friday morning expressed regret that the former beneficiary of conditions gained by long years of struggle had seen fit to desert the ranks and be instrumental in taking a backward step for the craft in Chattanooga.

The Bonita has been successfully operated in the past, but in recent months has been closed due to unfavorable business conditions. That the new operators will "make good" in their efiorts to operate a non-union house is seriously doubted by local theater men.

Chattanooga Trades and Labor council, at a special called meeting Thursday night, gave the executive board of that body power to act in the matter, and the house has been declared "unfair to organized labor." Pickets were placed in the vicinity of the theater Friday morning, bearing placards announcing the house to be non-union.

Officials of Local 259 asked The Labor World to state that moral support of all local trades unionists and their friends will be greatly appreciated.

FIGURES SHOW JOBLESS ARMY STILL INCREASES

More Than 11,000,000 Now Unemployed.

AT HIGHEST POINT SINCE SLUMP BEGAN

Already More Than Double That of Last Year, President Green Says.

William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor, yesterday issued the following statement regarding unemployment based on reports from affiliated organizations, showing unemployment at the highest point since the present depression began:

"Unemployment in August was at the highest point since depression began. Our preliminary estimate for July based on government figures, shows 11,400,000 persons out of work in the United States, and trade union figures for August show no improvement. In July, layoffs for the summer dull season added more than 300,000 to the army of unemployed.

"With unemployment already more than double that of last year, we face a winter of unthinkable suffering. Between now and next January, nearly two million persons must count on losing their jobs in industry and agriculture—if layoffs are no more than normal. This will mean well over 13,000,000 out of work next winter. Jobs must be created by the million if we are to avoid an unparalleled catastrophe. Even a substantial improvement in industry could not do more than scratch the surface of this problem.

"Taking our union unemployment reports as an indicator of business, the fact that unemployment stopped increasing in August is encouraging. Up to August, over 250,000 persons a month had been joining the jobless army. The check in this rise shows a distinct improvement over each of the two previous depression summers, when unemployment increased in August, but it does not show any more jobs created. Normally industry begins in August to prepare for the fall busy season, and workers are taken back to their jobs. This year jobs have not increased. Weighted figures from trade unions show the following percentage of membership unemployed in the last four months: May, 22.8; June, 23.6; July, 25.4; first part of August (preliminary), 25.4.

"Care must be taken not to misinterpret these figures. They do not show any relief from the unemployment disaster that has overtaken us. They only show that for one month it has stopped getting worse. Our persent unemployment problem, and that we must face for next winter is beyond anything we have yet known. We can only meet it by taking immediate action to shorten work hours, create jobs and get men back to work.

"Our estimates of the total number out of work in the United States, based on government figures, are:

"January, 10,304,000; February, 10,533,000; March, 10,477,000; April, 10,496,000; May, 10,818,000; June, 11,023,000; July, 11,418,000 (preliminary)."

REDS POCKET THE MONEY.

Communists in the lignite district of northwest Bohemia have just been exposed playing the old Gastonia game. Great sums were collected ostensibly for relief for mine strikers. A public statement accounts for about three-fourths of the money acknowledged. Added to the missing one-fourth there are large sums for administrative expense and other non-relief costs. About one-fifth of the total has been held in reserve for "furthering demands" that may follow the strike. What the strikers got was about 3 cents each!

COTTON CLOTH DEMAND SHOWS HEAVY INCREASE

By RALPH COUCH

Demand for cotton cloth has virtually doubled in the last four months for which accurate records are available at headquarters of the Cotton Textile Merchants association.

Sales averaged 56,000,000 yards weekly during July. The comparable weekly average of sales was 26,000,000 yards in April. The August average, not yet available, is expected to show a gain over July.

The increase in demand for cloth probably will force greater activity on the cotton textile mills during the next few months, thereby increasing employment. The stock of cotton cloth on hand is lower than the total of unfilled orders.

FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 2, 1932.

ANOTHER LABOR DAY.

Another Labor Day is at hand, and every indication is that when "Good-Night" is flashed in fire at Warner Park Monday, there will have been concluded the greatest local celebration of this day set aside to honor those who toil in factory, mill, mine and workshop.

A committee of sixty which originally took up the burden of preparing a great program has been recently increased by voluntary enlistment, and perhaps never before in the history of local labor organizations has there been more widespread and enthusiastic interest in the success of the celebration.

As a result, a splendid all-day program has been arranged for the public Monday, and it has appeared that performers, concessionists, merchants, business institutions—in fact, everyone who could possibly help—have joined in the spirit of the occasion and have graciously contributed to the success of the program in their various ways, and to an extent not dreamed of by the committee when the members first began their work.

Such a spirit in these distressing times is surely calculated to confound the pessimistic, and of possibly greater import to the trades unionist directly, it is a tribute to the manner in which our movement has been conducted locally. While due credit should be given to the committee for tireless toil, the fact remains that the standing of organized labor in Chattanooga, as represented by Chattanooga Trades and Labor Council and its affiliates, made the task of planning such a great program much easier.

But the work is not yet finished. If the events scheduled for Warner park Monday are to run smoothly and give entire satisfaction to all who enter the gates—which is the goal early set by the unionists—then a "small army" of volunteers must be on hand to render such assistance as is within their power. The cooking and serving of the barbecue alone will require almost 100 men, and various other features cannot be smoothly operated without the co-operation of large numbers.

Preliminary work, however, has been well and thoroughly done, and it now remains only for the weather man to say whether or not the plans will be carried out on Monday. If the day is fair and warm, sponsors of the great program expect to entertain thousands of visiting citizens, as well as hundreds from nearby towns and communities.

"Everybody's going!"

TODAY'S LABOR WORLD.

This issue of The Labor World is, for obvious reasons, somewhat smaller than is usual for our Labor Day edition. However, in view of all the handicaps, we feel that the amount of business carried in our advertising columns is very satisfactory. Represented in this paper are some four score progressive local business firms, and to these we desire to extend our profound appreciation, and we commend them to every consideration of our readers.

Also, in our news and feature columns are quite a few specially written articles which should prove particularly interesting at this time as indicating the trend of thought among leaders of the trade union movement in America. It is noteworthy that most of these show that the workers have met the great crisis as befits a humanitarian and thoroughly American organization, and confidence in the rank and file of the movement is thoroughly justified. In short, much consolation and grounds for hope is seen in the present situation, and we believe organized labor may review the past year and look to the future with confidence.

History of Labor Day

Labor Day, 1932, is the thirty-ninth annual celebration of Labor Day as a legal national holiday and the fifty-first anniversary of the first local Labor Day celebration.

P. J. McGuire, the founder of the Brotherhood of Carpenters and Joiners and for many years a member of the executive council of the American Federation of Labor, originated the Labor Day idea.

At a meeting of the New York City Central Labor union held on May 8, 1882, McGuire stressed the propriety of setting aside one day in the year as a general holiday for the working people. He suggested that it be called Labor Day.

The central labor union adopted the idea and organized a Labor Day parade and festival on the first Monday in September, 1882.

The 1884 convention of the American Federation of Labor endorsed the proposal for a national Labor Day holiday by unanimously adopting the following resolution introduced by A. C. Cameron, a delegate from the Chicago Trades and Labor Alliance:

> "Resolved, That the first Monday in September of each year be set apart as a laborers' national holiday, and that we recommend its observance by all wage workers, irrespective of sex, calling, or nationality."

Organized labor carried on its demand for Labor Day so effectively that soon many municipal councils and state legislatures made it a legal holiday.

Oregon was the first state to make Labor Day a state holiday; the Oregon Labor Day law was signed by the governor on February 21, 1887. During 1887 the legislatures of Colorado, Massachusetts, New Jersey and New York also made Labor Day a state holiday. In 1889, Connecticut, Nebraska and Pennsylvania enacted Labor Day laws; in 1890, Iowa and Ohio; in 1891, Georgia, Illinois, Indiana, Kansas, Maine, Montana, New Hampshire, South Carolina, Tennessee and Washington; in 1892, Alabama, Louisiana, Utah and Virginia; in 1893, California, Delaware, Florida, Minnesota, Rhode Island, Texas and Wisconsin.

In the meantime the officials of the American Federation of Labor endeavored to have the congress of the United States make Labor Day a national holiday.

Shortly after the fifty-third congress convened in 1893, Senator James H. Kyle, of South Dakota, Representative Amos J. Cummings, of New York, and Representative Robert E. DeForest, of Connecticut, introduced bills making Labor Day a legal holiday.

The Cummings bill was reported favorably by the house committee on labor, of which Lawrence E. McGann, of Illinois, was chairman. The committee did not report the DeForest bill.

The Kyle bill was reported favorably by the senate committee on education and labor, of which Senator Kyle was chairman. Following is the text of the Kyle bill:

> "A Bill Making Labor Day a Legal Holiday.—Be it enacted by the senate and house of representatives of the United States of America in congress assembled, that the first Monday in September in each year, being the day celebrated and known as labor's holiday, is hereby made a legal public holiday, in the same manner as Christmas, the first day of January, the 22nd of February, the 30th day of May, and the 4th day of July are now by law public holidays."

The senate passed the Kyle bill on June 24, 1894, the house passed it on June 26, in place of the Cummings bill, and President Cleveland signed it on June 28.

In his annual report to the 1894 convention of the American Federation of Labor, Samuel Gompers, president of the federation, announced labor's victory with the following brief statement:

> "National Labor Day.—It affords me pleasure to be able to report that the demand made by the American Federation of Labor for making the first Monday in September of each year a legal holiday passed congress and was made a law on June 28, 1894."

All hail to Labor Day, 1932!

Machinery and Progress

When members of organized labor and other forward-looking people protest against machinery in production being used by those who own and control industry to enrich themselves at the expense of the workers, reactionaries often exclaim: "What! Are you opposed to progress?"

The reactionaries imply that labor-displacing machinery contributes to progress regardless of the inequitable distribution of the economic benefits resulting from its application.

This point is considered by Thomas E. Dunwody, editor of the Pressman, the official organ of the International Printing Pressmen and Assistants' Union of America, in the following editorial on "High Speed—Short Hours":

> "High speed machines, new methods and types of machines are coming fast even under present conditions.
>
> "They cannot be stopped, and as long as they represent progress, as long as they serve mankind, no one wants to stop them.
> "But man was not made to serve the machine. On the contrary, the machine is the creation of man—a vehicle to serve mankind, and it cannot be allowed to become anything else.
>
> "The machine can only serve society when regulated to do so.
>
> "High-speed labor-displacing machines make necessary the shortening of the work week.
> "In no other way can be balanced the factors of production and unemployment, and production and consumption of the products of the machine."

Mr. Dunwody is right. There is no progress in the mere invention and introduction of machines that enable one person to produce as much of the good things of life as many persons produced without the machines. Nor is there progress when the benefits of the machines are appropriated, as they have been hitherto and are being now, by those who own industry. Progress is social, not individual.

Why Hold Back This Work?

Secretary of Treasury Ogden L. Mills is mainly responsible for failure on the part of the government to designate the cities in which the government's $100,000,000 is to be spent for public works, such as postoffices and federal buildings to house courts and other functionaries.

Why does Secretary Mills hold back this work? The money has been authorized for this purpose by Congress. That Mr. Mills may have opposed the program should not now cause him to seek to defeat the purpose of Congress.

RULING OPENS WAY FOR CONSTRUCTION

Ten Per Cent. Cut Ordered by Economy Act Not to Halt Construction Work—Work Under Way Is Exempted.

Washington.—Possibility that certain public building projects might be held up under the economy act by application of section 320 has been removed by Comptroller McCarl, though such danger was at the most slight.

The McCarl decision exempts most buildings now under way from the 10 per cent provision and clears the way for new work to proceed.

The danger was slight because most building work now is being done at, roughly, 25 per cent less than the appropriations. Moreover, the treasury is allowed let contracts coming within an excess of 5 per cent of the appropriations, so that even taking off the economy act 10 per cent cut, contracts can be let at a figure around 5 per cent of the appropriations and still encompass the stipulated 10 per cent cut.

Mrs. Mack—I'm bothered with a little wart I'd like to have removed.

Dr. Williams—The divorce lawyer is at the second door to your left.

The Passing Show

Note and Comment on Things Doing in the March of Events

Some critic of the public taste recently said that perhaps the reason so many readers turn to the sporting pages before they rend the first page is because success is found in the sporting pages, while failure fills the first page.

In sports, this critic pointed out, some contestant wins, some team wins, some player chalks up a victory in every story.

On the first page, he asserted, failure rules—murder, disaster, destruction.

The conclusion would have more merit if there were more truth in the premise.

* * *

Newspaper first pages chronicle, after all, the doings that editors think are the most important of the day. And, out of long practice and something akin to intuition, they generally are not far wrong.

Sporting pages have their importance, but they have an actual importance far under their apparent importance.

Big money has been invested in the business of making what we call sports important. A ballyhoo of tremendous proportions has been turned loose to make sports important.

A ventured guess would be that any departmentalized feature of newspaperdom could be given disproportionate importance if it were ballyhooed half as much as sports have been ballyhooed. Ballyhoo does count, after all.

So, many persons turn first to the sports pages because they have been ballyhooed into it.

* * *

The human race is queer about its sense of values. Great throngs devote hours daily to speculation about a baseball team which is owned by some magnate, just as Roman emperors once owned stables of gladiators.

Thousands have gone to extremes for or against the bonus army.

Columns of invective have been leveled against the president because of the expulsion of the bonus army, taking every rumor for fact.

Yet hundreds of thousands of coal miners have suffered for months and even years to extremes unknown by the bonus army, without any great public outcry.

The sports pages will continue to be popular, perhaps because a human race burdened with responsibilities beyond any ever known to history prefers to think about something else.

While we roast congress for incompetence we spend our time immersed in arguing about the relative merits of contenders who are paid for their efforts by promoters to entertain the public. But, after all, the secret is in the fact that the sports pages bring us the game, while the first page brings us the headache of responsibility.

There are thousands to whom democracy is either a matter for someone else to worry about, or something that will run itself and about which we have no need to bother.

There are a great many who feel the same way about labor unions.

But these instruments do not run themselves. While we read the sport pages someone else is reading the first page and taking due note of the facts there chronicled.

Relating the issue to life as a whole and using the newspaper pages as symbols, we may say that the readers of the sport pages pay the freight and how they shall pay and how much they shall pay is determined for them by readers of the first pages while they are still perusing the box scores or working their blissful way down toward the last round.

The moral, if moral there be, is simply that this is a darned good time to know all that is going on.

That "the early bird catches the worm"
Is something we've often been taught;
And yet we may state, if the worm had slept late,
It surely would not have been caught.

HOUR OF ECONOMIC DISASTER REVEALS THE BRAVE AND TRUE, SAYS ELECTRICIANS' OFFICIAL

Members Manifesting Loyalties and Showing Sacrifices Not Seen in Better Days—Trades Unionists Have Double Duty to Protect Gains Made.

By G. M. BUGNIAZET
Secretary International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers

G. M. BUGNIAZET

We have never been Pollyannas at the Electrical Workers' office. Somehow our experience does not fit in with cheerful optimism, yet we don't want to overlook occasions for hope when they really arise. The depression has brought many bitter disappointments to trade unionists. It has brought pain, suffering, setbacks, defeats, and without doubt, has seriously injured the movement. Depressions always do. It has been the lot of trade unionists to suffer through these cycles of business disease since the formation of the movement back in the 1830's.

This worst of all depressions has left indelible marks upon us. We must admit loss of membership. We must acknowledge that our funds have been greatly depleted. We must confess to losses in standards which have taken years to build up. This is the dismal side of the picture. The hopeful side lies in the renewed allegiance to unionism that we daily meet. Members are manifesting loyalties, are showing sacrifices that better days do not discover. When the house is on fire, the weak wring their hands and do nothing, the cowardly flee, but the brave and true stand by and do what they can to save valuables from the wreckage. We are having revealed to us the brave and true in this hour of economic disaster.

We have a message for our members and for other trades unionists on Labor Day 1932. Now more than ever the union is needed. Now more than ever every trade unionist has more than a double duty to do what he can to protect organization, to maintain it, and to forward the social aims of labor. In times like these all the selfish interests grow stronger because they have less opposition and seek a greater share of the common income. The only opposition facing them is from labor. That is the only opposition they can have and so labor unions take on a new significance and new luster. As in all national crises, they become the protector of the nation's great principles and traditions. They are guarding the standard again today. Wherever any other group succeed in protecting themselves against organized business policies they imitate trade unions. The farmers of Iowa have organized and are striking against starvation prices. They are bringing to the situation the technique of the labor union.

We predict that the coming ten years will see further imitations of labor by other economic groups and we shall see growing need for labor unions everywhere. Now is the time for the weak and cowardly to take an accounting and to bring their own lives in line with the brave and the true. We predict that the brave and the true will march forward unflinchingly to advance the cause of the union.

GARAGE WORK IS NOT IN 'BIG MONEY'

Mechanics Found to Average Only $29.56 Per Week of 51 Hours — Forty-three Cities Covered in Survey.

Washington.—Motor vehicle repair garage employes in 43 cities in 34 states were found to earn an average of $29.56 per 51-hour week in a bureau of labor statistics survey just announced.

Average full-time hours per week ranged by occupations from 49.8 for machinists to 58.5 for the group of miscellaneous employes. Average hours actually worked in one week varied from 43 for wood body workers to 58.8 for miscellaneous employes. The per cent of full-time work ranged from 83.3 for wood body workers to 102.1 for inspectors. Part of the inspectors worked overtime in the week covered in the report.

Average earnings per hour ranged, by occupations, from 34.7 cents for mechanics' helpers to 86.7 cents for blacksmiths, with full-time earnings per week fluctuating between $18.46 for mechanics' helpers to $45.50 for diagnosticians. Actual average earnings in the week ranged from $17.63 for mechanics' helpers to $44.30 for diagnosticians.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA IDLE SWAMP RELIEF MANAGERS

Washington.—The welfare committee charged with administering the $350,000 jobless relief fund appropriated by congress for the District of Columbia was swamped with more than 3,600 applications for help during the first week of the committee's existence. When the headquarters opened at the beginning of the second week, more than 1,000 needy persons were lined up demanding assistance.

AMERICAN LABOR HAS STEMMED TREND TOWARD DEMORALIZATION STANDARDS GAINED BY STRUGGLE

Present Conditions Reflect Stupidity of Those Responsible for Management and Direction of Industrial Affairs of Our Country, Says Secretary of American Federation of Labor.

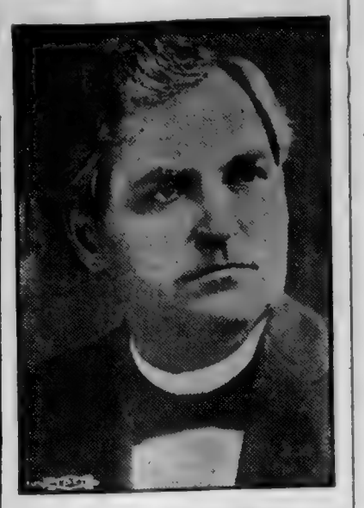
By FRANK MORRISON
Secretary American Federation of Labor

The masses of the people have suffered intensely from the blight of the nation-wide depression which is now nearing its fourth winter. A review of the proceedings of the conventions of the American Federation of Labor and of our affiliated organizations will reveal that the trade union movement has insistently reiterated that labor policies in the operation of modern industry have been uneconomic and unsound. Organized labor has not only constantly protested the injustice involved to the victims of this uneconomic system but has warned of the menace to the perpetuation of our republic and its free institutions in the unchecked spread of unemployment. The program presented by the American Federation of Labor and our affiliated organizations would have established order and method in the operation of modern industry and prevented the present social and industrial chaos.

Unfair and antagonistic employers have ignored and frustrated by every means at hand, including the abuse of judicial power and the debasement of the courts of justice, the struggle of trade unions to put into operation a system of industry which would recognize the rights of labor. With few exceptions, this has been the policy of what is known as "big business," the expanding of which through merging of interlocking financial interests has placed in its hands the power to influence and control business and political policies in our country. Present conditions reflect the stupendous stupidity of those responsible for the management and direction of industrial affairs of our country.

Notwithstanding the odds confronting our organizations they have stemmed the trend toward demoralization of the standards of labor which it has taken years of struggle to establish. In industries that have maintained a more normal degree of operation, particularly in the building industry, our trade unions have stood as a bulwark against the very determined effort of some employers to take advantage of the widespread condition of unemployment to lengthen hours and reduce wages.

The American Federation of Labor will continue to urge the adoption of its program to meet present requirements, the most important features of which briefly are: Shorten the hours of labor to the extent necessary to absorb unemployment; increase wages to maintain the purchasing power of all the people to accommodate their needs; advance planning of production requirements to spread employment over slack periods in each industry; establishment and coordination of federal and state employment agencies.



FRANK MORRISON

DO YOU REMEMBER
the time when electricity's chief use in your kitchen was for lighting?

Now you cook, clean, wash, iron, heat water and run the refrigerator with electricity!

Once upon a time electricity did little else but light your home . . . and as a usual thing there was only one light to a room. Electric appliances were little used. Each month you paid what was called a "light" bill.

Today, among other things, electricity cooks, cleans, heats, washes, irons, sews, keeps correct time, makes toast and coffee and runs the radio and refrigerator. You no longer pay a light bill, but an electric service bill.

Naturally you use more electricity now than a few years ago. It's economy to do so, for electric service really constitutes one of the cheapest items in the average family budget.

Did you know that during the period when prices of other commodities were soaring, the price of household electricity was steadily declining? Today, with the cost of living still about 40% above pre-war levels*, the average price of residence electricity in the territory served by The Tennessee Electric Power Company is 40% below pre-war prices.

Truly, every day is bargain day for the family that makes full use of its electric service.

"LET US CONTINUE ALONG SAFE AND SANE PATHWAY, AS IN PAST," ADVICE OF JOHN L. LEWIS

Let There Be Harmony of Purpose, of Thought, of Action and Support, Is Dramatic Labor Day Message of United Mine Workers' Chief Executive.

By JOHN L. LEWIS
President United Mine Workers of America

On this great and momentous Labor Day of 1932 I extend my sincere congratulations and best wishes to the hosts of organized labor everywhere. In the industrial year just past labor has been called upon to withstand more than its just share of sacrifice and hardship that flow from the present era of depression and economic discomfort. In all of the history of this great land, we are now experiencing the minimum of employment and the maximum of unemployment with all the misery and woe that accompany such a condition. Opportunity to work and earn a living for their families has been all but denied the toilers of this land. Such an unfortunate and deplorable situation places a terrific strain upon the steadfastness of our people.

I congratulate the members of labor's ranks upon their coolness and their adherence to the aims, the purposes and the principles of the labor movement which they have exercised throughout the past year. We marvel sometimes at the splendid degree of self-restraint that has characterized the life of the workers during the past hectic year. Those who adhere so loyally to the fundamental principles of the organized labor movement have refused to listen to the false preachings of demagogues and dangerous prophets. They have turned a deaf ear to those who would either destroy or turn our great organization from its true purpose and make it a means for their own personal profit and advantage. They have refused to heed the advice of those who would destroy us. For this reason, I say I extend my congratulations to the men and women of labor's ranks.

Let us continue along that safe and sane pathway in the year that lies ahead, hoping, praying and believing that better times and better things are in store for us. Stick to the ship. Do not falter. Continue in the future as you have in the past to give loyal support to your union and to the foundation upon which it is built. Let there be harmony of purpose, of thought, of action, of support. Let's all stand together and continue the great struggle for progress, which will never come until labor has achieved the goal of its ambition.

Stronger than its Vaults

The physical strength of this bank is readily apparent in its massive vaults; in the tons and tons of armored plate that protects its specie and securities. REPORTS SHOW PRINTERS' UNION "CARRIES ON" FOR MEMBERSHIP IN FACE OF TRYING CONDITIONS

Typographical Organization Spends Millions for Building Better Conditions—Holds $110,000 in Tennessee Cities Bonds—Staggering Sum Paid in Benefits.

By ED CRUMP

The following salient facts are gathered from the reports of the officers to the seventy-seventh session of the International Typographical union, held this year in Long Beach, Cal., beginning Monday, Sept. 12, and lasting throughout the week.

The fiscal year of the International Typographical union begins June 20. In the following any mention of "year" means the fiscal year.

Newspaper and job scales renewed during the year at the same rates as in the previous contracts amounted to 196. Twenty-seven locals which had increases provided for in current contracts either waived or deferred the increases, due to the depression. Temporary wage decreases were granted to employers by forty-three locals. Fifty locals negotiated for reductions in hours with consequent wage adjustment, most of which retained the same hourly rate. One hundred sixty-eight locals took definite decreases in newspaper scales and eighty-nine in job scales. Piece scales for machine operators are abolished in Galveston, Tex., and Ogden, Utah, and time scales substituted.

Thirty locals have reported reductions from forty-eight hours for newspaper work during the year; while seventeen locals which were already working less than forty-eight hours have reported further reductions in hours. There are now 358 locals working less than forty-eight hours on newspaper work. In forty-six locals the hours for day work on newspapers are forty-eight and less than forty-eight for night work.

There are sixty-one locals working less than forty hours on job work.

During the past year 245 new contracts were signed.

Reports from 544 locals, comprising 67,027 members, show 31,129 members employed on newspaper work, with 22,800 working regularly, 6,508 working from two to five days a week and 1,825 unemployed; 27,184 were in the job work class, with 17,189 working regularly, 6,097 working from two to five days weekly and 3,898 unemployed. 8,714 members were classed proprietors, pensioners and not working at trade. 238 locals, comprising 8,940 members, did not report.

Total earnings of the membership during the year were $154,600,048.00, an average of $2,023.85. The peak of earnings was in 1930, with $183,874,801.00 total and $2,372.36 average. The average full-time weekly wage rate was reported as $50.67 per week, while the average actual earnings were $39.73 per week, making actual earnings 78.41 per cent of full-time earnings. Compared to the normal year of 1928 the employment of members was 16 per cent below normal, with a total unemployment of 21 per cent.

CHAS. P. HOWARD
President International Typographical Union.

One thousand ninety-eight students enrolled with the bureau of education during the year. 957 students were graduated. 47,974 lessons were graded. Mail sent out from the bureau totaled 128,016 pieces.

Mail sent out from the department of the president totaled 161,216 pieces.

There are 9,523 members eligible to receive the pension, but only 3,754 are receiving it. 378 pension applications were approved during the year.

George F. Tucker, pensioner No. 216, placed on the roll Aug. 2, 1908, died on July 2, 1932, after receiving the pension for 1,348 weeks. He was 90 years old. Mr. Tucker drew $7,914 in pension from the I. T. U., and only paid $101 into the pension fund. The fund was only established a few months before he was placed on the pension roll. Pensioners pay a small amount monthly to the pension fund.

One hundred and ten thousand dollars in Tennessee cities bonds are held by the treasury of the I. T. U.

During the twenty-four years the pension fund has been in existence, $17,674,822.81 has been paid into the fund, $14,941,627.00 has been paid to pensioners, expenses incurred in the operation of the fund up to 1923 were $252,729.62 (since 1923 pension fund expenses have been charged to the general fund), leaving a balance in the fund at present of $2,480,466.19.

Tennessee locals have thirty-five pensioners on the roll.

The average age of pension applicants during the year is 65.56 years.

There were 1,137 deaths during the year on which mortuary benefits amounting to $516,543.85 were paid. The average benefit paid was $454.30 and the average continuous membership of those who died was 29.5 years.

Since Jan. 1, 1912, $10,573,585.58 has been paid into the mortuary fund; $7,311,412.05 has been paid in benefits; expenses of the fund were $242,449.66, leaving a total in the fund of $3,039,723.87.

The average age at death in 1892 was 41 years. This has steadily increased until at present it is 61.1 years. This increase is due, no doubt, to shorter hours, increased wages and improved working conditions which have been brought about by the I. T. U.

The average age at death in 1909 was 46.09 years and the average earnings per member were $897. Compare this with the present age at death and the present average earnings per member.

During the twelve months ending April 30, the total out-of-work benefits paid by local unions amounted to $2,175,183.49. The total of all benefits paid by locals was $2,608,817.82. This included sick benefits, mortuary benefits, old age pensions, donations and out-of-work benefits. Added to benefits paid by the International of $2,475,720.27, making a total of $5,084,538.09 in benefits paid by locals and the International.

Since 1891 the I. T. U. has spent $23,203,752.42 for defensive purpose, which includes payment of strike benefits, organization work, special financial assistance to local unions and other defensive work. The largest amount spent during any one year was $8,708,320.79, in 1922, during the forty-four-hour lockout, which started in 1921. The total ahount spent during the 44-hour lockout was $16,079,671.

There are more members at age 40 than any other age, the number being 2,306. The majority of the membership is between 24 and age 64.

Seven hundred and seventy-eight locals with a membership of 75,737 have a total of $8,639,330.84 in their treasuries, the largest being New York Typographical Union No. 6, with a treasury report of $873,447.85.

A TONIC Laxative

CONSTIPATION, with the annoying symptoms that usually come with it, cuts down organic force and disturbs normal health and well-being. A thorough cleansing of the digestive tract is of great assistance in the removal of sickening constipation symptoms.

When excessive accumulated waste matter disturbs and strains the muscles of the large intestines, rendering them temporarily unable to perform their wave-like evacuating movements, Thedford's Black-Draught is useful in stimulating them to activity, which, again started, should continue regularly until some future disturbance interferes. In this way, Thedford's Black-Draught is one of the TONIC laxatives, tending, as it does, to establish a regular habit of evacuation.

TIMOTHY'S

CHURCHES SEE WEALTHY ARE OVERPAID IN SHARP CONTRAST WITH UNDERPAID MASSES

Federal Council's Labor Sunday Message Declares "Concentration of Wealth Carries With It Dangerous Concentration of Power, and Leads to Conflict and Violence."

(Prepared by the Commission on the Church and Social Service of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America.)

On Labor Sunday, as on Christmas, the churches of Christ repeat the promise of peace on earth, goodwill to men. They seek to interpret for themselves and the world what this gospel of goodwill implies for our industrial civilization. On Labor Sunday, as on Easter Sunday, the churches acclaim the living Christ and declare that His spirit should guide all human relations. On Labor Sunday, as on the Day of Pentecost, the churches of Christ desire to speak with new tongues so that their message shall be understood by all men. The churches want their young men to see visions and their old men to dream dreams of a better world in which industry shall be planned to meet human needs.

The thing that really matters in any industrial system is what it actually does to human beings. For this reason no society that would call itself Christian or even civilized can tolerate such unemployment as we now see in our economic life. Unemployment terribly increases the strains which even in so-called prosperous times bring many to the breaking point. Homes are threatened and broken. There is more overcrowding as families double up in quarters which do not give adequate privacy. Resources are exhausted. Morale is undermined. Physical and moral resistance is impaired.

Those who depend upon income from savings suffer from reduced interest, rent, or dividends and, in many cases, this reduction has now gone to the vanishing point. But workers who lose their jobs are obviously more disastrously affected than the average investor since their margin of security is smaller.

Religious prophets have always denounced the gross inequality between the incomes on the one hand of those who toil in factory, mine, farm and office, and of those, on the other hand, who by inheritance, or privilege of ownership, or speculative investment derive an income not earned by actual service. The simple and searching comment of Jesus, when the rich young man whom Jesus loved at sight went away sorrowful because he had great possessions, needs to be remembered: "How hardly shall they that have riches enter the Kingdom of God." The constant suggestion of the parables of Jesus is that great wealth in the midst of poverty is a hindrance to the good life. This is still the fact. Inequality is a peril to the rich because it tempts them to a narrowing of their sympathies and a false scale of values. It is a curse to the poor because it means misery for under-paid, irregularly employed workers, crowded in unsanitary tenements, shacks or company houses, exposed to the constant fear of sickness unprovided for and of old age insecure. Our economic resources, our progress in invention and the arts, our social inheritance should now make possible a worthy standard of living for all if the organization of production and distribution were directed towards that end.

It is not denied that many persons of wealth are rendering great service to society. It is only suggested that the wealthy are overpaid in sharp contrast with underpaid masses of the people. The concentration of wealth carries with it a dangerous concentration of power. It leads to conflict and violence. To suppress the symptoms of this inherent conflict while leaving the fundamental causes of it untouched is neither sound statesmanship nor Christian goodwill.

It is becoming more and more clear that the principles of our religion and the findings of the social sciences point in the same direction. Economists now call attention to the fact that the present distribution of wealth and income which is so unbrotherly in the light of Christian ethics, is also unscientific in that it does not furnish sufficient purchasing power to the masses to balance consumption and production in our machine age. Economists further point out that control of the great economic forces which affect the welfare of all nations cannot be achieved by any one nation acting alone. World co-operation is becoming more and more a practical necessity. This also is in line with Jesus' teachings of universal brotherhood.

The method whereby a just, brotherly and scientific world social order shall be brought about is a question of major importance. The churches do not condone violence nor encourage resort to force, but look with sympathy on all peaceful and constructive efforts—by individuals, by labor, by employers, by social gencies and by political movements—to accomplish the desired end. Among the measures which in our time may advance the cause of human welfare in the direction of that ideal social order which we call the Kingdom of God, are intelligent planning and direction of industry, credit and finance for the common good; an extension of minimum wage laws, and above the minimum wage the highest possible wage as distribution becomes fairer and the productivity of industry increases; collective bargaining; co-operative ownership; and social insurance against accidents, sickness, old age and unemployment.

The Christian religion demands the dedication of power to the more abundant life of humanity. Such consecration of talent especially in the fields of industry and statecraft must become a test of the Christian life. It is the special responsibility of privileged classes to co-operate in movements toward economic justice, thus creating a spirit of fellowship instead of conflict in social progress. A similar obligation rests upon labor and its leaders.

With malice toward none and charity for all, the chuches send their greetings on Labor Sunday to all who toil with hand or brain and look forward with them toward a better day.

PRESIDENT GREEN URGES PERPETUATION OF HIGH IDEALS OF AMERICAN LABOR MOVEMENT

"Make This Labor Day the Most Impressive Demonstration of Workers' Strength, Unity and Lofty Purposes"—Calls Federation "Defender and Protector of Men and Women Who Toil."

By WILLIAM GREEN
President American Federation of Labor

WILLIAM GREEN

Each of our national holidays symbolizes an ideal, but there is only one national holiday which is emblematical of labor—Labor Day, the first Monday in September. This is the day consecrated by legislative enactment and proclamation to the men and women of daily toil upon whose productive powers rest the foundations of government.

Because I feel so keenly, so intensely, the tremendous significance of the problems with which we as a nation and we as an organized labor movement are confronted, I view the approach of Labor Day 1932 with deep concern lest labor, under the stress and strain of the trying years since 1929, in the struggle for bread for the hungry and work for the workless, may lose some of the vision of the high purpose, mission and lofty ideals with which it was conceived and born.

Twenty years ago the Executive Council of the American Federation of Labor submitted pertinent observations regarding Labor Day observance. These observations were accepted and are as apropos now as when originally made. I quote therefrom:

"Labor Day belongs to the working people of America. It is for them to determine its value and significance. Those outside the labor movement test its strength and virility by the way in which Labor Day is observed. Their test is justified by the fact that the power of the labor movement consists in its appeal to the hearts, minds and wills of the workers. Rouse the working people to a sense of their rights and interests, and the labor movement becomes an irresistible power for their realization.

"In the labor movement as in every human endeavor we become familiar with the heart forces and ideals that brought the movement into existence, and sometimes forget that these spiritual forces must be revived and nourished or they wither and die. Some labor organizations have fallen into this error. They have abandoned regular Labor Day demonstrations, parades, meetings, addresses in the belief that such expenditures of time, effort and money is wasteful. This is a most serious mistake.

"Such labor demonstrations are not wasteful and they do pay even if only through publicity for the cause of labor. Men and women marching shoulder to shoulder typify impressively the purposefulness and the unity of the labor movement. They are a physical demonstration of devotion to principle—a proof that none can fail to understand. Observance of the day is a means of educating public thought and agents for molding public opinion in regard to the principles and purposes of the labor movement."

I most earnestly and solemnly call upon state federations of labor, city central bodies, local unions and their individual members, friends and sympathizers to make observance of the coming Labor Day demonstrate to the whole nation the strength and importance of the labor movement, and to make the spirit of the day of such a nature that every worker shall appreciate more keenly the value of his union and shall be ready to perform his duties with greater enthusiasm and more perfect understanding.

The spirit of fellowship and the brotherhood of man are the life of the labor movement. If this life be not nourished, the whole will become a dead thing.

Labor Day typifies a movement for life and humanity.

Do not pervert it—do not permit it to be perverted or diverted from its high ideals, its lofty purpose. Make this Labor Day 1932 the most impressive demonstration of labor's unity, strength, vision, high ideals; of its renewed determination to continue to be in the future, as it has so forcefully been in the past, the defender and protector of the men and women who toil.

"I SEE A GREAT FUTURE FOR AMERICAN LABOR," SAYS WOLL

New Brunswick, N. J.—The principal speaker at the recent dinner of the Institute of Labor at Rutgers university was Matthew Woll, vice president of the American Federation of Labor. He was listened to with great attention and warmly applauded. He spoke especially of the increasing responsibilities confronting American labor and its educational affiliations, saying in part:

"These are momentous days in our national and international life. Labor is called upon to perform a more important service than ever before. Labor is being recognized more than ever as one of the forces in the community that is concerned with the up building of our American commonwealth. The radio programs, for example, which are being sponsored by our workers' education bureau, are carrying our message to literally millions of people in this land, but labor must be prepared for these increasing responsibilities; it must be prepared through knowledge, through understanding, to cope with these new social and economic responsibilities. I see a great future for American labor. I see a great future for the American universities as they join hands in building the foundation for an educated citizenship. I would have you know that my wish for this institute and for similar institutes is most cordial because I believe that they will perform a service of great value in the building of a better American labor movement and a better American community."

N. Y. Typos Propose 5-Day Job Shop Week

New York City. — Typographical union No. 6 has just agreed upon its counter-proposal to the employers for a book and job schedule. Book and job shops employ 7,000 union members.

The employers' on August 1 proposed $45 a week for each shift.

The union has counter-proposed a schedule of $60 for days, $63 for night shifts and $66 for third or lobster shift work. It has proposed that a five-day week supplant the present 5½-day week. The proposed wage is the same as the current wage, but the proposed week is a half day shorter.

SECOND SERIES OF ADDRESSES ON LABOR TO BEGIN SEPT. 4

Frank Morrison, Secretary of the American Federation, Will Lead the Radio Discussions of Current Labor Problems.

The second series of radio addresses on "American Labor and the Nation" will begin on Labor Sunday over the nation-wide network of the Columbia broadcasting system and will continue for a period of ten weeks at the hour between 1 and 1:30 Sunday noon. The second series will take up the question of "Current Labor Problems" as a sequel to the first series which were historical in nature. The topics which have been decided upon by the radio committee include such important labor questions as the Open versus the Closed Shop, Technological Unemployment, Collective Bargaining, Wages and Hours, Labor Legislation, Immigration, Labor's Relation to Judicial Reform, Labor and International Relations, Labor and the News. A group of foremost leaders of the trade union movement have been invited to participate in the series which will be opened by Frank Morrison, secretary of the American Federation of Labor, on Labor Sunday, Sept. 4, from Washington, D. C.

The letters which have been received thus far from all over this country and Canada have been most enthusiastic in their praise of this labor series. President Green in a recent letter spoke enthusiastically of the first series in the following words: "The radio program was well balanced and the different phases of labor's activities, its policies and principles were submitted in a most convincing and illuminating manner. From the standpoint of adult education which, after all, is very largely the aim and purpose of the Workers' Education Bureau of America, a service of immeasurable value was rendered to the organized labor movement and the public as well."

Provision has already been made to bring out the first series of ten lectures in printed form as a labor textbook through the co-operation of the University of Chicago Press. Phonographic records have been made of these broadcasts and will form an important radio library. Copies of these records can be obtained at cost by writing directly to the Workers' Education bureau or to the American Federation of Labor.

Individual lectures can be procured by writing directly to the University of Chicago Press, Chicago, Ill.

Hundred Millian Expenditure Is Held Suspended

Huge War Department Program Also Retarded, While States and Cities Have Enormous Plans Awaiting Financing.

Washington, Aug. 25.—Construction work to the amount of one hundred million dollars, all outside the District of Columbia, authorized by congress on July 25, can be put under way by authorization of Secretary of the Treasury Ogden L. Mills and Postmaster-General Brown.

And those gentlemen do not act!

Principal responsibility is placed by labor representatives on Secretary Mills, since his decision is the one controlling the money, while Brown's participation in the authorization will be concerned mainly with determination of cities in which the work is to be done and with the political consequences. All are to be public buildings.

Protest Is Expected.

It is understood that the American Federation of Labor will protest to Mills against his inaction.

The work to be done in this category is authorized in the public buildings section of the relief act. It was the section to which President Hoover objected and which was kept in the bill in compromise with the democratic leaders.

Under the provisions of the section the two secretaries have power to proceed with selection of cites and actual construction. It is estimated that with due diligence construction work could start within three or four months after selection of sites. Selection of sites would determine the cities in which work is to be done and would give definite assurance to those cities of a given amount of work upon which the cities could count.

It is conceded that $100,000,000 worth of construction work is a lot of work. If decision is had immediately on the cities in which the work is to be done those cities will have definite assurances of earned sustenance for large numbers of workers and can adjust their winter relief plans accordingly. Moreover, the burden of relief work will be lightened on many international unions whose unemployed members must be sustained.

Secretary Mills has given no explanation of his reasons for delay.

Cities' Plans Retarded.

Added to this enormous total of work that is authorized but held back by administrative procrastination, there is another tremendous volume of work waiting in cities and states, held back only by shortage of money. In most cases this shortage could be relieved by the Reconstruction Finance corporation, labor men point out.

Work held back in states and municipalities runs to the huge total of nearly three billion dollars, according to an estimate by the American Society of Civil Engineers, based on reports to the public works section, president's organization on unemployment relief. Of this $1,963,000,000 is for work authorized last year, but not completed for lack of money, while $1,000,000,000 is for new projects of this year similarly retarded.

The list of these works shows work planned in nearly every state.

MAINE FEDERATION OF LABOR ESTABLISHES MONTHLY PAPER

Augusta, Me.—The Maine State Federation of Labor has established an official monthly paper, "The Labor News."

"Today the labor press constitutes one of the distinguishing characteristics of the modern labor movement," declares Clarence R. Burgess, secretary-treasurer and legislative agent of the state federation, in announcing the action of the federation in starting the paper.

"One of the prime purposes of our trade union movement," he added, "is to guide the membership so that the largest possible number at the same time can move forward to accomplish a common and definite purpose. This unity of purpose is impossible unless the membership possesses a practical knowledge of trade union principles and policies."

To aid in achieving this unity, Mr. Burgess said, would be the major function of "The Labor News."

Dorothea is very devoted to him, isn't she?

She's head over heels in love with him. She quit drinking, she quit smoking, and she's quit swearing all for his sake.

TYPOS GATHER AT LONG BEACH SEPTEMBER 12

Annual Convention Set for California City.

BIG ENTERTAINMENT PROGRAM PROMISED

Hosts Promise to Outdo All Previous Gatherings in Providing Fun.

By ED CRUMP

Once again the time draws near for several hundred members of the International Typographical union, representative of 778 local unions, to assemble in convention and pass upon the past performances of their international officers and hew the trail for the forthcoming year.

This year the seventy-seventh session of the I. T. U. will be held in Long Beach, Cal., with Long Beach Typographical Union No. 174 the host.

Laws have a habit of becoming obsolete as conditions change. New laws must be drafted as new conditions arise. Old laws which have been considered practical must be changed or new ones substituted. So the representatives of 778 typographical unions throughout the United States and Canada meet once a year, mix business with a grand and glorious time, and go home again, proud and happy to have been their union's representative at one of the greatest labor conventions ever held.

Long Beach bids fair to outdo the hosts of all previous conventions in the matter of entertainment. Delegates will begin arriving a week or two ahead of time.

The big attraction will be a visit to Catalina island on Sunday, Sept. 11, where there will be a barbecue dinner and a trip over the marine gardens in glass bottom boats. Aquaplaning, canoeing, yachting, speedboat riding, worthwhile fishing, dancing, hiking, golfing and horseback riding will be among the many pleasant diversifications the printers will find on the Magic Isle.

No doubt many of the delegates will take time to visit the world-famous Mexican resort, Agua Caliente, if only for a chance to wet their whistle with one foot on a brass rail.

Long Beach is the home port of the Pacific fleet. Riding majestically at anchor a few miles off shore the sleek grey dreadnaughts are a source of never ending interest. Some of these giant battleships are open to the public daily.

There will be a visit to Bird park, where thousands of richly-plumed birds collected from all parts of the world may be seen.

A ten-million-dollar amusement zone furnishes "more than a mile" of fun and education.

Swimming in the bay is safe at all times.

James Rolph, Jr., governor of California, will welcome the convention when the first session opens on Monday, Sept. 12. After the various opening addresses the session will adjourn and Monday afternoon there will be a trip through Hollywood, and it is planned to give the printers a visit to one of the Hollywood movie studios if permission can be secured.

Delegates who go to the convention city by auto will have a pleasant trip, as the transcontinental highways are 85 per cent paved or hard surfaced, with the balance good gravel. From Canada the highways are 87 per cent hard surfaced.

The auditorium in which the convention will be held is in an eight-acre marine park, surrounded by a 82-acre still-water lagoon, enclosed by a three-quarter mile long promenade which is open to motorists and pedestrians.

There is always lots of expense entailed in being host to a convention of the International Typographical union, and the hosts always resort to various ways of raising the necessary finances. One popular way is the publication of a souvenir book, which contains interesting matter about the convention city and the I. T. U. Long Beach's souvenir book will contain sixteen pages of half-tone illustrations printed in three colors and black.

At a pre-convention dance given by No. 174 on June 24 in the municipal auditorium more than 350 guests were entertained.

Breakers hotel has been designated as the official convention headquarters hotel. In addition to the Breakers there are twenty-eight other hotels and six auto courts which will be available to delegates and visitors, all at reduced rates.

They say the elephant never forgets. The chances are it'll never forget this administration.

and that they will provide laughs and thrills is a foregone conclusion. E. L. Blair, in charge of this part of the day's festivities, announces that there will be a really worthwhile prize for the winner of each contest, the following business firms having contributed liberally to the features:

Allotments of the prizes have not yet been decided upon, but regardless of just how they are arranged, every winner will receive something well worth contesting for, and in most cases, it is said, there will be a pleasant surprise awaiting the victor. Prizes will not be displayed at the park, but orders on the various merchants named above will be given the lucky ones by Mr. Blair.

The contests, as tentatively announced, follow:

Drawing contest for ladies and girls.

Word contest for ladies and girls.

Rolling pin throwing for married ladies and girls.

100-yard dash for men.

100-yard dash for boys under 18 years.

Watermelon eating contest for boys under 10 years.

Watermelon eating contest for girls under 10 years.

Watermelon eating contest for boys over 11 years.

Prize for largest family on grounds at 12 o'clock.

WATER CARNIVAL, BEAUTY CONTEST.

Another big feature for the afternoon will be the water carnival which will begin at 6 p.m., immediately preceding the bathing beauty contest. The program for this event will be:

Diving exhibition from ten-foot board, T. N. Tucker, who was in the finals at the recent Olympic games, and LeRoy Starnes, tri-state diving champion. From three-foot board, Percy Walters, midget diving champion of the south, and Charles Pauf, runner-up in the tri-state diving championship contest.

Water comedy act by Lewis Tucker and Walter Lauter.

Swimming exhibition by Walter Lauter, holder of the half-mile free-style southern record, and Lewis Tucker, holder of various breast-stroke records.

The bathing beauty contest will follow these sports. Already some twenty-five local girls are entered in the competition for the honor of the title, "Miss Chattanooga," and it is expected several more will be received before the closing date, Saturday. Judges will be Arch McDonald, world's champion radio announcer; Joe Bonowitz, centerfielder for the Lookouts and physical director of the Y. M. H. A.; Tommy Kane, physical instructor; C. H. Link, photographer; Houser Massey, of the Chattanooga News, and N. Key Hart, of the Chattanooga Times.

"Miss Chattanooga" will be awarded a handsome trophy in the form of a cup from Edwards & LeBron's, and for the nine "next best" as the judges see it the following prizes will be given:

A boudoir chair, contributed by Heverty's; lady's Knox hat, Loveman's; lady's dress, Miller Bros.; gold ring and pendant, LeGrand Jewelry Co.; vanity bag, the Vogue; wall mirror, Rhodes-Jones Furniture Co.; vanity, Fischer's; electric clock, Cofer Electric Co., and a permanent wave by Hill's Beauty shop.

The above prizes, which have been on display in the lobby of the Tivoli theater all this week, will be presented to the winners next Wednesday night at 9 on the Tivoli stage, Mayor Bass making the presentation speech.

NIGHT PROGRAM LOOKS INVITING.

The night program includes the old fiddlers' contest, a "plantation show" to be presented by a company of fourteen colored performers, and which will include an old-time southern cake-walk; a juvenile contortionist; the Buckeye Hoedowners, string-band stars of WDOD and other radio studio fame, and a display of fireworks. A handsome Victrola, donated by the Sterchi Stores, will be given away at the night performance.

Dancing will be enjoyed under auspices of members of Local 80, American Federation of Musicians, and the usual park concessions will be augmented by many carnival attractions.

The committee has worked hard to provide an interesting program and every indication points to the gratification of that desire.

No matter how many clothes your wife has she always buys a lot more the minute you offer to take her on a trip.

Non-union competition has stirred the membership of Local ...o. 80, Musicians, to definite action, and at the meeting of that organization this week definite plans for a campaign of publicity were made, and a committee, headed by John T. Mahoney, was named to carry on the campaign, according to officers of the local.

"More than 100 organized Chattanooga musicians have suffered since the advent of mechanical music in our theaters," Mr. Mahoney told The Labor World, "and the union's effort to care for them has been hampered by 'unfair' competition of unorganized groups who have formed orchestras and ignored the rules of the trade as fixed by union members over a period of years. Notable among those who are operating as non-union outfits are Frank Worthy's, Borden Jones' and Chile Childs' orchestras.

"A definite plan of procedure has been laid out by President ...a E. Summers, and the committee is rapidly effecting plans which will feature a campaign of wide publicity to acquaint Chattanooga trades unionists and their friends among all groups of our citizenship with the attitude of these 'unfair' organizations, and to ask their aid in combatting this menace to fair conditions which union members have given of their time and money to build up. The general public is being informed, also, as to the situation, by letter and other means.

"Our delegates to Chattanooga Trades and Labor council, at the regular meeting Monday night, will lay our plans before that body, and, of course, we will expect and receive the co-operation of all affiliated locals."

O'CONNOR SAYS CONDITIONS ARE NOT JUSTIFIED

Government Owes Opportunity to Earn Living.

CO-OPERATION AND DEMOCRACY NEEDED

Trades Unionist Declares Labor Movement Chief Force for Good.

Labor's Guest

JOHN T. O'CONNOR

Above snapshot of Mayor John T. O'Connor, of Knoxville, was taken Monday at the Labor Day celebration, as the veteran trades unionist was expounding the faith of the cause closest to his heart. Mayor O'Connor was a special guest of Chattanooga workers. He is known throughout the state as an eloquent speaker.

"This nation does not owe a living to anyone, but it does owe an opportunity to make this living, and if it does not give this opportunity then it will fail," said John T. O'Connor, mayor of Knoxville and former president of the Tennessee Federation of Labor, in addressing a great crowd at the Labor Day celebration at Warner park Monday.

The president, Mr. O'Connor said, should call representatives of industry, labor and finance in conference and work out a solution of our great problems.

The American labor movement, the speaker declared, has done more for the uplift of humanity than any other agency, with the exception of the church. "When you review the history of the labor movement and its accomplishments," he said, "you can say to the world, 'Here we stand, a great institution.'

"This is a great day in America," Mr. O'Connor said. "The people in every community from the large metropolis to the remotest hamlet will meet today to pay tribute to America's industrial army and it is due to the American trade union movement that the people respond to the proclamations of the president, of the states and municipalities, because here is an institution which has made a great contribution to the growth and development of this republic of ours.

"With the exception of the church there is no agency that has done as much for the uplift of God's common family as the trade unions. Men and women have made sacrifices that American industry would be harmonized.

"On this occasion we should take stock of ourselves and ask what contribution we have made in the past year to this institution that has stood between us and inadequate pay and long working hours. The failure of members of unions to discharge their

HAPPY CROWDS THRONG CITY PLEASURE RESORT DESPITE RAIN

Committee of Sixty Amply Fulfills Promise of "Chattanooga's Greatest Labor Day Celebration"---Barbecue, Races, Athletic Events, Bathing Beauties, Water Sports, Old Fiddlers, Plantation Show and Fireworks Presented for Entertainment of Visitors---Program Carried Out Without a "Hitch," and Merrymakers Spend Day in Recreation.

Declared by park attaches to be "the greatest crowd which ever passed into Warner park in one day," and estimated at from 15,000 to 20,000 persons, milling throngs of citizens, men, women and children, spent Labor Day as guests of Chattanooga Trades and Labor council, and enjoyed a splendid program which began with harness races at 10 a.m., and concluded some time after "Good-Night" had been flashed in fire to climax an unusually good bill in front of the grandstand.

It was a happy, good-natured crowd, and heavy rains at two periods during the day failed to dampen the spirits of the merry-makers. A sharp shower at noon was the cause of some confusion in serving the thousands with barbecue prepared by Zeke Witt and a corps of some half-hundred assistants, and was probably responsible for many failing to receive any of the delicacy which had been prepared for some six or eight thousand.

Committee of sixty which had been charged with responsibility for success of the event was much in evidence all day, and many last-minute volunteers were used in various capacities in the operation of the program. The regular park concessions, augmented by a number of entertainment booths of various nature, were in operation all day.

The athletic contests, under direction of E. L. Blair, featured the early afternoon program, but due to the heavy rains it was necessary to transfer the scene of activities from the race track to a smaller space on the lawns, this necessitating abandonment of several of the events. Winners of these events, with the prizes awarded, follow:

Rolling pin throwing contest for married women, won by Mrs. N. S. Sivley, with an oil painting as the prize.

Rolling pin throwing contest for single girls, won by Sarah Allen Burgess, with a sofa pillow as the prize.

One hundred-yard foot race for men, won by Mr. Schmid, with a carton of cigarettes as the prize.

One hundred-yard race for boys, Pankey, winner, pocket knife as prize.

One hundred-yard race for boys under 12 years old, Clyde Martin winner, baseball as prize.

One hundred-yard race for girls, Evelyn Kersey winner, artist's set as prize.

Mrs. Louise Brinkley was awarded an electric curler and Miss Johnnie Bell Mason was given a piece of furniture.

In the list of merchants contributing prizes published in last week's issue the name of the Central Electric company was inadvertently omitted. This concern donated an electric fan.

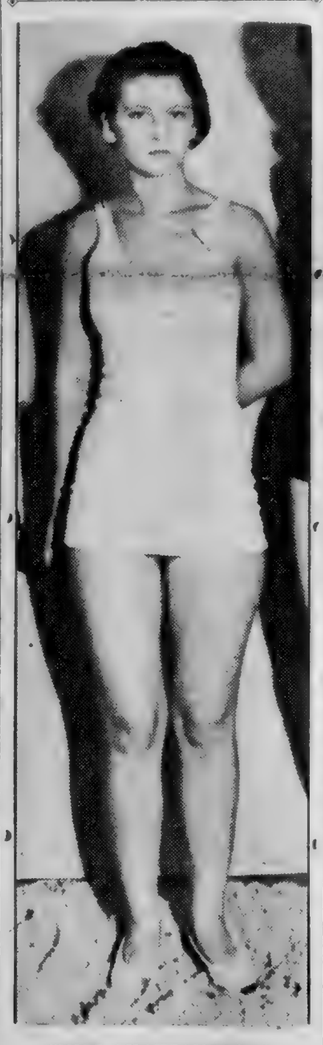
The bathing beauty contest, following a splendid exhibition of diving and swimming by local experts, was won by Miss Lula Mae Gregory, 2317 Rossville boulevard; Miss Jeanette Scallis, 2805 Holtzclaw avenue, was declared the winner of second prize, and Miss Betty Wilson third. Others who received prizes, presented at the Tivoli Wednesday night by Mayor Bass, follow:

Miss Patricia Mae Suddeth, 207 East Fourth street, fourth; Miss Alice Slayton, 208 Harding road, Red Bank, fifth; Miss Hattie Mathis, Woodland Heights, North Chattanooga, sixth; Miss Virginia Schofield, 5018 Sunnyside, seventh; Miss Mary Wray, 1511 Orchard Knob avenue, eighth, and Misses Maggie Livingston, Lupton City; Sue Puckett, 623 West Sixth street; Daisy Shell, East Chattanooga, and Neriah Duncan, East Chattanooga, tied for ninth and tenth places.

The night show, in front of the grandstand, lived up to the promise of the committee in delighting a slim crowd of paid customers. The old fiddlers' contest, juvenile contortionist and plantation show each brought frequent applause, the colored performers, under direction of Irvin Allen, offering a splendid mixture of singing, dancing and "cake-walking." String bands in the competition for cash prizes also delighted the audience.

Although the depression was very much in evidence throughout the day, and the affair was not a success financially, Chattanooga Trades and Labor council certainly made good its goal of staging "Chattanooga's greatest Labor Day celebration," and the vast crowds which thronged the city park evidenced their appreciation by orderly conduct to a degree which was a matter for favorable comment by many. Police officers who patrolled the grounds all day had nothing to do in their line of duty, and joined with the spirit of the merry-makers.

Awarded Trophy



"MISS CHATTANOOGA"

Above is Miss Lula Mae Gregory, who was named "Miss Chattanooga" and presented by Mayor Bass with a beautiful trophy Wednesday night. Miss Gregory was declared first-prize winner by a committee of prominent citizens who officiated at the bathing beauty contest at Warner park Labor Day.

ASKS ACCOUNTING BY TICKET HOLDERS

T. R. Cuthbert, treasurer of the Labor Day celebration, Thursday requested that all those holding tickets and cash make an immediate accounting, so a complete report may be made to Monday night's regular meeting of Central Body. Quite a few who hold tickets have not yet made their returns, and Mr. Cuthbert is anxious to close up the affairs as quickly as possible.

BARBERS' MEMBERSHIP DRIVE GAINS 1,354 IN ONE MONTH

Indianapolis, Ind.—The Journeymen Barbers' International Union of America added 1,354 to its membership during the last month, J. C. Shanessy, president of the union, declared.

"Our membership campaign is steadily pushing forward, although there is nothing spectacular about it and no loud sounding of trumpets as we move toward our great ideal of complete organization," Mr. Shanessy said.

"A never-ending campaign is a part of our policy, instead of having spurts and forward surges and then static for a time. While we may be quiescent in some parts of our jurisdiction we are active in another. We believe this 'keeping everlastingly at it' will eventually prove its worth by results.

"Our union is wholeheartedly in accord with this plan and quietly working for better things and a larger and more militant membership. We know that our campaign has acted as an inspiration to other trade unions and they have entered the lists."

LUMBER STOCKS EXCESSIVE.

Continued low production of lumber and the fact that many mills which are not running are accepting orders, accounts largely for the seemingly favorable excess of lumber orders over production during the week ended Aug. 13. The figures show orders 25 per cent above production, as given in telegraphic reports to the National Lumber Manufacturers association from regional manufacturers' associations covering the operations of 638 leading softwood and hardwood mills. These mills produced 109,299,000 feet and entered orders amounting to 136,144,000 feet. Shipments were 125,634,000 feet, or 15 per cent above production.

UNEMPLOYMENT IN ENGLAND.

British ministry of labor returns show that unemployment increased during July by 64,439, bringing the total of workless people on the registers up to 2,811,782—the highest figure yet recorded with the exception of one week in September, 1931. There are nearly 100,000—the exact figure is 98,432—more unemployed than there were a year ago. Actually, the total amount of unemployment is substantially greater than these figures show, as the ministry's own estimate is that there are about 154,000 unemployed persons who are no longer on the registers owing to legislative and administrative changes.

GREED CALLED POTENT CAUSE OF DEPRESSION

Judge Lusk Predicts Return of Prosperity.

COMMENDS LABOR FOR GAINS MADE

Declares Shorter Hours Are Inevitable and Urges Intelligent Voting.

Blames Greed

HON. CHAS. W. LUSK

Judge Lusk, speaking to a great holiday throng at Warner park Labor Day, blamed principally greed and the desire to get something for nothing as the cause for our economic ills. He declared the major problem now is distribution, and said shorter hours for labor are inevitable before prosperity returns.

Greed, and the desire to get something for nothing, was a most potent cause of the present depression, said the Hon. Chas. W. Lusk, judge of the criminal court, in a Labor address at Warner park Monday. "But, whatever the mistakes of the past, whatever the misery of the present, prosperity is coming back to this country," he said, and "it is to be our task to make that prosperity permanent; to see that this disaster shall not again come upon us." The Florida boom, the stock market crash, unwise business practices by rich and poor alike, installment buying, international affairs and a wild orgy of spending were listed as among the many causes for present world-wide misery and unemployment.

"Labor heretofore has been the group of protest," Judge Lusk said, "it fought against long hours, low wages, bad working conditions, poor housing, inadequate living standards, It fought the mistaken policy of some employers who got the most possible from labor, with the least possible paid in return.

"Many phases of labor's contest have been won. They are no longer in dispute. Labor faces the future possessed of such power and responsibility as it has had in no other nation at any time in the past.

"Wise business men now know that their own prosperity depends upon the prosperity of their employes. They know their own well-being depends upon workers who are well-fed, well-clothed, well-housed, well-educated, and content in the certainty that they are receiving their fair share of the rewards of industry. They know that low wages make a poor market for goods. They know that machines buy no goods at all, and that where machines make fewer hours of labor necessary, there must still be fair wages if goods are to be sold at all.

"The machine is here to stay. That fact must have part in all our economic thinking. But the fundamental fact must be seen and applied, that

LABOR VISIONS HOPE IN CLOUDS OF DEPRESSION

Celebrations Take On New Spirit of Optimism.

GENERAL FERVOR FOR ORGANIZING EFFORT

Darkest Labor Day in History Finds Workers Still Determined.

Washington, Sept. 7.—With Labor Day once more written into history, "the tumult and the shouting" all over, trade union officials are taking stock of the coming fall.

Labor Day celebrations the country over took on a new spirit, reports here show. There was a sharp and often bitter appraisal of industrial conditions, sprinkled with generous hopes for immediate improvement.

Trade union leaders through the United States and Canada delivered addresses, many having radio hook-ups.

Leading the hosts of labor, President William Green, of the A. F. of L., expressed the conviction that unless there is immediate large-scale recovery in employment, the winter, with double last year's unemployed, will be one of unexampled suffering on every hand.

Factors for Improvement.

Several factors are looked to for new employment. One is the Reconstruction Finance corporation, with its ability to at once finance self-liquidating projects that may furnish on-the-job work for 2,000,000 and for more than that number in manufacturing and supply industries. Another is the president's conference committee, led by Walter C. Teagle, for the shorter work-week. Numbers of private organizations are at work, also, including the New York Advertising club, with its labor-management proposal, indorsed by labor.

For the most part Labor Day celebrations took on the grimness of determination that relief must come. And there were plenty of "or else" predictions. "Workers are becoming realists," said Secretary Frank Morrison. "They no longer accept the doctrine that man is not responsible for these conditions."

Hope Through Clouds.

There was a general fervor for organizing effort in almost all Labor Day addresses.

It was the darkest Labor Day in decades, perhaps the darkest of all, with unemployment at its peak and with remedial measures not yet registering their effect in definite terms of jobs.

But a fair summary would be that, despite the dark hour of the present day, the movement looked hopefully forward from its Labor Day vantage point, determined that every possible contribution of vision, wisdom and determination must be made by labor toward sound recovery. This, it was said repeatedly, must be not mere palliative; it must be recovery such as will insure against a repetition of this depression.

MILWAUKEE TERRAZZO UNION BREAKS WAGE-CUT LOCKOUT

Milwaukee.—The two weeks' lockout against members of Terrazzo Workers' Union No. 20 and Terrazzo Helpers' Union No. 510, instituted by contractors because the unions refused to accept a second wage cut, was ended when the contractors agreed to submit the question to arbitration as provided in the agreements between the unions and the contractors. About 200 union members are affected.

The union members contended that the lockout was precipitated when the unions, after accepting a cut of from $1.37½ to $1.25 for mechanics and from 85 cents to 75 cents per hour for helpers in June, refused to accept another cut to $1 for mechanics and 65 cents per hour for helpers after they had signed a one-year agreement.

Labor Victories Start Prosperity Return in N. C.

Workers Win All Along the Line and With Increasing Employment and Wages State Sees Start of Long-Waited Recovery.

(By Staff Correspondent.)

Raleigh, N. C.—North Carolina today looks out upon a vanishing depression.

Not that prosperity has come with its benedictions. Complete vanishment so soon cannot be, nor would it be within the bounds of reason to expect it. Hard and patient effort can only effect the return of "better days." Tar Heelians must continue to face facts, unhappy, often ugly facts, and stupendous problems with high courage and an abiding faith.

But there are many signs that the silver lining is beginning to be seen in a state that has suffered severely from many bank closings, the liquidations of important businesses, below cost of production prices for its two major money crops, unemployment, and most of the ailments resulting from iniquities and faults of the present social and economic order.

Victory in Strange Strike.

Victory for men and women who work, overwhelming victory, in one of the strangest strikes against "cheap" wages ever staged in America has been a powerful factor in turning the tide of business. Most of the thousands and thousands of workers in the multitude of industrial plants in Piedmont North Carolina who staged a spontaneous rebellion when wage cuts were announced last month have returned to their jobs. And they have gone back in almost every case only after the proposed cuts have been rescinded. In some cases, the strikers have even wrested pay increases from their bosses. In many instances, notably that of the hosiery mill workers at High Point, the workers have emerged from their pay cut rebellions with agreements that definitely assure to them freedom from getting fired for participating in the strike and that set forth in black on white certain fundamental rights of working people that have often in the past been denied to them.

Relief Is Pledged.

The two cotton mills at Salisbury, employing together something like 500 men and women, have resumed activities with sharp cuts in effect. But the workers have been given the promise of their bosses, as gentlemen, that the cuts will be removed just as promptly as business conditions will permit.

The 300 employes of the Mount Airy Mantel and Table company went back to work when mill officials agreed to remove the wage cut, announcement of which provoked the walk-out. The strikers claimed that they had been cut about 50 per cent in the past eighteen months and that they were not going back until given "a living wage." Officials of two other furniture plants in the "Granite City" stated that inadequate orders forced them to close shortly after the workers at the Mantel and Table company staged their strike. Both have resumed activities. A number of other plants that have been idle for varying lengths of time resumed operations this week.

Going on Full Time.

Industry the state over is going on full time, and in some quarters night work is putting in its appearance. The Blue Bell Overall company, which has its main plant here and auxiliary mills in Middlesboro, Ky., has resumed operations in both places on a five and a half day week schedule. Readjustment of piece work wages in the plants here has given a number of workers pay increases. It is understood that officials of the Blue Bell concern have been frantically fearing a walkout of workers ever since the outburst at High Point.

People are going back to work all over North Carolina. Business in general is beginning to look up and laugh and live.

From eastern counties come reports that farm prices will be higher this year. All signs point to much better prices for tobacco when the markets open in the next few days.

The depression is vanishing in North Carolina. A slow process, perhaps, but a sure one if present signs mean anything.

The UNION LABEL and SHOP CARD are the guide posts that tell us how we can advance the cause of labor.

Rounding the Corner

If it took a national political campaign to bring that "corner" into closer proximity, thanks for the campaign, gentlemen; thanks for the campaign.

But the political campaign had precious little to do with it.

General Public, that doughty old warrior, has always overestimated the importance of political developments in relation to industry.

Politics didn't do much to bring on the depression, nor will politics, as such, get us out, though both political parties claim to the contrary.

They have to claim something. And if they miss a bet now and then and claim something that later on develops a backfire, well, that's in the game.

If political agencies are serving any purpose in getting us around that "corner," as it has been poetically called, that service consists in the use of leadership, moral suasion and a certain stimulation.

Basically, industry and the people themselves are the active factors working for revival.

* * *

A leadership is growing up among the people and out of their needs that holds higher hope than anything political thus far.

Better, for example, than the plan evolved at Washington, is the plan set forth by the New York Advertising club as the joint product of that organization and the American Federation of Labor.

Washington overshadowed the New York meeting in the news, but in the long run there may be great things as the outgrowth of that New York meeting, in which all of the big advertising associations of America declared their approval of the project. The significance of this is in the fact that in these associations most of the manufacturing industries of the nation are to be found.

A program of joint endeavor, between employer and labor, was there laid down. Washington went only half that distance.

* * *

There is reason to believe that the Washington program looks toward the inclusion of labor in the creation of something like a national economic council. Well, if so, so much to the good.

But the New York program starts on a solid foundation of just that kind of co-operation, with democratic procedure assured at the outset.

In both developments there is the sure sign that the public is awakening to the need for something better than the hit-or-miss operations of industrial autocrats.

The long history of recurring depressions may at last be modified by the injection of intelligence in a program for control of operations.

* * *

Likewise encouraging are the statements of both presidential candidates in favor of a shorter workweek. President Hoover and Governor Roosevelt were no more than a day apart in their most recent public statements.

The lonk workweek is doomed, though it may linger in the dying.

In certain backward industries the long workweek may be with us for altogether too long a time. But be that as it may, that corner, too, has been turned and we face with assurance a new standard of workweek of not more than 30 hours. Few wars have so changed the lives of men and women as does the elimination of ten hours a week from their work periods.

These things are coming because at last they have to come. Labor has stood out in front, waving the signals for a long time. It has been proclaiming the need. The warning can be ignored no longer.

Perhaps the policies now in the making will mark this as the last mastodonic depression. That's only a perhaps. Perhaps as the upturn continues people will forget. Which "perhaps" will win?

Let's Go Fundamental

Much is to be hoped for as a result of the Washington conference held last week in response to President Hoover's invitation to committees from the twelve federal reserve districts. The committees command respect and they evidence much sincerity—and worry. There is hope, in particular, that Mr. Walter Teagle's committee to induce new employment by a shortening of the workweek will get results. Mr. Teagle's own Standard Oil has tried and likes the five-day week.

The nation will expect these committees to get at their jobs with determination and to produce definite results.

Meanwhile something is to be said about this method of procedure. Labor does not seem to fit into the picture, save in the role of something to be arranged by these master minds. Advance indications that labor would have a deliberative role to play have not materialized thus far, though the predictions continue. There is nothing to prevent the six committees from calling in labor representatives. But, the whole method is one of starting at the top and putting all responsibility in the hands of those who have all along had it in their hands. It is essentially a deification of autocracy in industry.

There probably will be results, helpful in this depression, and that is, of course, the immediate aim. But not a single thing will have been accomplished toward creating an industrial structure that can prevent another depression. There is no recognition of labor's right to a voice. There is no democratic conception of industry.

* * *

This is not a criticism of a political leader or party, for neither leader or party proposes any approach to the processes of democracy as a means of curing depressions. It is a criticism of the politico-employer mind pretty much as a whole. Industrially we are still in the pill-making stage. We have not learned right living as a preventive.

What Would Then Happen?

Dispatches indicate Japan isn't going to worry about the U. S. state department's policy on land titles secured through force and that Japan will seek to circumvent the League of Nations' findings. Meanwhile Japanese armament plants run 24 hours a day. American cotton growers seek new outlets and are hard pressed to make a living from their toil. What would Japan say and what would American cotton growers and pottery workers say if America were to put an embargo on Japanese silk and chinaware? Japan probably would be forced into most serious straits by such action.

What about it?

Shorter Workweek Makes Good

From three big concerns comes evidence that the short workweek is practical from the employers' point of view. There never has been any question about it from the workers' point of view, or from the point of view of the general public.

Walter C. Teagle has just explained at length the advantages found by Standard Oil of New Jersey, which has a five-day week.

Secretary Thomas J. Donnelly, of the Ohio State Federation of Labor, has just made public a letter from W. Tate, secretary of the Akron central body, about the six-hour day in the India Rubber company plant there, in which Tate confirms statements of company officers and says profits are greater than ever. Men work 25 per cent less time, earn 7 per cent less in wages. Labor turnover in 1928 was 8 per cent. Now it is 17-100ths of 1 per cent.

Paul V. Litchfield, president of Goodyear Tire and Rubber, says his plant is on a 24-hour-week basis, which can be varied up to 30 hours on short notice. The old week was one of 44 hours. Litchfield likes the new deal, holding "a feeling of security" goes with such efforts.

Clearly the short workweek makes good wherever it has a chance. The long workweek is condemned by the very conditions of today. Eleven millions of unemployed stand as its accusers.

REPORT RECONSTRUCTION FINANCE FAVORING NEW GASOLINE LEVIES

Corporation Payroll Totals $1,500,000, With No Civil Service Restrictions and No Economy Wave—Payroll Carries 118 at Over $4,800, With Ten Paid $12,000 or More Annually.

By B. C. CLARKE

New York, Sept. 1.—Further increases in gasoline taxes by the states to provide funds for unemployment relief are under consideration by the Reconstruction Finance corporation, according to well authenticated reports in Washington. Officials of the corporation decline to comment upon the report.

The proposal, it is understood, is to ask the states seeking unemployment relief loans from the corporation to raise their taxes on gasoline to the level of such taxes in neighboring states.

The corporation does not have authority to increase gasoline taxes, but it does have custody of the fund recently authorized by congress for lending to the states for relief purposes, and can make such loans on its own terms and demands.

Payroll Is 11,500,000.

Recently in rejecting the request of Gov. Pinchot, of Pennsylvania, for a loan of $10,000,000 the corporation said it did not appear that the state has yet exhausted its own resources in this direction. The understanding is that the corporation had in mind then an increase in the taxes on gasoline in Pennsylvania.

Meantime, the payroll of the Reconstruction Finance corporation is coming under scrutiny and providing some of the most astonishing revelations that a national capital thoroughly inured to such things has encountered. Already the payroll is on a $1,500,000 year basis, and the end is not in sight.

When more than 33,000 applicants filed requests with the corporation last January for jobs, some of them said they were bankers and business men who had been receiving from $12,000 to $15,000 a year, but expressed a willingness to go to work for $3,000. But apparently they were all put to work on the salaries they claimed to have been receiving.

The rolls show that 118 officials receive salaries of more than $4,800 a year, and ten of them are paid $12,000 a year or more. The ten are the six aides to the directors in Washington, three members of the staff in New York and the branch manager in Chicago. The directors only receive $10,000 a year, less a cut of 8 1-3 per cent under the recent economy act of congress.

No Civil Service Limits.

Personnel of the corporation is not under civil service, so the directors can pay as much as they wish, which they have been doing under the liberal urging of members of congress anxious to extend a "little favor" to a constituent from their districts or states who is on the payroll.

The statisticians, examiners, secretaries and various assistants of the directors are likewise in the high salary list, as well as the subordinates in the twenty-four branch offices scattered over the country.

Seventy in the Washington office are getting more than $4,800 a year, and amounting roughly to $500,000 a year. Salaries for the branch managers are ranging from $5,400 in some of the western states to $15,000 for the branch manager at New York. The assistant manager and credit chief in New York are each receiving $12,000 a year, and the bureau chief in Chicago gets $12,500.

Attorneys and assistants in the Washington office are being paid $15,000, and others $12,000 each.

No Economy Troubles.

These salaries, which outrank any sums being paid in the government service under civil service rules, are being handed out at a time when the wages and compensation of the rank and file of government employes are being cut and slashed by enforced furloughs, vacations and leaves of absence, as well as substantial cuts in monthly pay.

The wave of economy has not hit the Reconstruction Finance corporation, and under its wave of lavish prosperity it contemplates demanding that states in needs of funds for unemployment relief "soak" their citizens a few cents more on gasoline for their automobiles, and that this over-taxed commodity shall be made subject to further diversion of taxes from road funds, which was the basis upon which it was originally levied and the only reason why the people accepted it.

Indications are that congress will get around to the business next winter of investigating the corporation, and there are a good many people who believe that the revelations that will follow will make Teapot Dome look comparatively harmless and odorless.

More rumors of questionable portent—of loans made through political pull, to favored interests, and in return for political favors—than are to be heard in connection with any other branch of the government service.

LEGION FAVORS FLEXIBLE WORK WEEK TO MAKE JOBS

Indianapolis, Ind.—Mr. Henry L. Stevens, Jr., national commander of the American Legion, said that incomplete returns of a poll of legion posts showed that the members overwhelmingly favor a shorter or "flexible" work week to spread work and increase employment.

"He stated that if the shorter work week were universally adopted today the more than 11,000,000 jobless would be nearly absorbed in the ranks of the wage-earners. He said the legion's poll showed that farming districts are in favor of it as strongly as the industrial centers.

SICK HEADACHE

Many cases of SICK HEADACHE are due to constipation. If you have headache that is due to constipation, take Thedford's BLACK-DRAUGHT for refreshing relief.

"I have taken BLACK-DRAUGHT, when needed, for about 15 years," writes Mr. J. W. Cooper, of Longview, Texas. "I first began to use it for sick headache that seemed to come from constipation.

"I would suffer about twenty-four hours with these headaches. I found out that BLACK-DRAUGHT would help me, so that is what I took. I am glad to recommend it to others, for this trouble, for it will give relief."

UNION LABEL

What is the objection to union-labeled products?

There would appear to be some objection or else there would be greater general demand for them.

Why not go into this matter now? The time was never more propitious for cooperative effort to popularize union-labeled products. Unionists are usually willing enough to lend aid to efforts to create demand for the label representative of their own craft. Why neglect union-made products of other crafts? Other organized craftsmen are asked to see that your label is on what they purchase. Isn't it only fair to see that their labels are on what you buy?

The union label on products of any description is indisputable evidence the goods were made by union workers, in a union shop and under union conditions. This is the main point in their favor.

By purchasing union-made products with union-earned money unionists are aiding each other. If all union-earned money were spent only for union-made products there would be no enforced idleness among members of organized labor.

Argument is heard that union-labeled products are not easy to obtain. Why aren't they? It is idle to assert that dealers will refuse to stock union-made products if shown sufficient demand exists. Why not create that demand?

Once in a while unionists declare this or that nonunion product is better suited to their taste than union-made goods of a similar kind. Is taste a matter of principle? Isn't it a cultivated sense? Did the founders of organized labor consider taste when formulating the principles upon which the movement is predicated?

No unionist can justify his attitude of noncompliance or indifference unless and until he has exhausted all reasonable efforts to obtain for himself and his home products that bear the symbol of fair labor. There are, perhaps, times when a certain article is unobtainable, but a quest for it may arouse sufficient interest among dealers to make it easy to find the second time inquiry is made.

Labeled hats, shoes, cigarets and other goods are easily obtained in most sections simply because demand for them has been so great dealers have realized the wisdom of stocking them. The average merchant has slight regard for sentiment in business. He wants to handle goods that move. Move the first consignment for him and he will order the second at once.

A demand must first be created. And if organized labor does not create the demand for union-made products, who will?

United and consistent effort to create and maintain a demand for union-made products will lessen unemployment, increase wages and decrease working hours to the glory of the organized labor movement.

Green Indorses Action of Hoover's Business Conference to Cut Hours

A. F. of L. President Says Work-Sharing Principle to Provide Jobs, Accepted by the Conference, Was Adopted by Organized Labor Many Months Ago —Predicts Early Application of Five-Day Week and Shorter Work-Day.

Washington, Sept. 8. — William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor, approved the work-sharing principle to relieve unemployment adopted by the conference of banking and industrial leaders called together by President Hoover to consider measures for combatting the business depression.

Mr. Green pointed out that the sharing work principle was set up early in the unemployment crisis as organized labor's plan to provide work for the jobless, and said that it goes to the root of the unemployment problem.

Through the action of the conference he visioned the early and quite general acceptance of the five-day week and shorter work day by private industry.

In a statement on the position of the conference in favor of spreading work, Mr. Green said:

"In my judgment the unemployment situation was considered in a definite and practical way by those in attendance at the conference composed of business, industrial and banking representatives called by the president.

"An equitable distribution of the amount of work available, so long advocated by labor, was approved by the conference as a partial remedy for unemployment.

"The pledge of those in attendance at the conference to recommend and urge employers to spread the amount of work available in private industry among a larger number of workers and to serve in every possible way in order to bring about a national acceptance of this plan shows that the conference was determined to go to the root of the unemployment problem.

"Work opportunities can be created only by sharing the amount of work there is to do.

"The number of days worked per week and the number of hours worked per day must be reduced in order to allocate work available among a larger number of people.

"Through such procedure work opportunities will be created.

"More people will be accorded an opportunity to earn a living and unemployment gradually overcome.

"An application of the share-the-work principle if nationally applied will be of great help to thousands of white-collar workers.

"If put into effect it will provide work opportunities for a large number of this class of workers who are suffering very greatly from unemployment.

"The steps taken at the conference should lead to the early acceptance and application of the five-day week and the shorter work day in all lines of private industry where it can be quickly and practically applied.

"The action taken at this conference can be properly interpreted as a significant development in the movement which has been sponsored by labor to bring about an adjustment of weekly and daily work periods in industry in order to conform with our constantly increasing facilities of production.

"The recommendation of the conference that working time in all lines of industry be reduced so that the amount of work available may be spread among a larger number of workers should be accepted and supported by employers and employes in all lines of industry."

Got Over Weak, Painful Condition By Taking Cardui

"I was weak and run-down and suffered quite a bit with pains in my side," writes Mrs. Nick Barranco, of Beaumont, Texas. "I was nervous. I did not rest well at night, and my appetite was poor.

"My mother had used Cardui with beneficial result, so I decided to take it. I surely am glad I did, for it stopped the pain in my side and built up my general health. I took seven bottles in all."

For over 50 years, Cardui has been helping women just as this Texas lady describes above.

Cardui is sold at all drug stores.

N. Y. INDUSTRIAL BODY FAVORS FIVE-DAY WEEK

New York.—The Lower Manhattan Industrial association adopted the following resolution in favor of the five-day week:

Whereas, machinery and mass production have today largely taken the place of hand labor; and,

Whereas, there are today 11,00,000 people desirous of employment who are idle because no work can be found for them; and,

Whereas, the economic and social problem of such a condition cannot be tolerated; and,

Whereas, men and women must be permitted to earn a living and work must be supplied for those willing to work; therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Lower Manhattan Industrial association go on record to urge and advocate the adoption of a five-day work week for industry and business in order that available work may be spread over a greater number of employes to alleviate the distress of unemployment.

duty and obligations is most damaging to the movement. We should awaken and enlist actively in this movement because there are difficult problems ahead of us. What you have today represents great sacrifices and vast sums of money and I call upon you to consider the problems before us and make your contribution to their solution.

"When you review the history of the labor movement and its accomplishments you can say to the world 'here we stand, a great institution.' Money is very necessary but in the labor program there is a finer and nobler thing, that is to establish industrial justice.

"What is needed today in this country is closer co-operation between all the groups of our people; infusion of democratic principles, and let us hope the day is not far distant when the cold employer will open the door and bid labor come in and welcome and together work out the problems of industry and the worker.

"The unjustified conditions in this country are unprecedented. There is a vast number of unemployed yet last summer there were the greatest crops on record and we had the mildest winter which was given us to put our house in order, yet we find conditions worse than a year ago and I venture the assertion that it is due to lack of co-operation. The president should call representatives of industry, labor and finance to a conference and work out the problems affecting this nation. What employers have been chiefly concerned about is profits. * * *"

The speaker discussed the inroads made by machinery on man power, yet, he said, both eyes and ears have been closed to the rightful conditions. "It will destroy America if conditions are not corrected," he said. "The nation does not owe a living to any one, but it does owe an opportunity to make this living and if it does not give the opportunity then it will fail.

"Enlist in this great cause; this constructive force in America, rich with a background of accomplishment. Through the activity of your leaders you have been able to focus public attention on industry. Never in the history of this government was there ever more trying and difficult problems confronting officials as today. Public officials are doing the best they can to meet the situation before them, and those who are doing their duty should have the co-operation and support to which they are entitled."

IT WAS A BIG JOB FOR THE JUDGES

Above is shown the barbecue pits at Warner Park Labor Day, [illegible] from daybreak Sunday morning until Monday noon the pits, over 125 feet long, were covered with lamb, pork, beef, [illegible] etc., prepared to serve the great holiday crowds. Members of the Painters' and Meatcutters' unions, under direction of "Zeke" Witt, prepared the feast, and it was served by a corps of some half hundred volunteers.

the single machine which takes the place of many wage-earners must produce wealth and leisure for all, and not for the few. The ultimate importance and bearing of this problem is seen in assuming that finally one man would produce all the machines, and another man bought and operate them. Who would buy and consume the goods thus made? Certainly the two men and their families would never provide the necessary market.

"The major problem, then, of tomorrow, is the distribution of the wealth produced, so that all may share, and none be left in want.

"It is inevitable that the hours of labor will grow shorter. Wisely used, the multitude of labor-saving devices now in use, and those still to be invented, will enable all necessary production, both in factories and on farms, to be done in a third, or even less, of the day of twenty-four hours. What are we to do with this large body of free time?

"I think it reasonably certain that in the future the population of cities will grow less, rather than larger. Good roads, automobiles, and cheap transportation generally, will tend to scatter people over wider areas. And this is as it should be. Thus will come about the end of the noisome tenement and the slum. More and more the wage-earner will have his plot of land in the country to which he may return when his day's work is done, and where he may add substantially to his comforts and wealth by tilling the ground. And, in addition to that, he will still have ample leisure. How he spends that leisure has a vital bearing upon our welfare.

"At no time in the history of men has there been greater need of an intelligent, informed, alert electorate than in the United States today. Pressing problems await solution. Some of these must be settled at the ballot box. Others must be settled by men chosen at the ballot box. Upon what is done at the ballot box, then, depends our weal or woe in the years to come.

"This is a government where majorities rule. The wage-earners make up the vast majority of the electorate of this country. In the last analysis, all power in our government is vested in the people, the people who, at stated times, in elections, express by the ballot their preferences and demands as to men and measures.

"The questions and problems now confronting governments are intricate and confusing as never before. For their understanding and solution wisdom and knowledge are demanded as never before."

CALIFORNIA HAS BEST LAWS RESTRICTING WOMEN'S WORK

California has the most comprehensive legislation of any of our states restricting the number of hours women may work, according to an analysis of state labor laws affecting women by the women's bureau of the U. S. department of labor.

An act of the legislature of that state, the bureau said, limits the hours of work to eight per day and forty-eight per week in any manufacturing, mechanical or mercantile establishment or industry, laundry, hotel, public lodging house, apartment house, hospital, barber shop, place of amusement, restaurant or telephone or telegraph establishment, or the operation of elevators in office buildings, or any express or transportation company.

Orders Limiting Work Hours.

In addition to these specified occupations limited in California, the hours of work in a number of other industries and occupations have been limited by orders of the industrial welfare commission. Certain of these orders set a six-day week and limit to eight hours per day and forty-eight per week the employment of women in the dried fruit-packing industry, as labelers in fruit and canning factories, and as office workers in the citrus-packing industries.

Other orders by the commission permit women in hotels and restaurants in unclassified occupations who work six hours a day or less to work seven days a week, and still other orders require increased rates of pay for all hours worked beyond the prescribed limits or on the seventh day of the week in the fruit and vegetable canning and packing industries, the fish-canning industry, and by specified groups in the motion-picture industry.

HOOVER SAYS JOBS FOR IDLE SHOULD BE MADE BY SHARING WORK

Tells Conference of Bankers and Industrial Leaders That Turning Jobless Into Wage-Earners Is Essential to Business Recovery—Conference Selects President of Standard Oil Company of New Jersey to Head Work-Sharing Committee.

Washington, Sept. 8.—President Hoover urged further shortening of hours to relieve unemployment in his address to the conference of approximately 350 American banking and industrial leaders here, convened by him to organize the forces of finance and business against the depression.

The president expressed the belief that, with the exception of federal employes, reducing the number of hours worked per week is not the concern of the government, and should be left to employers and employes in private business.

On the subject of spreading work by reducing the number of hours per week, the president said:

"In the furtherance of business recovery it is clearly necessary that there be co-ordination of effort in hastening the return of unemployed to employment in their natural industries.

"It is doubtful whether any action we could take at this time would so greatly accelerate our progress, serve the welfare of our unemployed millions, or so quickly give us as a nation the benefit of widespread spending power as further spread of equitable plans of sharing the available work.

"As a matter of national policy, the shortening of hours is necessary, not alone to meet the need of the moment, but it may be necessary to take up the slack in the future from the vast and sudden advance in labor-saving devices.

"As the result of conferences similar to this nearly three years ago, many industries realigned their operations by shorter hours to retain hundreds of thousands of workers who otherwise would have been dismissed.

"Nevertheless, the still further spreading of available work in industrial, commercial and service activities, especially with every recovery of employment, would be a vital contribution.

"Your committee in the Twelfth district recently inaugurated a drive for this spread of work. Already it is a great success.

"Many methods have been proposed by labor and industrial leaders to systematically shorten hours.

"While I heartily favor the purpose of these plans, I agree with both the employers and the leaders of labor whom I have consulted that its direction is not properly the function of government, except as applied to the operation of government service.

"Moreover, with all the various phases of employment and operation to be met in private business, no general rule can be applied.

"Results must be achieved through co-operation on the part of employers and employes suited to each locality and industry.

"I suggest you should consider the effective part which you can play in further forwarding organization to this end."

The conference adopted President Hoover's recommendation and made Walter C. Teagle, president of the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey, chairman of the committee to provide increased employment through sharing work.

Central Body Protests Shorter School Term; Flays "Tax-Dodgers"

Gilbert's Tax-Reduction Proposal Denounced As Unsound

CALLS FOR EQUALIZATION OF GOVERNMENT COST BURDEN

Local League Members Take Offense at Wording of Resolution, and Officials Issue Clarifying Statement—Arn Defends Hamilton County Organization.

"We believe the burden of government can and should be made more fairly borne through a more equitable distribution of taxes, without an unwise and unsound reduction in the rate at this time," was, in part, the position of organized labor, expressed by Central Body Monday night, respecting a campaign now being conducted by C. C. Gilbert, under the anspices of the Tennessee Manufacturers' association, for a reduction of "25 per cent. or more" in all taxes, state, county, state and national.

Mr. Gilbert has been touring the state forming so-called taxpayers' leagues, giving out interviews to newspapers and attempting to create a public sentiment which labor believes would prove disastrous to the orderly progress of city, county and state government. Mr. Gilbert, whom labor men will remember as a loquacious and unskilled walking delegate of the state employers' union, attempted to pledge candidates for the legislature in the recent primaries to a "declaration of principles" which would bind them to reduce the present tax rate at least 25 per cent. Although some of the candidates were apparently impressed with the wild plan, it is known that others stated frankly their opinion that the suggestion was unsound.

The activities of a certain group of citizens having to do with the schools and other departments of city and county governments were "deplored and denounced" by Central Body delegates at the same time, in a resolution which was unanimously adopted, that regularly elected officials were called upon to "defend in every reasonable and possible manner particularly our public schools against unreasonable and unjust assaults, from whatever source they may come."

The resolution, published in the press Tuesday morning, occasioned considerable comment, and the fact that "the taxpayers' league" was mentioned in the preamble led to a misunderstanding upon the part of several members of the Hamilton county branch of the league. A declaration of the resolution that "We deplore the activities of professional tax reformers and tax-dodgers, so far as their program works to interfere with the proper functioning of our governmental departments," was construed to mean that all members of the league were branded as tax-dodgers. A statement signed by President Perry and Secretary Cuthbert, however, made clear the reference and stated that, while the implication was not intended to apply to the league as a whole, "if the shoe fits any member he will know it, and may wear it."

Respects were paid to that type of thought which, in times of distress, considers its attack on the public school system and the small wage-earner, and officials were asked to guard against the activities of those who would embarrass the orderly and necessary conduct of the various arms of government.

The resolution follows:

Whereas, it has been called to our attention through press reports that a new organization, known as the Taxpayers' league, and certain candidates in the recent primary elections have been advocating a 25 per cent. reduction in taxes for the city of Chattanooga; and,

Whereas, our information is that the total income of the city through taxes is $3,312,000 annually, and we also learn that $1,680,000, or practically 50 per cent. of our total income from this source, is already pledged by the proper authorities to pay interest and principal on our bonded indebtedness; and,

Whereas, if we reduce our taxes 25 per cent., with practically 50 per cent. of our total revenue already spent, it means reducing the operating fund of the city 50 per cent., which ultimately means reducing our school term, our health department, our police and fire department 50 per cent., thus increasing our insurance rates and tending to offset the amount which would be saved through such proposed reduction of 25 per cent. in taxes; and,

Whereas, demand for reduction in the tax rate comes largely from the bigger property owners who are not now paying and never have paid their just proportionate share of the tax burdens; and,

Whereas, it appears that these self-constituted saviors of our city and county in these times of distress and woe invariably center their attacks on incomes of the small wage-earner and on the public school system, now, therefore, be it

Resolved by Chattanooga Trades and Labor council, representing thousands of working men and women in Chattanooga and Hamilton county, That:

We believe the burden of government can and should be made more easily borne through a more equitable distribution of necessary taxes, without an unwise and unsound program of reduction in the rate at this time;

We believe necessary economies can and should be made through the elimination of unnecessary jobs and other readjustments, without placing the entire load on already underpaid employes and seriously embarrassing the orderly and necessary conduct of the various arms of our government;

We deplore, resent and denounce any and all efforts to interfere with the proper functioning of our public school system for a full nine-month term;

We deplore the activities of professional tax reformers and tax-dodgers, so far as their program works to interfere with the proper functioning of our government departments;

We call upon our regularly elected officials to defend in every reasonable and possible manner, particularly our public schools, against unreasonable and unjust assaults, from whatever source they may come.

Following protest of certain earnest and progressive citizens affiliated with the Hamilton County Taxpayers' league, objecting to what they regarded as a blanket charge of "tax-dodging," the position of labor was clarified in the statement from Central Body officials, in the following prepared article:

Resolutions adopted by Chattanooga Trades and Labor council Monday night apparently offended some of our friends in the Hamilton County Taxpayers' league, principally through an unfortunate misconstruction of certain allegations contained in the resolution.

Movie Boys Thank Friends for Help

Appreciate Co-Operation in Campaign Against Non-Union Bonita Theater.

Officers of Local 259, Moving Picture Projectionists, Friday asked The Labor World to express to their many friends appreciation for their co-operation in the very effective campaign of publicity respecting the operating policy of the Bonita theater, a small picture house on Market street near Ninth, which recently was opened as a nonunion house, with Frank Olmstead, former permit man, in the role of manager.

The trades unionists declared the campaign has been thoroughly satisfactory, and they are confident that continued co-operation of their friends for a short time longer will convince the owners of the theater that Chattanooga movie-goers are in thorough sympathy with the local in its determination to preserve American standards in the industry locally.

Aymon Named to Executive Board

Central Body Handles Routine Business at Regular Session Monday.

Paul Aymon, who has held most every office in Chattanooga Trades and Labor council, was unanimously selected Monday night to succeed Joe E. Dobbs, resigned, sergeant-at-arms. The position carries with it membership on the executive board.

Business transacted by Central Body Monday night was for the most part routine, although several "family matters" were the subject of considerable discussion and some oratory. Following delegates were obligated: Painters, M. H. Ortwein, W. D. Canada, J. G. Schrock, A. L. Surrett, Charles Melford, J. A. Farmer; Electrical Workers, Frank Krug; Musicians, Herman Dodd.

Partial report of the Labor Day committee indicated that while the affair was not a success financially, a fine spirit of co-operation was shown by the citizenship of Chattanooga, and much good was accomplished in other ways.

Motion Picture Projectionists, Painters and Carpenters were commended for their splendid campaign of publicity with respect to the nonunion Bonita theater and the typical chain-store attitude of the A. & P. store on Market street, which is said to have imported its labor 100 per cent. for remodeling of a storebuilding.

A delegation of locked-out mine workers from Wilder, Tenn., was present, and the status of the trouble in Overton and Fentress counties was explained. The miners were given a hearty welcome, and were promised every co-operation from local trades unionists.

STEEL COMPANY PRESIDENT RAISES WAGES 20 PER CENT

Camden, N. J.—Mr. H. W. Felding, president of a Camden Steel concern, announced that he would spend $10,000 of his personal funds to give his twenty-five employes a 20 per cent increase in pay for one year. He said the plan will cost him $200 a week.

Although admitting that present business conditions do not warrant the wage increase, Mr. Fielding said:

"It is simply a plan to stimulate officers of large industries to do in proportion what I have done.

"It would put money in the hands of workmen, who need it and will spend it.

"I believe if the plan were carried out generally in industry, it would be only a short time before American business would arrive at good health."

Mr. Fielding said the wage increase was not a restoration from previous wage cuts, since there had been none at his factory.

MUSICIANS REJECT CUT.

Edward Canavan, president of Local 802, American Federation of Musicians, announced the union has rejected a proposal of the League of New York Theaters for a reduction in the pay scale. The contract has another year to run.

BARBERS SHOW FINE PROGRESS IN CAMPAIGN

"Keep at It" Policy Successful, Says Shanessy.

MANY NEW LOCALS ADDED TO ROSTER

Renewed Life Seen in Many Organized Crafts as Result of Drive.

Indianapolis, Ind., Sept. 15.—Recording a gain in membership of 1,189 for the month of August, in its continuous campaign for members, the Journeymen Barbers' International Union of America has entered the second quarter of its new policy to "keep at it" until a 100 per cent organization has been reached.

That the new policy is bringing results is evident, despite hard times, depression and other handicaps, James C. Shanessy, general president, said. A total gain in new members for the first three months of the drive is 3,442. A number of new locals have been installed, including one at Charleston, W. Va., and Shawnee, Okla., known as "tough spots" for trade union organizations. A number of moribund locals have been galvanized into life and activity, reports show.

Reports received by President Shanessy show that much activity in organization work is in progress over the jurisdiction of the international. Mass meetings in scores of cities are being held, and as a result renewed life is noted not only among the barbers but other organized crafts. Some locals have reached their goal of complete membership, while others are making fast progress towards this end.

"The barbers' union is one of the few organizations, if not the only one, which has shown a net gain in membership in spite of the depression and hard times," a statement by President Shanessy on the progress of the campaign said.

"We are in deep earnest about this drive," the statement continued, "because it is now a part of our general policy. If we are to command any economic advantages we have to be properly organized to do it.

"The gratifying thing of it all is that our members are in sympathy with our aims and purposes and are co-operating in every possible way. Every member is an organizer and each is doing his part towards reaching our goal of complete organization. Letters telling of what the locals are doing grow more numerous every day.

"We are building for the future. We know that present conditions in organized labor will continue unless all of us step out and prevent it. We know that people everywhere lack jobs, lack money and many lack hope, but we should not let adversity steal our rights and privileges to organize for our betterment.

"We also recognize the fact that labor's cause is our cause and that we should do all we can to strengthen our great federation. To this end our new local unions, and old ones as well, are requested to affiliate with central bodies and co-operate with them in every way."

President Shanessy and General Secretary-Treasurer W. C. Birthright—who incidentally administers the international's sick and death benefit fund—despite their heavy official duties, find time to aid in combatting wage cuts, not only in their own craft but wherever they threaten organized labor. In many cities of the country union barbers have been the only craft succeeding in maintaining old wage scales. In other instances they have joined other labor unions in fighting drastic wage slashes.

Forbes Defines "Political Game"

Members of the Kiwanis club were quoting George Forbes this week, in reference to a definition of politics given by the local trades unionist in a speech before the clubmembers recently. As one member of the organization recalled it, George said: "Politics is a game in which money is procured from the rich, and votes from the poor, on the pretense of protecting each from the other." Selah!

LONG WEEK IMPOSED ON GERMAN RAILWAY EMPLOYES

Amsterdam, Holland.—"In spite of the enormous unemployment, the traffic staff of the German railways are still required to put in from 70 to 80 hours service in the week," declared the International Transport Workers' federation in a press report on the hours of service of German railway employes.

"At the station of Pankov," the report adds, "employes sometimes have to be on duty sixteen hours at a stretch. Some of the employes are not even given the days off to which they are entitled. The staff attached to one of the Berlin stations has accumulated 250 free days which have not been given. The personnel has been reduced to a minimum. There is not a man to spare. The employers are overstrained, and the safety of the traffic is in danger."

FORSTMANN WOOLEN MILLS PLACED ON FIVE-DAY WEEK

Passaic, N. J.—The Forstmann Woolen company, one of the largest woolen manufacturers in the country, announced that it would inaugurate a five-day working week in all its mills. Curt Forstmann, vice-president, estimated that the short work week would increase the number of employes by about 10 per cent. With the start of the five-day week the company employed two eight-hour shifts.

FIGHT POISON AIR

Harrisburg, Pa.—In a number of industries where processes of manufacture involve emanation of poisonous fumes and gases, the department of labor and industry has begun to make physical and chemical analyses of samples of air from these establishments in its own laboratory.

The results of these tests will determine whether toxic conditions obtain in sufficient amount to warrant further preventive measures.

The bureau of industrial standards, in charge of this activity, is endeavoring to discover methods which will eliminate these poisons without costly equipment, at the same time protecting the workers.

Industry May Plan Full Steam Ahead For Coming Revival

Stage Is Set for Prosperity's Return, Says Washington Writer

UNPARALLELED OPPORTUNITY FOR VAST REBUILDING IS JUST AHEAD

Great Obstacles to Regeneration Declared Being Moved Out of Pathway, While Huge Enterprises in Building and Manufacturing Await Courage—Recovery Signs Called Evident.

By B. C. CLARKE

Washington, Sept. 15.—Work in vast quantities is waiting to be done in this country, and business and industry have an opportunity now to go ahead with reasonable certainty and assurance and regain momentum. The country is in need of manufactured goods and the people are in need of work.

Everywhere business and industrial leaders have an unparalleled opportunity to take up their tasks and go ahead with them. They have had ample time to look over their field and map their course. The effects of depression can be removed now as easily as they can at any time in the future.

Stocks of goods and the supply of merchandise are at the lowest ebb they have been in years. Goods are moving slowly only because of reduced buying power and with the credit resources that have become available during the summer, nothing is to be gained by undue hesitancy and waiting other than a continuation of the sweeping losses that have been suffered through lost wages, reduced buying power and lessened consumption of goods.

Obstacles Are Disappearing.

Business men have been standing still in the face of what they described as appalling handicaps—scarcity of capital, failing banks, uncertainty in legislation, soaring taxes, and surpluses of unconsumed goods.

Most of these obstacles, with the exception of high taxes, have largely disappeared. Bank failures have become inconsequential; no legislation is in immediate prospect which may cause worry to any industrial leader. The surpluses of goods no longer exist. Banks have adequate funds to assist industry to a start in every producing center. People are in need of supplies which they will buy just as soon as they have the resources in wages to do so.

New times are ahead, but how quickly business and industry regain momentum will be gauged largely by the energy and virility of the men at the helm. Some of today's problems will quickly vanish when the minds of the people and the credit resources are focused upon creative activities, and there is a will and determination to bring things back to a normal balance.

The road along which industry will go ahead is as old as industry itself, but it is doubtful if the country will return to exactly the same conditions as before the depression. That has not been the history of other depressions. The country will face new conditions, new demands and new opportunities.

In looking over the country there are to be seen everywhere in large and small towns developments that remain to be swept away with the approach of new conditions. Ancient pavements, obsolete buildings, and outgrown factory plants, which should have been torn down years and years ago, are still found at every turn. There is no overbuilt condition; there are not too many houses, stores, schools or churches.

Accumulation of Rebuilding.

The railroads after two years of inactivity have an accumulation of rebuilding and rehabilitation on their hands. The manufacturer who is wide-awake enough to replace his obsolete plant has a large opportunity and market before him; if he waits, he will have largely missed his chance.

Quality is just as great a factor in goods today as it was before the depression. Many firms that slashed wages are trying to sell at low prices to attract buyers with reduced incomes and are bringing cutthroat competition into the situation. The markets have quantities of cheap and shoddy goods, but there is probably a lot of grief in store for these products.

Good prices based on good qualities can be obtained today, because the country is full of sound and legitimate firms anxious to perform good work at prices that are the lowest consistent with quality.

High Quality Today's Need.

Business and industry should avoid settling down to mere mass production, and turn its attention to goods of quality and measure supply by demand. There is every indication that the day of mere mass production is gone from American industry and will not return. Business men of constructive foresight have learned well its ruinous lesson of depression and economic breakdown.

People should be put to work and at wages at which they can maintain their standards of living. Progressive towns and cities all over the country could realize this, and are taking advantage of the large opportunity in the business and industrial field, and to march in the front rank of recovery. And recovery is much nearer than a great many people seem to realize.

Joe Farmer Loses Brother in New York

Local trades unionists will regret to learn of the death in New York City of a brother of Joe Farmer, financial secretary of Local 226, Painters. The local union official was called to the metropolis some two weeks ago on account of serious illness of his brother and father.

The brother passed away last Saturday, and was laid to rest Wednesday. Mr. Farmer, Sr., reports said, is still in a dangerous condition, but is expected to recover. Both have long been members of organized labor.

She—I heard you had some trouble with lumbago.

He—No, that wasn't her name.

Safeguard Wage Is Watchword of Campaign Group

President's Conference Names Six Aims and Committees—Teagle Heads Work-Sharing Crusade, O. K.'d by Green.

Washington, Sept. 8.—An immediate and nation-wide campaign to spread work and thus turn millions of workers back into employment was announced on the heels of president's national conference of business and industrial committees here, called for the purpose of helping to smash the depression.

Immediately upon announcement of the spread-work campaign, which is under chairmanship of Walter Teagle, Standard Oil of New Jersey, President William Green, of the American Federation of Labor, announced his enthusiastic support of the campaign.

Robinson Is Chairman.

The main conference organized under chairmanship of Henry L. Robinson, of California, who will lead the general campaign for industrial revival. The Teagle spread-work committee is one of a half dozen committees named by the conference for specialized work. Chairmen of the other five are Daniel Willard, A. W. Robertson, C. M. Woolley, Owen D. Young and C. H. Miller.

The spread-work campaign is announced as a high-pressure, war-type drive to induce employers throughout the nation to at once adopt plans to increase the numbers of employed by adopting whatever system seems best adapted to the community and the industry.

In its meeting to formulate plans the Teagle group was addressed by Secretary of Labor Doak, who emphasized the necessity of readjusting work on a spread-work basis with as little disturbance as possible to the present earnings of those who have jobs. The folly of reducing all to standards of bare necessities was set forth and it was said to be the view of the entire committee that readjustment should not be on a basis of cutting down present earnings of those on payrolls. "It was more like a labor meeting than a meeting of employers," said one who attended.

Six Fields of Action.

The conference laid down a field for each committee, as follows:

1. Making credit available affirmatively. Chairman, Mr. Young.
2. Increased employment on railroads; stimulation through increase of equipment in co-operation with R. F. C. and I. C. C. Chairman, Mr. Willard.
3. Expansion of capital expenditures for equipment replacement. Chairman, Mr. Robertson.
4. Increasing employment through spread-work or sharing work. Chairman, Mr. Teagle.
5. Stimulating repair and home improvement. Chairman, Mr. Woolley.
6. Assistance for home-owners with maturing mortgages. Chairman, Mr. Miller.

Teagle Lays Plans.

The work of the Teagle subcommittee will be on a basis of federal reserve district organizations. The whole program of the conference will be carried out through the organization of larger committees in the reserve districts and through seeking the co-operation of all groups and agencies.

Labor, it is forecast by some, will play an important part, soon to be revealed in the revival campaign.

The dashing young daughter of a well-known woman appeared at her home recently wearing an outlandish hat.

Practical-Minded Mother — Where did you get that hat?

Daughter—I bought it.

Mother (sneering)—No you didn't. They sold it to you.

The Blind Must Not Lead

With due caution it may be said that there are signs of improvement "in the air." As a matter of fact it is possible to say, with the same caution and reserve, that they are more than in the air.

There must be improvement or there will be worse—and so, there will be improvement.

But the undertaking of what must constitute real improvement is painfully and shockingly limited.

There are all too few who understand that any real and general prosperity can come only on the basis of a new deal all 'round in industry.

* * * *

The old 48-hour week is done for. The old rates of pay are done for.

But most employers look for, and expect, prosperity to come back on the old wage terms and with the old hours of work. Nothing like that can happen. It is a physical impossibility.

The foundation fact is that there never again can be jobs for more than a fraction of American workers unless there is general and drastic reduction in the number of hours of work per man per week and unless there is a wage rate that will create an American market.

* * * *

Thoughts of unloading what has been called the "surplus" on other countries may as well be ditched. That cannot again be done. That chapter, too, is closed, probably never to be reopened. One often overlooked point is that when "backward" nations nowadays get to the point of wanting American machine products they come and buy a few of our machines and then make their own!

But too much of our leadership thinks in terms of going back to the old basis. They are blind leaders and it is time to get rid of blind leaders. They must be retired, wherever they are.

* * * *

The new dispensation, necessary if there is to be a general and genuine prosperity, must envision a grand shakeup in hours and wages and MUST HAVE ORGANIZATION.

Organizations, such as the National Association of Manufacturers, that have fought the organization of labor and that have looked always backward for guidance have done America incalculable harm. They have left America without much of the equipment necessary to readjustment, they have taught their own members to hate the very organizations that now are essential to the team work that must be had if America is to get out and stay out of the slough of depression.

It will never be possible to know the full damage done by such organizations as the N. A. M., the National Erectors' Association and the Anti-Boycott Association.

* * * *

In the new day, if there is to be one, THERE MUST BE UNIONS, for organized workers must sit down with organized employers and actually LEGISLATE for industry, so that there may be continuous COMMAND of the industrial situation. No "plan" to "balance" things for long periods in advance will either work or fit the American mind. But America must come to flexible, organized disregard of the whims and tricks of speculators and financial racketeers. And in that day, too, banks must SERVE and cease to give orders.

* * * *

Thus far only a few leaders see forward. Most of them look backward and see nothing. Labor has repeatedly presented its views and its diagnosis. Labor has proven its intellectual capacity and its right to be heard. Unless labor is heard any so-called recovery from this depression will be nothing more than "a shot with the needle" leading to a relapse that may bring death. The blind must no longer lead. Only those who can see forward have any right to leadership today.

Chilean "Socialism"

When the established government of the Republic of Chile was overthrown last June the revolutionary junta which assumed power declared they intended to set up a "socialist" regime.

Fear was expressed in conservative quarters that the new order of things meant the complete overthrow of capitalism and the establishment of a communist scheme such as obtains in the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics.

The known conservatism of the officials of the new Chilean government compelled students of the situation to regard the proposed socialist regime and the alleged menace of soviet communism with a large degree of skepticism. Declarations of these officials that their plan centered around forms of government control or ownership of industry confirmed this opinion.

Now the Banco Central of Chile, a government institution, in its latest bulletin, still further allays the fear that Chile is going to adopt soviet practices, or that schemes of government dangerous to the existing economic or political order are intended, with the official statement that the major policy of the Chilean government is concerned with economic planning under state control, which the government calls "state socialism."

> The political events of June gave rise to various interpretations at home and abroad. In the confusion of the moment the idea gained ground that the revolutionary movement would degenerate into destructive and anarchic communism. After calm had been established the fundamental idea of the revolution was revealed.
> State socialism has absolutely no relation to communism or bolshevism nor even to scientific socialism.
>
> State socialism is the recognition that completely free capitalism has been powerless to conquer the crisis, and that in order to prevent chaos, the state must take charge of organizing and regulating national economy in all departments.
>
> Chaotic and disordered economy, without a plan, determined in its development only by private interests and exposed therefore to violent changes, must be replaced by an orderly, well-considered economy with a definite plan, which far from eliminating individual initiative submits it to regulation with a view to conserving the interests and welfare of the whole people.
> In this form, state socialism, the slogan of the Chilean revolution, is the same thing as the capitalist plan and the planned economy of distinguished European economists.

It will be noticed that the intervention of the government of Chile in national economic planning is caused by the complete inability of the "rugged individualism" of private industry to manage business in the public interest.

The extension of government intervention in business affairs in the United States has been broguht about by the same conditions that engendered it in Chile—the absolute inability or refusal of those who own and control our financial, commercial, and industrial institutions to operate them primarily for the interests of the great mass of the people instead of for the unpatriotic purpose of piling up accumulated wealth in the hands of the few.

The Passing Show

Note and Comment on Things Doing in the March of Events

Mr. Stuart Chase, one of the most prolific of all the doctors of economics in the abstract, has just poured forth another book called "A New Deal," in which he sets forth sixteen ways of making money, to illustrate the kind of world in which we live.

Mr. Chase believes he has made a complete list, no doubt. His list might be called the sixteen points on how to trim the suckers, or it might be called the sixteen points of Wall Street's book of success, or it might be called sixteen superficial supports for the upper crust. Admitting that in these sixteen ways a lot of money can be won—and lost—they are here offered to the readers of this 13-cm realm.

(1) Create an artificial monopoly and boost prices—as has been done with oil and aluminum;

(2) Tie up a patent or a secret process, and charge all the traffic will bear—as the shoe machinery company did;

(3) Borrow money at 6 per cent, and lend it at fantastic rates, disguised as "bonuses" or what not, to the little people;

(4) Make a useless product and sell it, like toothpaste, by high-pressure radio advertising;

(5) Ballyhoo a perfectly good cheap product, like some patent medicines, worth a few cents, into big sales at absurd prices;

(6) Create and maintain artificial values for more or less dubious stocks and bonds—as per the famous histories of Messrs. Krueger and Insull;

(8, 9 and 10) Speculate in securities; in land; in commodities;

(11) Promote a parasitic industry—move your factory to a region where labor is cheap and unorganized, and convert your farmer-neighbors into mill hands;

(12 and 13) Graft in politics, or in business, by "legal" methods;

(14) "Racketeer";

(15) Dump your surplus production abroad;

(16) Rush blindly in to compete where the going has been good, regardless of the need for more production.

* * *

Mr. Chase omitted one mighty good way from his list. That is to write a book, ballyhoo it as the greatest of all great books and thus drag forth from the pockets of all and sundry the clinking coin of the realm.

To what extent authors and publishers today are doing just that almost any sane person can judge, but those best informed are the authors themselves.

Mr. Chase rates as an economist. An economist has ideas to sell. If he can't sell them, then he is just an unemployed economist, a man without a function. So, the better salesman he is, the better he rates as an economist and the more the returns pour in. Why not? It's the same with Billy Sunday.

Candidly, there is a lot in what Mr. Chase says about his sixteen ways. But to assume that those are the only ways, or even the main ways, of making money is simply that much foolishment.

Were the Chase catalogue unmodified by other facts, then truly our economic system would have degenerated into a great racket ruled by crooks and fakers.

Under those circumstances there would be no individuals and firms seeking always to make a better product, to find new products and to contribute genuinely to the making of a better and an easier world.

But the fact over which Mr. Chase's whole catalogue barks its shins is just that outstanding fact of production itself. And people do make big money by making useful inventions, by humanely managing industry and by making great paintings. It is well to single out and singe the abuses, but to conclude that we have among us nothing but abuses is to delude, first of all, ourselves, than which nothing is more profitable to the pathologist—but to no one else.

LABOR QUERIES

Q.—Does labor favor compulsory military training in schools?

A.—No; labor has opposed such compulsion, much on the same grounds as it opposes compulsion generally, but with the added reason that labor opposes enforced militarism. However, it approves the citizens' military training camps and reserve officers' training corps, in which training is the result of voluntary action. Labor is opposed to forced training in schools, but it is not pacifist.

Q.—Has the A. F. of L. ever interested itself in daily newspaper publication?

A.—Yes; and in 1920 the executive council was directed by the convention to look into the possibility of securing control of several dailies to be operated as independent and impartial news channels. The move, however, was finally deemed impractical. Labor regards newspapers, and particularly the labor press, as of vital importance.

Q.—Does labor approve censorship?

A.—It does not. Presumably you mean of plays, pictures, etc. In 1916 the A. F. of L. convention denounced movie censorship. It does not support any censorship.

Q.—Have the churches taken any position regarding the so-called open shop?

A.—Indeed they have. In 1920 the so-called open shop was denounced by the three great religious organizations in America and the A. F. of L. expressed deep appreciation of those "most humane documents," terming them "of inestimable value."

Q.—Did American labor attend the Berne conference called at the time of the peace conference?

A.—It did not, holding it premature and irregular. A great debate with French labor took place, but American labor held firm to its decision to remain "at the place" of the peace conference, there to present its demands upon the peace conferees.

New Jersey state federation of labor, in session at Newark, listened to President William Green, of the A. F. of L. early in its sessions. It also went through a bitterly contested fight for officers.

AS THE WORKER SEES HIS WORLD

H. B. Butler, well known to American trade unionists, has been appointed director of the International Labor office, to succeed the late Albert Thomas.

Joseph Franklin, one of the American fraternal delegates to the British trade union congress, told the assemblage at Newcastle-on-Tyne that though American labor was hard hit by unemployment it was not discouraged and had no intention of quitting the fight against unfair conditions.

The 6-hour day and 5-day week were urged by Matthew Woll, addressing the Connecticut state federation of labor convention in Stamford. He called for a new deal because machines had increased production and reduced employment.

Vern S. Hill, manager of the Colorado Labor Advocate, has been named candidate for the state senate on the democratic ticket.

UNION LABEL

What is the objection to union-labeled products?

There would appear to be some objection or else there would be greater general demand for them.

Why not go into this matter now? The time was never more propitious for cooperative effort to popularize union-labeled products. Unionists are usually willing enough to lend aid to efforts to create demand for the label representative of their own craft. Why neglect union-made products of other crafts? Other organized craftsmen are asked to see that your label is on what they purchase. Isn't it only fair to see that their labels are on what you buy?

The union label on products of any description is indisputable evidence the goods were made by union workers, in a union shop and under union conditions. This is the main point in their favor.

By purchasing union-made products with union-earned money unionists are aiding each other. If all union-earned money were spent only for union-made products there would be no enforced idleness among members of organized labor.

Argument is heard that union-labeled products are not easy to obtain. Why aren't they? It is idle to assert that dealers will refuse to stock union-made products if shown sufficient demand exists. Why not create that demand?

Once in a while unionists declare this or that nonunion product is better suited to their taste than union-made goods of a similar kind. Is taste a matter of principle? Isn't it a cultivated sense? Did the founders of organized labor consider taste when formulating the principles upon which the movement is predicated?

No unionist can justify his attitude of noncompliance or indifference unless and until he has exhausted all reasonable efforts to obtain for himself and his home products that bear the symbol of fair labor. There are, perhaps, times when a certain article is unobtainable, but a quest for it may arouse sufficient interest among dealers to make it easy to find the second time inquiry is made.

Labeled hats, shoes, cigarets and other goods are easily obtained in most sections simply because demand for them has been so great dealers have realized the wisdom of stocking them. The average merchant has slight regard for sentiment in business. He wants to handle goods that move. Move the first consignment for him and he will order the second at once.

A demand must first be created. And if organized labor does not create the demand for union-made products, who will?

United and consistent effort to create and maintain a demand for union-made products will lessen unemployment, increase wages and decrease working hours to the glory of the organized labor movement.

Trade Unions Necessary to Guard Workers' Interests, Morrison Says

A. F. of L. Secretary Declares Union Shop Is Labor's Major Instrument to Protect Wages, Hours and Other Labor Conditions.

Washington. — A defense of trade unionism as a necessary institution of working men and women to protect their interests was made by Frank Morrison, secretary of the American Federation of Labor, in a radio address here on "The Closed and Open Shop."

Mr. Morrison said in part:

"The terms 'closed shop' and 'open shop' are misapplied in desigating labor policies of employers. The proper terms are 'union shop' and 'nonunion shop.'

"In the union shop the employer recognizes the right of his employes to join the unions of their trades and callings and be represented by delegates of the unions in negotiating terms of employment.

"In other words, such an employer accords to his wage workers the recognition of their inherent and constitutional rights of association to handle in a protective and intelligent way the matters which affect intimately their life and labor.

Nonunion Shop.

"In a nonunion shop an employer refuses to recognize the right of his employees to conduct negotiations with him looking to regulating conditions of employment through union representatives.

"Some employers may not discriminate against workers holding union cards and many may be honest in their conviction that they assume the fair attitude when they leave it to the free will and choice of the individual worker as to whether he or she shall belong to a union.

"In the final analysis, even though an employer may be neutral with regard to the right of his employes to belong to a union, if he refuses to deal with the union in deciding conditions of employment, he enforces a nonunion policy.

Union Agreements.

"Wages mean for workers food, clothing, housing and such added comforts as their income may afford. Hours for labor vitally affect their home life and association therein.

"The purpose of membership in a union is to establish cooperation among workers to secure agreements with their employers, standardizing conditions of employment, so there may be assurance of regularity in these conditions. The procedure is for the workers in the regular meetings of the organizations to consider the terms of employment, which they will draft finally in the form of a proposed agreement to be submitted to their employers.

"When agreement is finally reached among the members, the organization requests the employer to set the time and place for a conference with the representatives of the union for discussion of the proposed terms, in the hope of reaching an agreement. It is not to be expected that the employer and his employes will always be in accord with the proposals offered for consideration, regulating conditions of employment.

Adjusting Differences.

"Where both parties approach the question with the purpose of dealing fairly and honestly with the questions at issue, the discussions pave the way to a better understanding of each other's viewpoint and usually a common ground of agreement. During the period of agreement employes having any complaint or grievance growing out of conditions of employment are required to take up their grievances through the channel of their union.

"If after investigation the union decides that the employe has a real grievance, the matter is taken up with the employer with a view of adjusting it.

"These policies of negotiation and conciliation lead to promoting a greater mutuality of feeling and respect for each other's rights, duties and responsibilities.

"Where workers thus have the right of joining the union of their craft or calling without fear of loss of their employment, to protect themselves in their conditions of employment, they exercise this right. This fact was demonstrated during the world war.

"With labor greatly in demand as a result of production requirements, the growth of membership of the American Federation of Labor almost doubled. The exact figures show that in 1917 the membership of the American Federation of Labor was 2,350,000, and in 1919, during the peak of employment, the membership was 4,075,000.

"This indicates the attitude of workers where there is no intimidation exercised."

Mr. Morrison's address was the first of a series of ten addresses on current labor problems by representative labor spokesmen under the auspices of the national advisory council in education, with the cooperation of the American Federation of Labor, the Workers' Education Bureau of America, and the University of Chicago Press. The addresses are given every Sunday at 12 o'clock noon, eastern standard time, and are broadcast over the nationwide network of the Columbia broadcasting system.

Millions of Jobless Blot on Civilization

Rukeyser Says Unemployed Army Holds Back Business Recovery — Shorter Work Week and Work Day Must Be Applied.

"The great drag on the general situation is still widespread unemployment, the partial correction of which would be the soundest step toward recovery," declared M. S. Rukeyser, a financial writer for Universal Service, in an economic picture of today compared with a year ago.

"Society is still indicted for its shocking misuse of manpower," he said.

"The lack of opportunity for gainful employment on the part of 10,000,000 able-bodied persons marks our state of economic civilization as primitive and crude.

"In spite of ballyhoo, it should be recalled that it is gross mismanagement to permit millions to suffer from the paradox of plenty.

"Under better planned conditions, technological super-efficiency will be translated into systematic leisure of the gainfully employed rather than in wholesale unemployment.

"The immediate disposition is to follow half measures and to divide the available work though temporarily shortening the work day and the work week. Even this compromise is better than widespread unemployment, but the scheme of sharing jobs tends to break down living standards.

"If the present capitalization of great corporations is to be validated, business must be predicated on a rising standard of living rather than on a declining standard."

FIRE INSURANCE SHOWN TO GET $2 FOR EVERY $1 PAID INSURED

Washington, Sept. 15. — Warning that campaigns for restriction of government expenditures must not be permitted to proceed to the point of destroying essential services, was issued in trade union circles here this week. The campaign of the new National Economy league is cited.

"The program of those seeking tremendous reductions is well worth watching," said one of labor's experts in this field.

"According to some of the campaigners for reduction, labor departments or bureaus and essential inspection services and services for enforcement of factory and safety laws should be abolished. The health and safety of men, women and children in factories is essential.

"We might suggest to those who seek substantial reductions in taxation that they consider the cost to the taxpayers of the activities of those pompous gentlemen who operate legitimate rackets, which, in substance, levy a large tribute—indirect taxation—on the American people and American industries.

"Recent compilations of the cost of fire insurance for the last ten years, 1922 to 1931, inclusive, show that we have paid some six billions of dollars to fire insurance companies, of which some three billions of dollars were expended for losses.

"It is hardly believable that the American people can be expected to continue to contribute $2 in fire insurance rates for each dollar the fire insuance companies pay out in losses.

"It is the small industries, the home owners, the farmers and the city dwellers — industrial workers — who pay the exorbitant fire insurance rates which make up the three billions of dollars the fire insurance companies spent during the past ten years for overhead expenses and commissions.

"A 50 per cent expense for overhead for that which is a necessity of life is well worth looking into on the part of those who claim they wish to eliminate waste and reduce unnecessary costs."

MORE ABOUT "TAX-DODGERS"

the league, declares the body has not advocated a flat reduction of taxes to the amount of 25 per cent., nor has it worked for a reduction of the school term or otherwise attempted to interfere with the proper functioning of the various governmental activities. Regret has been expressed that we "did not have the facts" before passing the resolution.

Now let's talk about the facts. The only direct reference to the Taxpayers' league was in the preamble to the resolution, which read:

"It has been called to our attention, through press reports, that a new organization, known as the Taxpayers' league, and certain candidates in the recent primary elections, have been advocating a 25 per cent. reduction in taxes for the city of Chattanooga."

Statements have been repeatedly published in the daily press that one Gilbert, a sort of business agent for the Tennessee Manufacturers' union, is engaged in organizing taxpayers' leagues over the state, with the avowed intention of reducing taxes "25 per cent. or more." Only this week the Times quoted Gilbert as stating 168 of these organizations had been formed in Tennessee, and "people with pet hobbies will have to give in," he is quoted as saying, "to the tune of 25 per cent. or more." And, we must "cut government expenses, with a corresponding reduction in taxes."

The following is taken verbatim from a story in the Times: "The Taxpayers' league, fostered by the Tennessee Manufacturers' association, is encouraging the organization of county units, and one has been organized in Chattanooga, headed by Fred Arn."

Under date of July 18 a letter signed by Gilbert was sent to legislative candidates, seeking to pledge them to a "declaration of principles" alleged to "express the views of 150 organizations," and containing the following: "That no candidate ought to be elected to public office in city, county, state or nation, who has not pledged himself definitely to do all within his power to reduce the tax burden of the people not less than 25 per cent. below the present level."

Under date of Aug. 19 legislative candidates received the following query signed by Mr. Arn: "I am instructed by the directors of the Hamilton County Taxpayers' league to inquire of you, as well as all other candidates for the legislature, whether you are under any kind of pledge or promise to any person or persons which would hinder you in bringing about any reduction in salaries or other items entering into the cost of the city and county governments."

In view of all the above, we were certainly justified in the statement that "we learn by press reports" that the Taxpayers' league is advocating a 25 per cent. reduction. However, officers of the league have denied the allegation, and that's that.

Members of the league have personally protested against what they apparently understood was a blanket charge that the league was composed of tax-dodgers and was interfering with the proper functioning of government. In this regard we feel that it is hardly necessary to deny that the resolution contemplated any such broad charge. We are not so foolish as to claim all members of the Taxpayers' league are tax-dodgers, although, on the other hand, we would not care to sponsor the statement that none of them are. The resolution recited that "Demand for reduction in the tax rate comes largely from the bigger property owners who are not now paying and never have paid their just proportionate share of taxes."

We have no apology to make for that statement.

We reiterate that "it appears that these self-constituted saviors of our county and city in these times of distress and woe invariably center their attacks on incomes of the small wage-earner and on the public school system," and although the statement was not intended to apply to the Taxpayers' league as a body, if the shoe fits any member he will know it and may wear it. We stand by the sentiment expressed in the resolution declaring "We deplore, resent and denounce any and all efforts to interfere with the proper functioning of our public school system for a full nine-months term," as well as the "activities of professional tax reformers and tax-dodgers, so far as their program works to interfere with the proper functioning of our governmental departments."

Of course, we are not infallible—in fact, make many mistakes—but we believe our record for intelligent consideration of matters which affect the welfare of the masses is at least passing fair. In any event, we shall continue to raise our voices against what we consider unjust attacks on our institutions and on the standards of American working men and women, giving full credit to the position of those who honestly differ with us, but asking and giving no quarter to those whose selfishness has blinded them to the aspirations and needs of people less fortunately situated.

Go to your Union Meetings

Don't say you are too tired; the weather is bad; or there is too much quibbling and "hot air" to interest me.

Every time you miss a meeting and leave it to the other fellow to look out for your interest, you are doing an injustice both to yourself and your organization.

Your views on especially vital subjects should be represented in discussion and by vote, and the only way for this to be done is for you to be at your union meeting.

You are responsible for the good and welfare of your organization, and non-attendance of union meetings on your part is not excuse enough for you to voice your opinion after a measure has been passed. It is then time for you to concur in what has been done and work in harmony with the officers and other members of your union.

Go to your union meetings regularly and induce others to do the same, because one important thing to remember is the meaning of the slogan:

"United we stand, Divided we fall."

RAILROAD EXECUTIVES PLAN DRASTIC WAGE CUT

Railway Labor Board Procedure Will Be Used to Force 20 Per Cent. Pay Reduction on Over 1,000,000 Railway Employes—Cost-of-Living Wage Theory Set Up to Justify Slash.

New York, Sept. 15.—John G. Walber, vice-president of the New York Central Railroad company, announced that nine executives representing all the major railroads were preparing the machinery by which railroad managers hope to compel more than 1,000,000 railroad employes to accept a 20 per cent reduction in the existing basic wage scales.

It was authoritatively reported that the railway executives will not sponsor joint meetings with the workers' representatives to endeavor to reach a settlement of the controversy, which was done early this year when the railway employes organizations voluntarily accepted a 10 per cent cut. This voluntary reduction will not be effective after Feb. 1, 1933, when the agreement expires.

Instead of seeking to adjust the matter by conciliation with representatives of the railway labor organizations, the executives decided to seek the 20 per cent reduction through the railway labor act, under which, if all the provisions are applied, at least 150 days will elapse from the date of filing the notice before the issue is finalized.

Procedure Under Railway Labor Act.

Under the provisions of the railway labor act the following are the stages of action which may ensue in arriving at a settlement:

1. Notice of the wage reductions sought must be posted by the management for at least thirty days.

2. At the expiration of this limit joint conferences between agents of both sides may be resorted to in an effort to arrive at an amicable solution. If this fails

3. A board of mediation may be convened of impartial judges which will endeavor to present a solution agreeable to both sides. Thirty days after conclusion of their efforts, this failing,

4. Arbitration may be requested by one group and, if agreed to by the other, the judgments of the arbitrators are considered legally binding.

5. Should arbitration be avoided, an emergency board may be created by the president of the United States to deal with the problem. There is no legal compulsion on either side to accept the findings of such a board, but

6. The findings of the emergency board are considered effective in cementing public opinion in favor of one side or the other, it being the theory that public pressure would force acceptance of the board's decision. If this fails, the workers are at liberty to strike, although both sides are prevented from moving until an interim of thirty days lapses after the findings of the emergency board have been reported to the president.

Cost-of-Living Wages.

The main work of committee of nine was said to be preparing the formal notice which must be filed by the railway executives stating their intention of seeking the wage cut under the railway labor act, and to arrange for the preparation of data to fortify the wage cut proposal. It was understood that the major contention would be that the cost of living has dropped more than 20 per cent while basic railroad wage rates have been maintained.

Wagner Asks Why Mills Holds Back Work Program

New York, Sept. 15.—Undue delay in putting a $322,000,000 government building program into action is charged by United States Senator Robert F. Wagner in a letter to Secretary of the Treasury Ogden Mills at Washington. Senator Wagner wrote:

"Under date of July 30 I inquired of you concerning the progress made under the relief and construction act in making employment available by means of its $322,000,000 federal construction program. I addressed similar inquiries to the other executive officers who are charged under that law with the execution of some portion of the construction program.

"Under date of Aug. 8 you very kindly wrote me giving me your assurance that there would be no undue delay in the determination of the places where construction was recommended and in the certification respecting availability of funds for the prosecution of the program. I accepted your assurance.

"To date, however, as far as I am aware, work has not yet begun upon the projects enumerated in the relief and construction act. Forty-two days have already elapsed since congress passed that law. It seems to me that undue delay has already been suffered.

"The delay in your certifying that funds are available or can be obtained on reasonable terms is holding up not only that portion of the program which is in the control of the secretary of the treasury, but also projects in charge of other departments, altogether to a total of $186,000,000, which would go a long way in fostering a revival of business and in providing the desperately needed employment. To illustrate what I have in mind I quote from a letter from the secretary of war wherein he says: 'The war department is prepared to approve the actual allotment of funds to river and harbor and flood-control projects as soon as the decision is made as to the availability of the funds.'

"In my judgment the departments are in error in holding up the work until the secretary of the treasury issues his certificate. The plain meaning of the law is that the work shall go forward unless 'the secretary of the treasury certifies to the president that the amount necessary for such expenditure is not available and cannot be obtained upon reasonable terms.' Be that as it may, it is nonetheless a fact that the departments are waiting for the certificate of the secretary of the treasury at a time when the utmost speed in launching the work is vital.

"The American people today are in a mood which is very conducive to a return of confidence. The renewal of confidence, however, can only be safely built upon a solid foundation of employment. If the employment opportunities provided by the relief and construction act are frittered away you will find, I fear, that the present signs of recovery may prove a delusion.

"Those of us who had a part in the drafting of the relief and construction act were given every assurance by the executive departments that the designated projects were ready to go forward. Additional means for expedition were provided in the act itself, all for the single purpose of giving an immediate impulse to business and employment. I therefore take the liberty to urge you to take immediate action to release the construction program so that it may perform the salutary work for which it was intended."

Secretary Mills has responded that the program will be launched as soon as the money can be found. He said that estimates have been requested from the departments which are to undertake building work and that as soon as they are received a ruling will be made. He said that, as he reads the law, his approval is necessary, which centers responsibility definitely, when the estimates reach his office.

WHAT is the ? value of TELEPHONE SERVICE

"We wish to express our appreciation for the superservice rendered us Wednesday when we burdened your exchange with the task of calling every telephone in the city . ." writes a business man.

"Please accept our thanks for the prompt service during the illness of our little boy," says a parent.

JUST WHAT is the value of telephone service? Does it consist of making it easy to settle emergency problems, or is it in the day-after-day succession of important details common to every business and household?

Probably the answer is that both in emergencies and in the daily routine the telephone plays an essential part, saving time—getting business—arranging for the family's social affairs—rendering service.

Undoubtedly that is why so many folks agree that the value of telephone service so greatly outweighs the cost that it really doesn't pay to try to do without it.

Tennessee Unionists Called to Conference On Political Situation

State Committee Asks "Pow-Wow" at Nashville Wednesday.

Economic Conditions Make United Action on Political Field More Important Than Ever, Says Aymon. Local Unions to Be Represented at Extraordinary Session at State Capital.

Representatives of organized labor throughout the state will gather at Nashville next Wednesday, in response to a call from the nonpartisan political committee of the Tennessee Federation of Labor and the Railroad Brotherhoods, to consider in all its aspects the political situation in nation, state and counties.

According to Paul Aymon, president of the state federation and a member of the committee, economic conditions have accentuated the importance of labor's political action, and every effort will be made to bring the best thought of the state's organized workers into the conference, so that united and intelligent action will be assured.

While the committee, which consists of three executive officers of the state federation and the legislative chairman of each of the great brotherhoods, is charged with the duty of "keeping tabs" on office holders and office seekers and recommending action to the rank and file, the unusual importance of this year's elections, Mr. Aymon said, was considered as justifying the calling of a conference at which each local union, central body and railroad lodge may participate.

Several local unions have already appointed their representatives, and it is believed a large number from Chattanooga will attend the one-day session, which will be held at the Labor Temple.

Call for the conference is signed by H. V. Reid, chairman, representing the B. of L. F. and E.; David Hanly, Tennessee Federation of Labor; Paul Aymon, Tennessee Federation of Labor; J. A. Chrisman, B. of L. E.; W. E. Jacobs, O. R. C., and W. E. Cheek, Tennessee Federation of Labor.

It follows:

"The State Nonpartisan Political Committee of the Tennessee Federation of Labor and the Transportation Brotherhoods herewith issues a call for a conference to be held at the Labor Temple in Nashville, Tenn., 10:00 o'clock a.m., Wednesday, Sept. 28, 1932.

"The purpose of this conference is to consider the political situation in this state as it affects the organized workers. Also to indorse candidates for public office to be voted for at the general election to be held on Tuesday, Nov. 8, 1932.

"The basis of representation to this conference shall be as follows: Local unions affiliated with the Tennessee Federation of Labor, one delegate; central bodies and District No. 19, United Mine Workers of America, three delegates; local lodges of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen, Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen and the Order of Railway Conductors, one delegate.

"Organizations sending delegates to this conference shall furnish each with a letter signed by the proper officers with the seal of the organization showing that he is the duly accredited delegate. This letter will be presented to Secretary W. E. Cheek.

"It is desired to have a large representation of the organized workers of Tennessee at this conference. Please see that your organization is represented. The conference will be in session one day.

BONITA 'BATTLE' ENDS; PICTURE HOUSE NOW 100 PER CENT UNION

Officials of Local 259 Thank Public for Generous Support. Agreement Signed With Bijou Operating Company—Negotiations Under Way With Other Exhibitors, With Indications of Satisfactory Outcome.

The Bonita theater, opened some two weeks ago as a non-union picture house, Wednesday morning became a "100 per cent. union" show-place, with the recommendation of organized labor, through officers of Local 259, Projectionists, and with three members of the local in charge of the machines.

The short "battle" with the Bonita demonstrated again the fine spirit of cooperation with organized labor for which the Chattanooga public has become noted, particularly during the depression. The struggle was clean and above-board, and it is said there are absolutely no "sore spots" to heal.

The Bonita has been taken over by the Bijou operating company, and announcement is made that new contracts have been signed for the coming year, which cover operation of both the Bijou and the Bonita. Negotiations for the agreement were said to have been thoroughly friendly, and all parties to the pact were declared absolutely satisfied with its provisions. These two houses, it was added, have booked some outstanding programs for the fall and winter months, and the public was urged to patronize them freely.

Negotiations were under way Thursday for a new agreement with the Independent Theaters, operating the American, Cameo, Park, Rivoli and Ritz theaters, and it was believed certain that slight "differences" would be ironed out without serious disagreement and to the satisfaction of all concerned.

Negotiations are also under way with new officials of the operating company which has assumed management of the Publix chain in Chattanooga, including the Tivoli, Rialto and State. Local 259 has offered similar concessions to this corporation to those granted the locally owned and operated houses.

Spokesmen for Local 259 Thursday asked The Labor World to express heartfelt appreciation of all the members to their friends in the labor movement and the public generally for support given them in their brief "argument" with the Bonita management.

"It is very gratifying," said an official of the union, "to know that our fellow working men and women are sympathetic with our efforts to maintain standards which we have built over a period of years, and which have cost us much in time, money and effort. But it is even more gratifying to know that we have the support of thousands of local citizens who have no direct connection with the labor movement. We have endeavored to conduct our business at all times with due regard for the interests of our employers, the theater-going public and our members, and we pledge a continuation of that policy."

Organized Workers Hold Standards As Depression Reigns

Statistics Prove Worth of United Defense by American Toilers.

Here Are Figures Revealing Wage Record Since 1929, Showing Disappearance of Increases and Effects of Reduction Policies on Masses—Unions Make Some Advances in Face of Unprecedented Assaults.

By GILBERT E. HYATT

Are we "coming out of it?" People seem to be thinking so in increasing numbers. For the first time in several moons, optimism is vocal. Insofar as the public state of mind influences business and industrial operations, this is a good thing. It should be encouraged.

Without question, we have progressed from the first reactions—"It just isn't so," and "It will not last long," through stunned bewilderment to realization that only determined and united effort will bring recovery.

Most encouraging of all is a visibly growing agreement that all efforts at rehabilitation are effective in the degree to which they expand consumer buying power. Pay checks and revived confidence are basic requirements.

Intelligent effort must be based on knowledge of the facts. Here are some of them, the result of search through reports gathered monthly by the U. S. Bureau of Labor Statistics from an increasing number of establishments as to the number of employes, the average weekly payrolls and, from such as would furnish the information, changes in wage scales.

These reports come from as many as 64,000 establishments, including 11,000 to 15,000 manufacturing plants, and approximately 12,000 public utilities, with the remainder in bituminous and anthracite coal mining, metalliferous mining, petroleum production, wholesale and retail trade, hotels, canning and preserving, laundries, and dyeing and cleaning.

Note that, in Table I, wage increases have, up to the last report for July, practically disappeared from the picture and that wage cuts have steadily mounted in number of wage schedules affected and in number of workers.

In November, 1929, approximately 35,000 establishments employed over 5,000,000 workers and paid them $133,785,694 for an average week. In July, 1932, 64,000 establishments employed almost 950,000 fewer workers and paid them $54,500,000 less per week. The average weekly wage, in the interval, shrank from $26.50 to $19.30. Department of Commerce figures factory weekly earnings as $15.63 in July, 1932, as compared to $22.34 in July, 1931.

It should be remembered that these employing establishments are those which kept going. They do not include railroad employment in which a ten per cent deduction in wage rates was made. Neither do they indicate the fact that 1,730,840 were employed in Class I railroads on September 15, 1929, and 1,033,887 on June 15, 1932. Wage figures for the same months compare as $239,975,829 and $119,608,254, respectively. In other words, 700,000 fewer workers and a reduction of more than 50 per cent in total payroll.

Let's close on a note of optimism: The latest bulletin of the Bureau of Labor's statistics on "Union Scales of Wages and Hours of Labor" shows that, as of May 15, 1931, after about a year and one-half of steadily declining employment, organized labor had been able to preserve its standards and even to make advances. Information collected from 72 trade unions totaling 705,332 members showed an increase of .04 per cent per hour in hourly wage rates and a decrease of .04 per cent in full-time hours per week.

Samuel T. Briggs Goes to Reward

Samuel T. Briggs, 88, father of T. N. Briggs, well-known official of Barbers' Local 415, died Friday, Sept. 16, at 7 p.m., and funeral services were held Sunday at Poplar Springs, conducted by Revs. Gates, Trent and Harvey.

Mr. Briggs was a veteran of the Civil war, having fought on the Union side as a member of Company H, Third Tennessee infantry. He is survived by a widow, six sons and two daughters, as well as thirty grandchildren and forty great-grandchildren. Many beautiful floral tributes attested the esteem in which deceased was held by friends and neighbors.

The Labor World joins a host of sorrowing friends in extending to Brother "Tom" Briggs and other surviving relatives sincere condolences.

COAL WAGE PARLEY MAY END IN ARBITRATION

New York City.—With anthracite wage conferences continuing in session here, indications are that the discussions will continue until Oct. 6, and that then the arbitration clause in the wage agreement will be invoked. The contract between the miners and the mine owners runs until 1936, but wage rates may be discussed annually. The mine owners have not reached the point in these discussions of asking for a definite percentage of reduction, but they are working in that direction.

One significant development is the trend of owner opinion toward the union viewpoint on freight rates and there may be a joining of forces to readjust the whole ancient freight rate structure, so that a genuine relief can be passed along to the consumer, reclaiming, it is believed, much of the lost market for anthracite.

Meanwhile 30,000 anthracite miners are idle, with others working three and four days each two weeks.

ROBINS MYSTERY DEEPENS.

Disappearance days ago of Col. Raymond Robins, dry and advocate of soviet recognition, deepens with shattering reports that he was seen in Chicago after his disappearance. Col. Robins was well known to large numbers of trade unionists.

MUSICIANS ARE TOLD BENEFITS ORGANIZATION

Cohn and Cuthbert Address Get-Together Meeting.

RESULTS PLEASE CHAIRMAN MAHONEY

Trades Council Secretary Reviews Accomplishments of Labor Movement.

Officials of Chattanooga Musical society, Local No. 80, were highly pleased with the success of their first get-together and smoker, held at the Memorial auditorium last Friday night. According to John T. Mahoney, chairman of the committee on arrangements, splendid results were obtained from this effort to create a closer feeling and mutual desire for helpfulness among the musicians of the city. Included in the list of invited guests were a number of local men and women not affiliated with the organization, and speakers reviewed the progress of various branches of the organized labor movement, with particular reference to that of musicians.

Declaring that a good many had no conception of the responsibilities which trades unionism embraced, Mr. Mahoney opened the meeting with an introduction of T. R. Cuthbert, secretary of Chattanooga Trades and Labor council, who had been requested to present to those present "a bit of quiet boasting" of some of the accomplishments of trades unionism in our social and economic order of life.

After Mr. Cuthbert's word picture of unionism, Lester Cohn, vice-president of Local No. 80, presented to those not yet affiliated a more intimate and technical discussion concerning the necessity for the tooters and crooners banding together for mutual welfare. Mr. Cohn recalled the "good old days" when the pro-

Machinists, 1450, Lose Valued Member

Lodge 1450, Machinists, lost a valued and respected member last Sunday morning at 9:30, when Horace R. Burger died suddenly at his home, 3600 Oakland Terrace. Mr. Burger had been employed by the Southern railway in this city for many years, during all of which time he was a member in good standing of Lodge 1450.

Mr. Burger was a native of Chattanooga, having been born here May 8, 1878, and had spent his entire life here. He is survived by his widow; a son, Jack Burger, and a daughter, Martha West Burger; his mother, Mrs. W. S. Burger, and a grandson, Wayne Burger, of this city; two brothers, Charles, of this city, and Hugh, of Los Angeles, Cal.; three sisters, Mrs. Ada Mulkey, of Los Angeles; Mrs. B. S. Smith, of this city, and Mrs. J. S. Loyd, of Chickamauga, Ga. He was a member of the Baptist church.

Funeral services were held from the Northside Baptist church Tuesday morning at 10:30, with the Revs. R. W. Selman and G. W. McClure officiating. Interment followed in Chattanooga Memorial park, and the following nephews served as pallbearers: Alton Stanfield, Wayne Mulkey, Harry and Edwin Lyle, Frank Smith and Norman Burger. Honorary pallbearers were James C. Rogers, C. R. Canfield, Z. A. McCrary, Louie Roberts, Thomas Hall, Sam E. Jones, J. E. Biles and Harry Paschal.

The Labor World speaks for our entire movement in offering heartfelt condolences to the bereaved relatives of Brother Burger.

Titmarsh Improves After Long Illness

J. P. Titmarsh, veteran member of Lodge 1450, Machinists, is reported as improving at his home, 750 Oak street, from a long illness. Mr. Titmarsh was said to be almost completely recovered, although it may yet be some time before he fully regains his usual strength. Many friends among the railroad workers and others will be glad to welcome the "old-timer" back to his usual activities.

Hordes of Jobless Boys Tramp Highways Looking for Work, Children's Bureau Says

Washington, Sept. 22.—Growing hordes of jobless boys are tramping the highways and riding freight trains throughout the United States in search of work, according to a study by the children's bureau of the department of labor.

The study covers boys under 21 years of age. Many of them have attended college or high school. Local employers refuse to give them jobs. Local authorities do not institute public works to employ them. In many instances support from the family provided by relief agencies is wholly inadequate to feed all the children. So the older boys take to the field in search of work.

The study points out that most of the communities through which the boys pass are no longer able to meet the needs of their own unemployed properly and so allow the transients to remain but twenty-four hours. "Move on! Move on!" cry the authorities in every town.

Dr. A. W. McMillen, associate professor in the graduate school of social service administration at the University of Chicago, who made the investigation on which the children's bureau based its study, concentrated his efforts in the southwest from March to June. He found the boys had swarmed to that region to escape cold weather and to look for seasonal work in the cotton fields, lettuce gardens and canteloupe patches.

He found them hitch-hiking and riding freight cars, cooking their crude meals in the "jungles" about railroad yards, sleeping on jail floors, and then moving on because municipal authorities refused to help them.

To remedy the situation Prof. McMillen recommended that life in their home towns be made more attractive for the boys by various sorts of community activities in vocational education, recreation and gymnastics. To provide for the boys already on the road he urged a national transient service fund to aid communities who are getting "more than their normal share of vagrants" and labor camps with forestry activities and similar work for the transient jobless who have no homes.

"Along the route of the Southern Pacific railroad," Prof. McMillen said, "many small towns in Texas, New Mexico and Arizona reported the passing of about 200 men and boys daily during the winter and spring. This railroad from September to April recorded almost 417,000 trespassers ejected on its 9,130 miles of track. In the month of May it was estimated that 1,500 transients per day rode the freights through Kansas City and that from 20 to 25 per cent of these were boys.

"Boys from New England and the north central states were found in Washington, D. C., and farther south. During the six months ending in April in the District of Columbia, for instance, approximately 2,600 boys were known to be transients. In Memphis, Tenn., from September to March 3,000 transient boys were on their way."

New York Printers Win Strike For The Union Shop

Financial Chronicle Gives Up "Open-Shop" Plan After Two Weeks' Fight With Union Solidarity.

New York, Sept. 2[illegible]. After a two weeks' attempt to operate with non-union printers, the New York Financial Chronicle returned to the union fold.

In an article entitled "Financial Chronicle Tries 'Open Shop' and Returns to Union Operation After Costly Experiment," the Monthly Bulletin of New York Typographical Union No. 6 gives the following account of the union's victory:

"The New York Financial Chronicle, one of the leading banking periodicals of the country, notified its composing room employes of its determination to carry on thenceforth on an 'open-shop' basis.

"The management, apparently, was led to the belief that it could operate successfully its composing room as a nonunion shop because of the large number of replies received from help-wanted ads.

"The promoters of the plan had advertised in daily papers for operators and compositors to work under 'open-shop' conditions. Supplementing these replies were many applications made directly to the nonunionist who had been placed in the position of superintendent.

"Immediately upon being informed of the firm's decision, President Hewson leased an assembly room in the old Tribune building on Nassau street, a block from the Financial Chronicle office, and this became 'strike' headquarters for the members of the force, as well as the 'base of operations.'

"The president selected Organizer Beach to handle the situation. The latter, a new man on a new job, did his work in a highly proficient manner, conducting a campaign to reclaim the paper that has redounded to the credit of himself and the union.

"The Chronicle, a weekly publication, had a force of forty-two men and women—thirty-eight members of No. 6 and four unattached monotype 'runners'—in its composing-room staff when it made its 'open-shop' declaration. Every one of the staff, including the 'runners,' declined the Chronicle's invitation to remain in its employ under the nonunion conditions.

"For two weeks the Chronicle staggered along under the 'open-shop' arrangements, and each issue was over forty-eight hours late, a serious matter for the paper, in view of its financial reports and statistics. During this period, several conferences were held with the members of the firm by President Hewson, Organizers Beach and Fahey. Subsequently the chief owner indicated a willingness to meet the former. According to President Hewson and Mr. Beach met with Mr. Jacob Seibert, and this conference resulted in an agreement whereby every one of the displaced employes were returned the next morning, without prejudice to the positions formerly held by them.

"The difficulty was one of the most important occurrences in printing trade circles in many years, and its progress and conclusion created considerable interest.

"The thorough unionism displayed by Chairman Edgar and the members of the Chronicle chapel, and the assistance they gave President Hewson, Organizer Beach and Organizer Fahey (who had laid preliminary plans before the actual break came) is recognized and appreciated. So, too, is the work of other members who directly co-operated with Mr. Beach.

"The two weeks' campaign to bring the Financial Chronicle back to the union fold was clean-cut and honorably conducted. Thus the union's victory is the more pronounced!"

Strange Facts Are These

While 11,000,000 are idle, 2,000,000 New Yorkers were able to leave the city for holidays over Labor Day. On Labor Day 70,000 Americans paid an average of $1.25 to see a Yankee stadium doubleheader. On that same day 38,000 automobiles crossed Washington bridge over the Hudson.

During August 5,198 merchandise buyers, the largest number in three years, registered at New York hotels. In August listed stocks had a theoretical gain of more than seven billion dollars over the low mark, a rise of 77.7 per cent in two months.

What is the meaning of these interesting facts? Can one portion of the people be fairly prosperous, with another portion destitute? The answer is, Yes.

But do the strange facts indicate rising barometer pressure in business? Let each his answer write.

Why Not Cost-of-Living Interest?

The committee of railroad executives charged with attempting to force a 20 per cent. wage cut on over one million railroad employes emphasize the reduction in the cost of living since 1929 as justification for the cut. The Railway Age, which always speaks for owners of railway securities, also gives elaborate statistics in support of the cost-of-living wage theory.

Wages are the price the railway executives pay railway employes for the use of their labor power in the manufacture of railway transportation which the railway executives sell to the public.

The cost of living is the price which the railway workers pay for the food, clothing, shelter and other necessaries required to keep them and their families alive.

The price which railway employers pay railway workers for their mental skill and physical strength in the manufacture of railway transportation is in no sense related to the price which the railway workers pay for their food, clothing and shelter.

But if the railway executives persist in their attempts to impose a 20 per cent. wage cut on railway employes because the cost of living is in some cases lower than formerly, they should have been consistent and applied the same principle to the other parties in railway transportation.

There are the bond owners. Interest is the price which the railway executives pay the railroad bond owners for the use of their money.

If the railway workers' cost of living has been reduced, it cannot be denied that the railway bond owners' cost of living has also been reduced. But the railway executives have not called on the bond owners to contribute this reduction in living costs toward keeping the railways out of receiverships.

According to Moody's Manual of Railroad Securities there are about twelve billion dollars of railroad bonds outstanding with an average interest rate of five per cent. This amounts to around six hundred million dollars interest annually.

A 20 per cent. cost-of-living reduction in the interest rate would get the railroad executives nearly one hundred and twenty million dollars a year. It is a possible economy worth considering.

Cost-of-living wages is a vicious theory. Organized labor should not tolerate it.

The illogical thing is that industrial executives should overlook the bond owners in the cost-of-living standard and undertake to limit its application to the price they pay for the labor power of human beings.

Conference on Unemployment

There is no escaping the problem of unemployment that has been brought about by the revolutionary introduction of labor-displacing machinery and processes.

Nation-wide conferences between representatives of organized labor and organized industry should be able to reach a solution of the problem.

This view was recently expressed by Ernest Bevin, secretary of the British Transport and General Workers Union. In an address at the annual meeting of the National Joint Industrial Council for the Flour Milling Industry Mr. Bevin said:

> I feel that we have got to consider a plan for sharing leisure as well as sharing labor.
>
> It is wrong to have an idle class at either end of the social scale; it is a burden on the community as well as demoralizing to the people concerned.
>
> The extraordinary international exchange difficulties which may be accentuating our unemployment problem at the moment will pass; but with the development and intensification of output, the growth of horsepower, the coming of electricity and other various changes, unemployment is bound to be with us, whatever the international settlement is going to be, and to an extent that will be disastrous to civilization itself.
> I have not considered this in the sense of putting forward a demand.
>
> I do not believe that this angle of the problem of how labor should be organized in industry should be dealt with from the point of view of mere demand and resistance; it ought to be scientifically investigated, and it is from that angle I suggest the matter ought, on economic and social grounds, to receive the consideration of the flour milling industry.
> If we could get industries that employ five or six million people in this country to consider these questions of reduction of labor, and other things in a scientific way, we should be able to increase the number of workers in employment by half-a-million at least, without any injury to industry and without increasing the cost of production in the slightest degree.

For months the American Federation of Labor has urged the President of the United States to convene a national conference of representatives of labor and industry to consider the questions mentioned by Mr. Bevin.

The American Federation of Labor still believes that such a conference should be able to reach an agreement for the inauguration of a reasonable plan for providing jobs for all the 11,000,000 now unemployed by reducing the length of the work week and work day. The federation also believes that such a conference would be able to elaborate policies for the permanent employment of all the workers along with the continued introduction of labor-saving machinery.

So far the President's conferences have been limited to the representatives of those who employ the workers. Such conferences have not been able and will not be able to solve the great problem of unemployment. It is the workers who directly suffer from unemployment. Their representatives should be on every board that considers the question.

"Out-of-Line" Wages

The editor of the New York Journal of Commerce is worried over the possible detrimental effect on employers of the alleged high wages which the organized workers in certain industries have maintained despite the lower rates which employers have forced on the workers in unorganized industries.

Few people take the position that the wages of relatively high-paid workers should be reduced to the low rates paid where the workers are denied the right to organize for their protection and are consequently treated as economic slaves. But that seems to be the position of the Journal of Commerce editor. Listen to his contribution to the literature of wages:

> "The philosophy of high wages cannot logically be invoked as a reason for maintaining in any one industry wage scales which are out of line with those prevalent in other industries * * *"

In making this statement the editor of the Journal of Commerce evidently means that the lowest wages paid in any industry should be ascertained and then the higher rates in other industries should be slashed to bring them into line with the pay of the lowest wage group.

Inasmuch as the Journal of Commerce editor invokes logic in favor of reducing all wages to the lowest known standard, why not apply the same principle to dividends with a statement something like this:

> "The philosophy of high dividends cannot logically be invoked as a reason for maintaining in any one industry dividend scales which are out of line with those prevalent in other industries."

Take, for instance, the American Telephone and Telegraph company. For a number of years prior to 1929 the company paid nine dollars in dividends a share annually. Stockholders in other industries have had their dividends drastically reduced during the depression, but the stockholders of this company have maintained the nine-dollar rate.

Clearly the dividend rate of the American Telephone and Telegraph company is very much "out of line" with the dividend rates in the corporations of other industries. Why not find the lowest dividend rate paid in any industry and then bring the A. T. & T. rate into line by cutting it to five, four, three, two or even one dollar a share?

Surely the editor of the Journal of Commerce will not maintain that what he considers logical philosophy in the consideration of wages becomes illogical philosophy in the consideration of dividends.

Speeding Up Construction

Building trades will look hopefully for the results of the president's order to speed up construction running to a total of some $750,000,000, of which $200,000,000 was contained in the emergency relief act for public buildings. The speeding up will be in the realm of public buildings, river and harbor work and flood control work long since authorized.

The president announces that he has ordered this speeding up as a means of further aiding in the war on unemployment and the secretary of the treasury states that the money is available.

If the speed-up program is followed with vigor some of the work will be available almost at once, and almost all of it will be available before winter sets in. It will make some dent in unemployment, but a great deal more is needed. However, if other lines are recovering, as indications somewhat reveal them to be doing, the government's program may be a very material element in relieving distress this winter.

AS THE WORKER SEES HIS WORLD

Magnus W. Alexander, long head of the National Industrial conference board, non-union employers' organization, is dead at 62, result of a heart attack. No successor has been named.

Unemployed stormed a Toledo A. & P. store, taking hundreds of dollars worth of groceries.

Cleveland, O., printers went on a five-day schedule Sept. 5, the union having voted it into operation, 326 to 274.

Autumn grain sowing in Russia is reported by the soviets about half the acreage sown at this time last year, which may or may not be true.

July to August period brought an employment gain of 2.9 per cent in New York state, with factory pay rolls climbing 3.7 per cent.

Immigration entries for July were 96 per cent below the quotas for the month. Only 633 visas were issued, out of a possible total of 14,838, says the state department.

Dictator Machada, Cuba, has liberated eighty-four political prisoners, of whom ten are women. It is said more will be liberated. Some of those now free had been on the Isle of Pines more than a year, held without trial.

Union miners are at work today in Indiana under a new scale, just signed, providing for a basic wage of $4.57½, the contract running three years. The union took this scale for three years in preference to a $5 scale for one year.

LABOR QUERIES

Q.—What should be done when it is suspected that an organization calling itself a union is communist?

A.—Communicate with the Central Body in your city, consult the state federation of labor or write to the American Federation of Labor.

Q.—Are labor papers permitted to use the seals of state federations and of the A. F. of L.?

A.—No. It was ordered by the A. F. of L. in 1914 that the use of seals should not be allowed and central body seals were included in the ruling. All organizations were instructed to collect any seals in use by papers. Moreover, no "official" list of papers is published by the A. F. of L., for reasons similar to the reasons actuating the federation in ordering stoppage for the use of seals. But this action merely strengthens legitimate papers.

LABOR PRAISES APPOINTMENT.

The Pennsylvania Federation of Labor, in a statement issued at Harrisburg, warmly commends appointment of Miss Charlotte Carr, deputy secretary of the department of labor and industry, to head the bureau of inspection in the same department, in addition to her own duties. Harry D. Immel, formerly head of the bureau of inspection, has been transferred to the highway department.

UTAH FEDERATION MEETS.

Utah State Federation of Labor condemned as cossackism the ousting of the bonus army from Washington, D. C. It adopted resolutions for formation of a political bloc of labor, veterans, farmers and teachers.

What Next!

A safety gasoline is being offered. It is not inflammable. Matches can be lighted and immersed in the fluid without ignition. Engines must be adjusted to its use.

There's now a new chemical treatment to render bituminous coal sootless, dustless, smokeless, clinkerless, yielding more heat units per dollar than coke.

UNION LABEL

What is the objection to union-labeled products?

There would appear to be some objection or else there would be greater general demand for them.

Why not go into this matter now? The time was never more propitious for cooperative effort to popularize union-labeled products. Unionists are usually willing enough to lend aid to efforts to create demand for the label representative of their own craft. Why neglect union-made products of other crafts? Other organized craftsmen are asked to see that your label is on what they purchase. Isn't it only fair to see that their labels are on what you buy?

The union label on products of any description is indisputable evidence the goods were made by union workers, in a union shop and under union conditions. This is the main point in their favor.

By purchasing union-made products with union-earned money unionists are aiding each other. If all union-earned money were spent only for union-made products there would be no enforced idleness among members of organized labor.

Argument is heard that union-labeled products are not easy to obtain. Why aren't they? It is idle to assert that dealers will refuse to stock union-made products if shown sufficient demand exists. Why not create that demand?

Once in a while unionists declare this or that nonunion product is better suited to their taste than union-made goods of a similar kind. Is taste a matter of principle? Isn't it a cultivated sense? Did the founders of organized labor consider taste when formulating the principles upon which the movement is predicated?

No unionist can justify his attitude of noncompliance or indifference unless and until he has exhausted all reasonable efforts to obtain for himself and his home products that bear the symbol of fair labor. There are, perhaps, times when a certain article is unobtainable, but a quest for it may arouse sufficient interest among dealers to make it easy to find the second time inquiry is made.

Labeled hats, shoes, cigarets and other goods are easily obtained in most sections simply because demand for them has been so great dealers have realized the wisdom of stocking them. The average merchant has slight regard for sentiment in business. He wants to handle goods that move. Move the first consignment for him and he will order the second at once.

A demand must first be created. And if organized labor does not create the demand for union-made products, who will?

United and consistent effort to create and maintain a demand for union-made products will lessen unemployment, increase wages and decrease working hours to the glory of the organized labor movement.

United Charged With Switching Huge Cash Fund

Big Retailer of Non - Union Cigars Also Said to Have Brought Clean-up to 'Insiders' on Cancellation of Leases.

New York City, Sept. 22.—Revelations of the methods of great corporate organizations are coming to the surface in relation to the receivership of the United Cigar Stores company, biggest retailer of non-union cigars.

Information coming to International Labor News Service is that the receiver, named Aug. 29, immediately canceled all store leases throughout the country. Almost immediately, it is said, these leases were renewed at a figure averaging 50 per cent of the original lease price.

In the ten days following the receivership the common stock described a downward and upward curve, with sales rising to tremendous proportions.

On the day before receivership the stock opened at $1.50, closing at $1, where it opened on Aug. 29, to close at three-fourths, with sales of 279,400 shares. On Aug. 30 the stock went down to one-half, with a movement of 76,800 shares. The price ranged around one-half to five-eighths continuously for more than a week, with heavy movements of stock continuing on the basis of 50 cent prices until about Sept. 5, when the price again moved back up to $1 and $1.25. Market observers declare that within the period of this fall and rise enormous fortunes were cleaned up, so that liquidation brought great sums, presumably to those who were "in the know."

Nor is that all. Cancellation of the leases is being opposed by landlords who contend the United is in a position to meet its obligations on the contract basis and that once a permanent trusteeship is established they will be without recourse. There are 1,000 leases in forty states, and the Iriving Trust company, nominated to be trustee, is preparing a report on each.

Hearings here have been given another sensation in the form of charges to the effect that prior to the bankruptcy the United transferred $2,000,000 in cash to a new Delaware corporation formed in March. These charges were made by counsel representing Pennsylvania creditors. It was charged the money was paid for stock in the new corporation and that this was but subterfuge to transfer the money out of the reach of creditors.

Helped By Cardui

Here's the true story of how Cardui helped Mrs. H. E. Dunaway, of McComb, Miss., as written by herself:

"I was sick and rather discouraged. I was so weak and thin, I was not able to do my work as it should be done. This made me fret a good deal, and did not help my condition.

"I had pains across my back and lower part of my body. My nights were spent in rolling from one side of the bed to the other, hoping I would soon go to sleep. Then when morning would come, I would be just as tired as when I went to bed. A neighbor, seeing how badly I felt, told me to try Cardui. After I had taken one bottle, I was much better. I kept on taking Cardui, and I was stronger and slept much better at night."

Calls on Hoover To Command Rail Wage Slash Halt

Tobin, President of Teamsters, Moves to Protect Membership by Demanding R. F. C. Loans Be Kept from Pay-Cutters.

New York City, Sept. 22.—Daniel J. Tobin, president of the International Brotherhood of Teamsters, Chauffeurs, Stablemen and Helpers, and chairman of the labor division, democratic national committee, in a statement issued here called upon the Hoover administration to use powers of the reconstruction finance corporation to arrest wage cutting by the railroads.

Tobin's organization, which includes railway express, chauffeurs and helpers, is one of those to be affected by the proposed 15 per cent railway wage reduction. The railroads own the Railway Express Agency, Inc.

"The administration can, fairly and legitimately, insist that the people's money shall not be used to finance corporations which seek to lower the living standard and purchasing power of the people," Mr. Tobin said. "President Hoover has declared in favor of wage maintenance and reduced working hours to spread employment. The railroads are pulling in the opposite direction and yet, with the banks and insurance companies, they are to have exclusive right to handouts by the R. F. C., which presumably is working to end the depression.

How Cuts Can Be Stopped.

"The demand of the railroads for a wage reduction of 15 per cent in addition to the 10 per cent taken from these workers last January—with promise of its restoration next February—affords Mr. Hoover a chance to prove that his wage and employment declarations have meant something more than lip service. By withholding loans from corporations, pursuing policies that in this emergency are anti-social and, broadly speaking, uneconomic, the R. F. C. could give force to the government's announced policy. By granting continued loans to the railroads in these circumstances the R. F. C. will be giving aid and comfort to the chief enemies of that policy.

"The railroads, as the nation's largest employing group, have already set a bad example of wage cutting. Furthermore, their consolidation plans threaten to increase unemployment enormously by reducing their labor requirements. If reduction of unemployment and broadening of the nation's purchasing power is the object of the administrtaion, then railroad leadership, including the banks, looms as the villain of the piece and certainly not deserving of government aid.

Started with Banks.

"And yet it has been the purpose of the Hoover administration to hand out millions to the banks, railroads and insurance companies, and to make them exclusive beenficiaries of government financial aid. A greater inconsistency could hardly be imagined.

"The influence compelling the wage-cutting policy of the railroads originated with the banks. Indeed, the movement was started at a conference of bankers who served demand on the railroads that the cut be made.

"There would be nothing of unfair coercion in insistence by the R. F. C. that the beneficiaries of their loans conform to government policy in the matter of wage maintenance. The funds of the R. F. C. are derived from the taxpayers on the assumption that they will be used to end the depression by reviving industry. This purpose cannot be served by aiding those who would increase poverty and joblessness.

May Become Pork Barrel.

"It has appeared from the beginning that the administration's aim has been to help business at the top, ignoring the generally accepted conclusion—voiced even by the president, himself—that depression relief can only come through increased purchasing power of the people. What good can come of stimulating industry with loans to produce merchandise when the present difficulties are admittedly due to overproduction?

"If the administration persists in financing corporations which are attacking the welfare of the workers it will be working to defeat its own announced purposes and the R. F. C. becomes the most gigantic pork barrel in history, perpetrated when the taxpayers and the people generally are confronting ruin.

"Here is the administration's chance to prove the sincerity of its declared wage and employment policies. Let the R. F. C. refuse to aid wage-cutting and job-destroying corporations until they reform their program to comport with national welfare."

AMERICAN LABOR IN FIGHTING SPIRIT, FRANKLIN DECLARES

Newcastle, Eng.—J. A. Franklin, fraternal delegate of the American Federation of Labor to the British Trades Union congress, told the congress that although the United States probably was suffering more severely from unemployment than Great Britain, the American labor movement was not discouraged and would continue its fight against the imposition of unfair conditions.

MORE ABOUT MUSICIANS

fession was an "art," and artists were not supposed to worry about making a living. Now, Mr. Cohn stated, organization makes possible fair competition and a nearer adequate recompense for the long years of preparation necessary for competence.

Secretary Cuthbert's peroration, although addressed to the musicians, can be taken to heart by any American citizen, and The Labor World is therefore presenting it to its readers:

This meeting tonight is for the purpose of allowing musicians of the city to become acquainted one with the other. Although it is sponsored by the Chattanooga Musical Society, which is affiliated with the American Federation of Labor, they have especially invited those musicians who are not yet organized. They want to rub elbows with you, talk a bit and enjoy the evening together. We feel that some of you are unorganized simply because you do not know us. It is not natural to expect you to affiliate with a movement while you are yet in ignorance of its aims and objectives —its accomplishments and proud history of achievement.

For that reason I am to give a sort of testimonial—a bit of quiet boasting, as it were—of what trades unionism of this city, state and nation has done, what it is doing, what we intend to do. I am a union man from birth. I was raised in a family of union people. It is only natural for me to be imbued with union principles. Yet, my unionism is not one of blind passion. I can sit down with you and give you cold, deliberate reasons why my union principles form the basic rules of my life. It is a matter of utmost pride with me to say: "I am a union man!"

Trades unionism is embraced by different individuals for one of two reasons. The first reason is because a union card is expedient at a particular time to secure or retain one's job. This sort of union man is of no value to us. He will not stick.

The other reason for joining is because of an intense knowledge of what we signify. The first union men were originally a group of hungry and ill-treated workmen. There was no protection against the unjust employer. As fast as one workman kicked, he was discharged. This dampened the spirit of others, and they submitted to the inevitable. However, a few of the braver and more intelligent decided that if they kicked as a unit, their combined power might prevail against the power of the boss. This was tried —"unions" were created. The pioneers in this movement suffered bitterly. Some were blacklisted, not only in their home city but in other cities. All sorts of tactics to subdue them were used. In spite of various setbacks the principle lived through until today we are enjoying the benefits gained by blood and ruin to homes and lives in the suffering of our predecessors. Wages were increased, in a measure, and hours were reduced. Wages and hours, to a good many uninformed, are thought to be the only advantages of the unorganized worker.

A good union man is a good citizen. For that reason the trades union movement insists that its members qualify to vote. We do not attempt to say how to vote, but we believe that we have sense enough to vote for our friends. Because we do take part in civic duties we have a great power in passing good laws.

A working man's most valued possession is his family. So it is with the rich, most of them. In poorer families the children were forced by hunger and deprivation to go to work in mills by the side of their parents and work long hours. It has come to pass now that organized labor has so welded itself into an aggressive unit that they have put laws on our statute books. One of the first things we did was to limit the extent to which children could be worked in factories. We have not gone as far as we intend to go in this line yet. The fight is still going on. Were it not for organized labor, the child would still be working in factories at night, 12 to 14 hours a day.

An education for the poor child at one time was absurd to think of. The rich child had its private tutors. The poor child was kept so busy working to get bread that education was not considered. Even if there was time from its daily task, the cost of private tutors prevented the enlightenment of these little bits of Americans. From the hearts and minds of organized labor was created the public school system. What a fight that was! What a howl was raised! Yet now any American child receives at least eight years of public schooling—as good as any child can receive. The nation has benefited by it. Broaden a nation's mind and that nation prospers. Our standards of citizenship have been so elevated by the public school system that if for no other reason, organized labor has justified itself. I can read and write simply because my predecessors fought for that privilege for me.

We have also gained in most states the free textbook system. Education is being made accessible to the lowest in the social scale. We have sponsored laws forcing parents to send their children to school.

In conjunction with child labor laws organized labor has promulgated laws protecting women in the factory, thus allowing mothers to be at home with the child. We prohibit the working of women more than a certain number of hours. We have advanced far enough to have passed certain sanitary and safety laws. Some employers' only thought is for production. If an unprotected saw cut off a finger, or flying chips knocked an eye out, another worker was put in the place, and production went on. We have succeeded in causing safeguards to be put around dangerous machinery.

Manufacturers allow their machinery a certain number of years, and then new machinery is installed. Provision is made in the overhead to care for this. But when a human ended his usefulness by having an accident, he went on the scrap heap. Now, to a large extent, organized labor has fostered compensation laws which force an employer to insure his workmen. These laws are not perfect, but with your help they will be improved.

The old practice of putting convicts to work in large factories, the factories themselves in many instances being furnished by the states, thus allowing a manufacturer to compete with the free worker, has been a gold mine to that greedy and unfair type of employer. In many prisons injustice runs riot. Convicts are whipped like galley slaves. His wages are nothing, his production is beaten out to the last ounce. He is of less value than the machinery. Frequently, in the garment shops, convicts have loathsome diseases. There is no supervision in many cases. Goods are shipped out to the unsuspecting public, at cheap prices, and perhaps you or I or my child contracts some terrible disease. Organized labor has carried on a ceaseless and relentless fight against the convict lease system. We have alleviated these conditions to a great extent. The recently passed Cooper-Hawes bill in congress will widen our scope of activity against this convict system.

The system of collective bargaining is a protection against such unfair employers. It actually protects the fair employer as well as improving the workers' conditions. No matter how fair-minded a manufacturer may be, if his competitor is allowed to work men longer hours at less hour cost, the fair manufacturer must either meet the competition or go out of the business. A standardization of wages and hours can only be performed by the unions.

The old method of choosing political candidates through the convention system enabled political bosses and interests to name whomever they pleased. Labor got busy and finally instituted the primary system, which allows every voter a chance to select his candidates. Even now periodical attempts to destroy the primary are being made.

The Australian or secret ballot resulted from our efforts. Under the old system an employer could herd his employes to the polls, and if they did not vote "right" it was just too bad. Now an American citizen goes to the polls and votes, and no one need know how he voted. We were also in the front of the fight to secure the vote for women.

In our organized capacity we have kept our membership from starving in this depression. The local typographical union alone has expended nearly $4,000 in out-of-work benefits for its members. Judge Fleming only recently issued a statement that in his soup kitchen he noticed an absence therein of union members. He commented in forceful language that any organization so civic-minded as to care for its unfortunates, and in addition contribute to charity funds, is an asset to the community. Most trades unions have some sort of a pension fund for their aged and incapacitated. Most of them have some sort of home or hospital to care for their sick or aged. The Supreme Being is as much in the government of our labor movement as is any church. The Golden Rule is really the basic foundation of its principles.

During the world war organized labor received highest praise from all sources. President Sam Gompers, may his memory be ever with us, promised President Wilson that organized labor was making the winning of the war as its only object. There would be no disputes to tie up industry. And we kept our word. During that time we could have secured anything we wished—even to the extreme. Now, in reversed situation—in a depression—nothing is too despicable for Big Business to take advantage of to drive wages down and destroy conditions we have gained. A hungry man is fair game to have his wages further cut. Compare the war records of organized labor and that of industry, and then feel proud with us!

Some time ago President Hoover called Big Business leaders and labor leaders to Washington. At that meeting, presided over by President Hoover, who thus assumed responsibility for it, labor promised not to ask for increases in wages for one year. The industrial leaders agreed not to cut wages for one year. Less than sixty days later, enormous trusts began to slash wages. Organized labor keeps its promises. Industry keeps its promises only when convenient.

In the welter of stealing and crookedness of our state politics in Nashville, organized labor of Tennessee was the first to draw attention to it and expose it. After the capitol only was left, the conditions that organized labor had denounced two years previously were found to be true.

The labor movement is well personified in the life of Samuel Gompers, who died in 1924. What a superb and unselfish figure in American history! Unselfishness, the prime requisite of real unionism, was his dominant trait. His fearlessness was reflected from our early struggles. Injunctions, that dirty weapon which is used to even prohibit a spoken word, were disregarded by him. He fought for us in the courts and won out. The Clayton anti-trust bill secured in 1914 was by his leadership. This bill declared that a man's labor is NOT a commodity, but a PART of his life; therefore it could not be treated as if it was a chattel.

Organized labor is peaceful and law-abiding. We strive only to build up and not tear down. Wherever we enter conditions are improved, both for employer and employe. The law of the jungle cannot live side by side with a union man. He will instinctively fight it with every resource. Seemingly insurmountable odds mean nothing to a union man if he believes his goal is just. You who are not with us should join us. You are now receiving benefits which we gain for you. When we advance you naturally follow along. Swell out your chest with us in our accomplishments. Help us to guarantee them to your children and our children. The stiffer the opposition the more need for unionism.

Does it not give one a feeling of satisfaction to know that one is paying his way, and not sponging off the efforts of others? Join the union of your craft and in a manly, friendly, brotherly way be all for one and one for all. That which is worth having is worth fighting for. Think these things over.

CHICAGO TYPOS SIGN UP.

A wage agreement has been signed between Typographical Union 16, Chicago, and job printers, ending a strike in forty shops affecting 700 men. An arbitrary order for a 15 per cent pay cut forced the union men out. It is understood they now go back at the old $1.29½ scale, but with some reduction to come.

DIZZINESS

relieved by Black-Draught

"I decided to take Thedford's Black-Draught, as I had been having bilious spells," writes Mr. Charles E. Stevens, of Columbia, Ind. "When I get bilious, I feel sleepy and tired and do not feel like doing my work. It is hard to tell how I feel, but I do not feel good. I get awfully dizzy. I know then that I had better take something. After I found how good Black-Draught is, that is what I have used. I guess it rids me of the bile, for I feel better—don't feel like I am dropping off to sleep every time I sit down. That, to me, is a very bad feeling."

Now you can get Black-Draught in the form of a SYRUP, for Children

Do You Remember going miles to hear an important address in the "good old days"?

Now electricity brings world wide news and entertainment into your home . . . and at low cost

Radio is but one of the many home conveniences made possible by electric service. Now, among other things, electricity cooks, cleans, heats, irons, keeps correct time and runs the refrigerator.

Naturally you use more electricity now than a few years ago. It's economy to do so, for electric service constitutes one of the lowest items in the average family budget.

Today, with living costs still about 40% above pre-war levels*, the average retail price of electricity to the thousands of homes served by The Tennessee Electric Power Company is approximately 40% below pre-war prices.

In other words, if the pre-war (1913) price of household electricity was restored, it would be nearly 66% greater than today's average price.

THERE MUST BE JOBS!

Unemployment has been checked. There are some signs of better times. Not many, but some. That much is to the good.

But employers have not yet come to understand that wages must constitute the only regiments that can crash through the Hindenberg line of this depression.

Employers have not begun to put into practice a policy of higher wages.

By and large, employers are hiring as cheaply as they can.

There will be no place for goods to go unless there are wages.

The American Federation of Labor makes the situation clear.

That unemployment is not growing is magnificent news. But 11,400,000 remain out of work. They cannot go through the winter without work or cash relief. They need work and only when they get work can they go into the market places and put an end to depression.

Meanwhile corporations that can hire workers and pay decent wages are hanging onto their cash. The United States Chamber of Commerce comes out for a 40-hour week, which is as out of date as the dodo. Big business is not shouldering its responsibilities. Big business is sticking to its caves and its ancient ideas. Back of big business are the big bankers, hanging onto their credit.

Most astounding of all, some employers are still cutting wages.

And some are working a 12-hour day and overtime! At the same time, as this week's news discloses, Mississippi river contracts, to beat the 30-hour law, plan to compel men to work 30 hours on one job and then 30 hours more on another job—a minimum of 60 hours per week in ten 10-hour days!

Big business is dodging its responsibilities, hunting the golden eggs, as usual and chanting the old refrain, "Let the devil take the hindmost."

* * *

Labor, as always, takes the lead. Labor points the way. Labor prescribes the remedy and as far as its power will permit, labor will demand that the remedy be applied.

But labor cannot force the whole program through.

It is up to the employers of America to act. It is they who have the jobs and the payrolls. Will they understand? Will they act? Only time can tell, but time may tell other things, as well. There, gentlemen of big business, is the rub!

Increased Purchasing Power Only Road to Business Recovery

Wages Must Be Basis of Recovery, Says American Federation of Labor.

CHEER OVER GAINS IS DIMMED BY LAG OF INDUSTRIAL PAYROLLS

Monthly Survey Hopeful, Citing Many Indications of Improvement, But Wage-Cutter Is Branded as Block in Road to Prosperity—Unemployment Checked and "Confidence Is Spreading."

Washington, Sept. 29.—Building toward a tremendous drive for increased consumer buying, the A. F. of L. Monthly Summary of Business just out crashes down with sledge-hammer force on the wage-cutter and points to him as the block in the path of recovery, using charts, facts and figures to force home the lesson. The survey is hopeful—it is almost tinted with optimism, but it sees the hard and ponderous facts in the center of the situation—buying must begin and it cannot begin except as wages are paid to furnish the money.

The federation lists gains and they make a fairly imposing showing:

1—Unemployment rise was checked in August.
2—Coal mines are more active.
3—Increased car loadings show goods beginning to move to market.
4—Prices of goods are beginning to rise.

Then the fly that still walks sticky-footed across the ointment: Banks not yet supplying credit, retail sales still lagging.

"Confidence Is Spreading."

The federation then presents its diagnosis, briefly:

"The gains taken together are too modest to rouse enthusiasm, but they do hint that since the end of financial panic we may have entered a period of convalescence to develop into cure until consumer buying picks up."

What loss of wages has meant is pointed out in relation to the increase in automobile production, discontinuance of telephones, doubling up of families in rented homes and fall in purchase of such consumer commodities as textiles, clothing, furnishings and the things that go into the current of retail business. The federation survey says workers operate more than half the passenger automobiles and it agrees with Business Week that workers with incomes under $5,000 a year buy 83 per cent of the goods and services consumed each year.

The effect of wages on retail business is presented by the survey in graphic form. It is shown that by July this year wage-earners' incomes, in terms of goods they will buy, had fallen 50 per cent below the 1929 level and retail trade had followed along, to within 1 per cent. Retail trade in July was 51 per cent of the 1929 level, which is proof to business that business interests lie with labor and not with Wall Street.

Wages Basis of Prosperity.

The survey points out that, with prices rising consuming power must fall, unless wages also rise, so that the only route back to general prosperity is through rising wage levels.

That many companies could pay wage increases is declared and the survey finds proof of the assertion in the fact that, "even now at the bottom of depression" many are paying increased dividends. It is pointed out that in the last eight months 190 corporations have paid extra dividends and 27 have increased their regular dividends.

"The time has come to reverse this trend," the federation asserts. Our object from now on should be to raise wages, not reduce them. Only thus can we build up buying power and keep business rising. The wage deflation theory arose in a scarcity economy where production could not supply enough for all. But times have changed; we are suffering from problems of oversupply and under-consumption; mass production industries cannot grow unless mass buying increases.

Hours Must Be Shortened.

The federation goes on to point out:

"Hours must be shortened as well, but if shortened hours mean just another income cut, this move will not be fully constructive. Every effort should be made to give workers an hourly wage increase to compensate at least in part for their income loss."

The survey points to clear evidences of growing resentment at unemployment and deflation. While the tremendous loss in purchasing power by labor is cited, the loss of 50 per cent by the farmers is cited, in connection with the farmers' strikes of the middle west. "The last month's slight improvement in business cannot adjust their fundamental problems," the survey says. "As winter approaches we may expect uprisings to increase."

So, the federation regards the outlook with appreciation of the improvement thus far shown, but questions whether improvement will come fast enough to ward off the possible shock of serious consequences this winter.

The executive board was also charged with the duty of working out a proposal to institute a five-day week in city and county.

Local 226 Names Weidner Secretary

C. F. Weidner was named financial secretary by Local 226, Painters, Thursday night, succeeding Joe Farmer, who resigned to go to New York City to make his home with a sister.

Mr. Weidner will not need to be "broken in," having occupied that post in the local for eight consecutive years. He has already assumed the duties of the office.

Arturo Elias, half-brother of President Calles of Mexico, has been appointed governor of the upper half of Lower California. Elias, former Mexican consul-general in New York, is at present postmaster-general of Mexico.

Printers Vote to Establish 5-Day Week Jan. 1, '33

Unions Must Ratify Proposal by Referendum on Howard's Suggestion—Chicago Gets Next Convention.

Long Beach, Cal., Sept. 28.—By a vote of 76 to 74 the International Typographical union has voted to establish the five-day week. By a vote of 111 to 39 the convention voted that the local unions must ratify or reject the project, this latter motion coming after President Charles P. Howard strongly suggested that course.

If ratified the plan is to become effective Jan. 1. It will affect 22,000 printers on newspapers. Unions were instructed also to make the five-day week operative in job shops wherever possible through negitiation and contract.

Under the five-day plan as adopted by the convention printers would not be allowed to work more than five-day shifts in six and seven-day plants.

President Howard was sustained in his fight against curtailment of the powers of the president and the executive council in acting on appeals from local unions.

Chicago was selected as the next convention city.

Express Sympathy For a Brother

Sympathy for the family of Mrs. Mary E. Smith, mother of John J. Smith, well-known member of Local 226, Painters, is expressed in resolutions adopted by the members of that organization Thursday night. Mrs. Smith, who was 66 years old, died at her residence, 2508 Wheeler avenue, Wednesday, Sept. 21. The resolution, signed by C. F. Weidner, J. G. Burkes and W. D. Canada, follows:

Whereas, an all-wise Providence has seen fit to remove from this life Mrs. Mary E. Smith, beloved mother of our fraternal brother, John J. Smith; therefore, be it

Resolved, That we bow our heads in sorrow with Brother Smith and his family in their great bereavement; be it further

Resolved, That copies of this resolution be spread upon our minutes, one sent to the family of Brother Smith, and one to The Labor World for publication.

The Labor World joins with the Painters in extending to Brother Smith and other surviving relatives sincerest condolences.

JOHN BRADLEY KILLED.

Elizabeth, N. J.—John Bradley, president of local 245, Journeyman Plumbers, Gas Fitters and Steamfitters, died in Elizabeth General hospital after having been injured fatally by an automobile while crossing a state highway. Bradley's identity did not become known until the day after the accident. He had been in charge of plumbing in the public school system here. He had been president of his union ten years.

"BUSINESS WEEK" PREDICTS NEW HIGH WAGE LEVELS TO RESTORE PROSPERITY

Sees Post-Depression Climb and Holds That Speed of Recovery Depends Upon Speed With Which Pay Can Be Restored to 1929 Levels and Raised Thereafter.

New York City, Sept. 28.—Here is a blow for high wages, right out of the house of business itself.

Rating the question of wages as the most important in the category of questions about recovery, Business Week, McGraw-Hill business magazine, says, pointblank:

"The extent and speed of recovery from this depression will be determined mainly by the promptness with which wages can be restored to the pre-depression level and the degree to which they can be raised above it thereafter."

The magazine, in its striking editorial, is "quite sure" that money wages will in a few years be higher than in 1929, "even though commodity prices do not quite return to that level."

In the same editorial the magazine ridicules "the old Punch and Judy show of the Cost of Living vs. Wages, which used to amuse the older generations so much."

$3.96 a Week Is Paid Workers on Army Uniforms

War Department Declares "Nothing Can Be Done About It," When Informed of Wages Paid by Wealthy Contractor.

Washington, Sept. 15.—While the emergency relief act specifies the 30-hour week and road work must be paid for at not less than 30 cents an hour, army uniforms and pajamas for hospitalized soldiers are being made at wages that run as low as $3.96 a week and range on up to $13, according to pay slips submitted to the war department here.

The Sigmund Eisner plant at Red Bank, N. J., has the contract under which these wages are paid. Active management of the plant is said to be in the hands of a son, Benjamin Eisner.

The Eisner plant is one of the largest uniform factories in the country. Most of the war uniforms were made by Eisner and contracts have been going to Eisner ever since. Assistant Secretary of War Payne says the war department frowns upon sweatshop conditions and low wages, but under the law can do nothing about the situation.

At this time the Eisner plant has a $34,000 veterans' administration contract to supply some sixty-five hospitals and soldiers' homes. It has a contract to make 12,000 army breeches at 66 cents a pair and 12,000 coats at $1.63 each, the total for the contract being $24,732.

A campaign is being waged to compel the government to cease doing any of its own work, which would throw all army clothing contracts into the market subject to such conditions as those existing in the Eisner plant. Sigmund Eisner is reputed to have become extremely wealthy as the result of repeated contracts for army uniforms and other clothing supplies.

There is a possibility that efforts stipulating conditions that may be included in contracts in order to force the payment of better wages. Unionization cannot be compelled by law and contracts must be let to the lowest bidder, but conditions can be stipulated that will prevent sweatshop wages, as has been done in the emergency relief act, labor representatives point out.

Jobs Main Issue, Utah Labor Session Is Told

Harry W. Fox, Addressing Salt Lake City Convention, Declares Penalty of Failure Will Be Outbreaks for Bread.

Salt Lake City, Sept. 28.—Finding jobs is the main issue before the country today, declared Harry W. Fox, president of the Wyoming State Federation of Labor, guest speaker addressing the Utah State Federation in convention here. Mr. Fox has just returned from an extensive trip throughout the country. Failing in the task of finding jobs, the nation may face most serious outbreaks, Mr. Fox said.

The best remedy is the shorter work-day, Mr. Fox said. He urged labor to co-operate with other groups, including war veterans, and to study the problems of such groups. He urged establishment of a national economic council, also.

Elimination of "undesirables" from labor's ranks is demanded in one of the important convention resolutions. Support of candidates favorable to labor also is urged. The convention has before it also a resolution calling for formation of a state teachers' organization, in affiliation with the A. F. of L. The convention denounced "muzzling" of federal employes. Resolutions also called for investigation of labor conditions at Hoover dam and called for federal appropriations for unemployed in proportion to appropriations for armament.

ON THEIR WAY BACK.

Men have begun to go back to work at the Coleman furniture plant, Pulaski, Va., following an agreement brought about by a citizens' committee, but the wage cut demanded by the plant stands.

WILLIAM KEHOE DIES.

William Kehoe, San Francisco lawyer, former member of the state legislature, is dead. He was author of the workmen's compensation law and also fathered the criminal syndicalism law.

FAILURES LESS NUMEROUS.

Commercial failures are becoming less numerous as business sentiment improves throughout the United States. R. G. Dun & Co. reported that 2,596 manufacturing and trading companies were reported insolvent in July. This is the lowest total for any month since November, 1931. By months, the comparison is as follows: November, 2,195 insolvencies; December, 2,758; January, 3,458; February, 2,732; March, 2,951; April, 2,816; May, 2,788; June, 2,688, and July, 2,596.

Trenton Labor Wins Freedom to Picket

Defeats Effort to Stop Motion Picture Operators Through Use of So-Called Sandwich Ordinance.

Trenton, N. J., Sept. 28.—Organized labor has won a signal victory on appeal from police court convictions against seven members of the Motion Picture Operators' union, charged with violating the [illegible] so-called sandwich ordinance.

In Mercer county [illegible] reversed the police court convictions and set aside the fines. The judge held that [illegible] ordinance specified certain things as unlawful, it did not follow that [illegible] other things not contained in the ordinance were unlawful.

The men were convicted in police court for wearing union buttons while picketing. The picture now is that the union is lawful, though the court warned that picketing must not result in destroying public peace.

The union contention is upheld by the decision and an effort to prevent picketing through use of an ordinance clearly intended for other purposes and never intended to restrict picketing has failed. The Norris-LaGuardia anti-injunction law did not figure in the case, since it was not a federal court case.

Wages and Business Recovery

Officials of most of our corporations and other large employers continue to harp on the alleged necessity of low wages to promote prosperity.

It is inspiring to note the different attitude taken by "Business Week," one of the outstanding journals of business news and interpretation.

"Business Week" holds that higher and higher wages are not only the key to rapid business recovery, but also the foundation on which permanent prosperity must rest. On this point it says:

> "The extent and speed of the recovery from this depression will be determined mainly by the promptness with which wages can be restored to the pre-depression level and the degree to which they can be raised above it thereafter. * * * The new industries we are dreaming of will turn out to be bad dreams, many of our old ones will rust away in idleness, while most of our jobless will be permanently unemployed unless wages are speedily restored and raised as recovery proceeds."

"Business Week" admits that most business men are skeptical about business prosperity being linked to increased wages, but gathers a gleam of hope from the occasional announcement that an employer, as business picks up, has raised wages above the sheer subsistence level to which they had been reduced.

This occasional employer, however, does not dominate the situation. The low-wage employer, worshiping at the shrine of subsistence pay for the workers, still rides in the driver's seat. Here is what "Business Week" thinks of him:

> "On the other side it is disconcerting at this stage to see wage negotiations still dragging out the old Punch and Judy show of Cost of Living vs. Wages, which used to amuse the older generations so much.
> "Inspiring as it may be at the moment to see 'capital' and 'labor' sitting in comparatively peaceful conference over these questions, and however justifiable or necessary the readjustments at issue may be, we cannot help feeling what a tragedy it all is, this business of turning back the hands of the clock, and doing with infinite difficulty and futility what events will inevitably undo later."

It is interesting in this connection to note that the committee of railroad executives who are undertaking to impose lower wages on over one million workers has published statements justifying the proposed cut on the ground that the railroad workers can buy their living now for less than it cost them three years ago.

A worker's wages is the price which an employer pays him for the use of his labor power in the production of commodities and the performance of services for the profit of the employer. It has no logical relation to the price which the worker pays for his living.

The cost-of-living wages theory embodies the principle that a [illegible] living is all the workers should have from the abundance of wealth which they are capable of producing under machine production. It regards the workers as entitled to no more pay than the slave owner accorded his slaves. Employers who advocate it are doing more to stimulate the growth of communism than all the communist ballyhooers from the Atlantic to the Pacific.

"Business Week" is right. Employers should drop the curtain on their Punch and Judy cost-of-living wages show.

A New Picture in the East

Reports have it that Japan is going to quit buying oil for her navy in the United States—will buy it from the soviets instead. At the same time the soviets agree to send a million dollars' worth of oil to Canada, where Andrew Mellon's Aluminum company will sell it in competition with American oil.

American oil has had hard going for some time. These things will make it harder. Meanwhile both Russia and Japan are seeking to strengthen their international position by the use of oil. The whole course of empire may be changed by these deals.

And what will the American farmer say when the soviets begin to pour out a stream of wheat comparable to the stream of oil? Both wheat and oil have begun to flow—just begun.

These things touch the lives and futures of all men. They need to be watched—and perhaps guarded against.

Where Shall These Men Go?

Technological unemployment, that cold and unfeeling term used to designate the displacement of men by automatic machinery, marches along, juggernaut fashion, even in these depression times.

Now comes figures on what has happened to railroad workers, as the roads go through the motions of starting a new wage-cut movement.

And here again the unions build a six-hour day case that cannot be refuted. All over the land men turn toward the shorter day and week as the way out—that and the higher wage.

Why do employers stand against the logic of the situation? Are they determined to remain blind?

"Old Sore-Toed Lew"

By W. W. O'Guin

This dreary old world is full of crooks
And none of them will ever do.
There's but one man that we can trust,
He's poor old sore-toed Lew.

Party leaders have all turned liars,
And committee members, too,
Everybody's liars, and also thieves,
Except old sore-toed Lew.

At Negro votes he turns his back,
His face, it turns right blue;
Only white votes would Lewis count—
Our poor old sore-toed Lew.

Of democrats only he is "straight,"
And pure and righteous, too;
For the Big Chief's job he cannot wait,—
Our holy, sore-toed Lew.

The vile machines may plague the state,
And damn the party through;
But only two has Lewis named,
Our dear old sore-toed Lew.

That octopus whose head is Luke
That makes Marse Henry do,
Pope has not discovered yet—
Pure old sore-toed Lew.

It wrecked the state of Tennessee,
And closed the banks up, too;
"But I don't know if it favors me,"
Shrieks saintly, sore-toed Lew.

"But down with Memphis and E. H. Crump,
And Howse of Nashville, too;
I cannot bear that dirty pair,"
Shouts vicious sore-toed Lew.

"But ah!" cries Pope, with gleaming hope,
"I know now what I'll do;
The party's vote I'll freely bolt,"
Says "straight" old sore-toed Lew.

So forth he drew his sword untrue,
And stained with bloody hue.
"I'll slay the man in my way that stands,"
Screams heroic sore-toed Lew.

"It's right for me, as I can see
To count one vote as two;
And damn the man that balks my plan,"
Shouts mighty, sore-toed Lew.

"O Tennessee, don't I love thee?
As no one else can do.
This race I make, it's for your sake,"
Patriotic sore-toed Lew.

"My way is plain—if party's slain,
There's nothing else to do;
They made me sore on August 4,"
Groans poor old sore-toed Lew.

"To win the place sought in this race
I know I can never do.
I'll run this fall, to aid McCall,"
Pleads poor old sore-toed Lew.

N. Y. PUBLISHERS ACCEPT ARBITRATION IN PAY FIGHT

New York.—The Publishers Association of New York agreed to arbitrate the question of hours and wages with Typographical Union No. 6.

The newspaper publishers asked the printers to take a 20 per cent cut, while Typographical Union No. 6 asked for a 9 per cent wage increase and a six-hour, five-day week. The proposal to arbitrate the controversy was made by the union on Aug. 25.

119 FATAL INJURIES.

Injuries inflicted by industrial accidents took the lives of 119 workers, according to reports received in August by the department of labor, said Industrial Commissioner Frances Perkins in a statement recently. The single district reporting a larger number of fatalities than in July was New York City, which rose from a very low 65 to 82. Albany and Rochester had the same totals as in July, 17 and 9, respectively. Buffalo reported 8 and Syracuse 3.

The Passing Show

Note and Comment on Things Doing in the March of Events

An encouraging sign in the midst of things is that building operations for the country showed a gain in August over July—not a great gain, but a gain, the rise having been 4.5 per cent in point of cost.

There was an 18.7 per cent rise in the number of operations, the reason obviously being the increase in home construction.

Every proper means should be taken to encourage home construction, but not to the point of leading families over their heads, as has been done in the past.

A striking fact in the building situation is that to a large extent new construction has to compete with construction that has gone on the auction block.

New homes have to compete with homes lost through inability to pay and the flood of homes going back to mortgage holders is a major issue in itself. Foreclosures run to seventy-five a week in one medium-sized city.

Families have bought homes, depending upon future income. Loss of jobs has stopped income. Homes go and tragedy is intensified.

Home building and home owning is the visible sign of a nation's hope and faith. It ought not be destroyed or even shaken. The new home loan banks have plenty to do and it is to be hoped they do it.

* * *

The other day the first world series fan took his seat at the head of the line, waiting to be first to enter the grounds.

There are always firsts in every line, in foolishness as well as in serious pursuits.

The man these days who sets a record to be aimed at is the man to get the first chance to go back to work.

The man who can be first to the grocery store with newly earned cash is a man to be envied—and congratulated.

But the first is not enough. What the nation needs is a floodtide running toward factory gates, earning money to buy factory products and farm crops. Ah, that will be something to radio the world about!

More Than Half Work Part Time, Survey Reveals

Report on 6,551 Companies and 3,475,870 Workers Shows How Labor Has Been Hit, in Addition to Total Idleness.

Washington, D. C., Sept. 22.—The enormous extent of part-time work is revealed in the results of a survey just made public, showing that of 3,475,870 employes of 6,551 companies, 56 per cent are on part time and that 58 per cent of the companies are spreading work by reducing the number of days of work per week.

The results were announced in an article by William J. Barrett, of the president's organization on unemployment relief, just issued through the U. S. department of labor.

The companies involved in this survey have a rated capital of $100,000 or more, as a consequence of which the figures reveal the situation among the larger employers of the country.

84.9 Per Cent Part Time.

Examination of the returns by industries reveals that some groups, although severely affected by the drop in operations, have endeavored to spread available work over relatively large numbers of their employes. In the machinery group the decrease in employment has been 36.2 per cent, but the companies reporting have spread work so that 48.9 per cent of present employes are given part-time employment. In the case of some of the other groups there are apparent possibilities for further spreading of employment.

The methods of spreading or increasing employment used by the 4,926 companies reporting their method were distributed over 10 major groupings. The statement below shows the number of companies reporting the use of each method:

Method of spreading work:
Reduced days per week	3,857
Reduced hours per day	2,336
Shorter shifts in continuous operation	380
Alternating shifts or individuals	1,338
